There are numerous other rules, but I do not think I need detain the Council by drawing attention to them if I make the essential point clear, namely, that all these rules are made in exercise of the statutory authority vested in the Courts either by Act of Parliament or by the Letters Patent, or by specific enactments of the Government of India. Now, in such circumstances, I suggest that the High Courts might well resent the interference with the prerogative that is vested in them by law, by a committee appointed by the executive. The Council must remember that a committee, such as the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha suggests, would not be appointed by this Council in a legislative capacity, but would be appointed by the Government as an executive Government acting on the advice of the members. If there is one principle to which I should have thought Hon'ble Members in this country would always adhere, it is that of avoiding any possible interference with judicial discretion by executive authority.

"Further, I do not think that the Hon'ble Member has fully realised what the attitude of the Courts might be in this matter, how jealous, how rightly jealous, they are of their dignity and independence. I myself have some knowledge of this matter. I have the greatest respect for the prestige of the Court, and I should be very unwilling to enter upon a course for which there is no legal sanction, or to create any impression that the Government sought in some way, to restrict the authority which has been vested in the High Courts by Statute. I apprehend myself that the Government of India by entering upon an undertaking of this kind might invite a biting rebuff from the various High Courts. I have some experience of Registrars, at least of the Calcutta High Court; I know that their pens on occasions can be dipped in gall, and this is one of the occasions on which, I think, they might justifiably be so dipped. Nor are the Hon'ble Judges of any Court, I think, so ready to admit that the procedure of other Courts is better than theirs. On such a point again they are, if I may say so, rightly sensitive and unwilling to accept suggestions from outside the Court. It may be said of course, such great minds are above all petty feeling of this kind, but the real fact is, when you get below the surface, there is a great deal of human nature in Judges, and I should like to remind the Council of well-known historical facts in this connection and they will realize the danger of agitating any controversial questions between the High Courts and the executive Government. I need only refer to the old feud between the Supreme Court of Calcutta and the executive Government there.

"I put it to the Council also that what the Hon'ble Member really proposes would be an unmerited slur on the Courts, a suggestion that they do not exercise their powers properly. It would also be interpreted, if I may put it so, as an act of grave discourtesy. We have not even consulted the Courts in this matter, nor has there been any suggestion of that kind. I can imagine a Committee of this Council or a committee composed of officials and non-officials appointed by this Council being received by the Calcutta High Court very coldly, and their Lordships might well say: 'Surely you might leave us to manage our own business. What authority have you to come down here to investigate the exercise of powers which are vested in us by the law, by Statute, by the Letters Patent of His Majesty? If the Council thinks that we are misusing those powers, then, so far as may lie within their competence, let them alter the law, but do not let them appoint executive committees to interfere with the exercise of our judicial authority.'

"That is a line, I think, the Courts might very reasonably take, for I cannot believe that a committee of this kind would be approved either by the High Courts themselves or by the members of the bar. Many of the rules of the High Courts deal again with very technical matters and in each Court they are adapted to suit local conditions. They are the result of many years' work and experience, and I suggest to the Council that the authorities best able to deal with such matters are the judges themselves. The Hon'ble Member has criticised the procedure in several High Courts, in Bombay, Madras, Allahabad and Patna. Sir, I should be very unwilling indeed to be drawn into any discussion of the exercise of judicial authority in this Council, and I hope that Members of Council will support me in this line. The Hon'ble Member adverted in particular to the question of Judges sitting singly. He said, if I understood him correctly, that in the Courts, one judge sits in revision in all cases in which the sentence does not exceed one of six months' imprisonment and that they also sit alone for the admission of appeals and applications for revision in other cases. Well I myself can see very good reasons for this practice, and it is probably done, I should imagine, to save the time of the Court, and to save public money. But I do not want to enter into the merits of the procedure in any High Court, as in my judgment criticism of judicial action should be avoided in this Council.

"The Hon'ble Member then passed on to this right of audience and his complaint was of the practice of the Calcutta High Court in that some prominent member of the Patna Bar was not allowed the right of audience there. Surely that is a matter which the High Courts must have power to decide for themselves. It is an authority that is vested in them under the Letters Patent of His Majesty.

[Sir William Vincent; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; the Vice-President.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

"Finally, he raised the question of the right of Vakils to practise on the original side of the Court. Well, Sir, I know of no more vexed question than that in Calcutta, and I daresay also in Bombay? Do the Members of this Council sitting here wish to interfere in a difficult and technical matter of this kind upon which professional opinion is very largely divided? I suggest that the action which the Hon'ble Member proposes would place the Government of India really in an impossible position vis-a-vis the Hon'ble Judges. I am however prepared to draw the attention of the Courts to this debate with special reference to the points raised for such action (if any) as they may think fit, but I hope that the members of this Council will not ask the Government of India to place themselves in the position which the Hon'ble Member invites them to take up. I have seen various hornets' nests stirred in this Council before now. I see in the list of business notice of at least one or two resolutions which may stir up fresh ones, but I, for my part, am very unwilling to stir up six such powerful hornets' nests as six High Courts by the appointment of such a committee as the Hon'ble Member proposes."

11-39 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, if I had known at the time when I sent in my resolution that all these untoward results which the Hon'ble the Home Member apprehends from its acceptance, were likely to come about, I should certainly have refrained from sending in my motion; but I must state that after having heard the Hon'ble the Home Member carefully, I am not at all satisfied that they are likely to ensue. Sir William Vincent has, if I may say so, been very adroitly skating on thin ice in reply to my submissions to the Council. He has not had one word to say on the merits of my proposal, but he has drawn a most lurid picture of what will happen if a Committee were to be appointed to investigate these matters. Now I want to clear the ground by saying that I do not yield even to the Home Member in his desire for judicial prestige and independence; and it has been with us for years a standing complaint that our Courts are sometimes not given that amount of independence that they should have in certain matters. But my submission is that by appointing a committee of the kind which I advocate, you will not at all be affecting the question of judicial independence or prestige. I know that the High Court Judges are, as the Hon'ble the Home Member says, sometimes sensitive, sometimes too sensitive, but surely because they are so . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to explain, Sir? I did not say too sensitive, I said reasonably sensitive."

The Vice-President:—"I think 'too sensitive,' is the Hon'ble Member's own addition."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"I say, assuming they are even too sensitive—which I believe they are not—assuming for the sake of argument that they are too sensitive—that is absolutely no reason why this Council should not do what it thinks to be right and proper in public interests. The suggestion is not that this Council or the Executive Government should at all interfere in any matter of judicial independence or judicial prestige. My resolution simply asks for a Committee to compare these rules, to consult the Judges, if necessary—and I do not think the Judges will resent such consultation—and then to submit a report to the Governor General in Council as to how far it was expedient or feasible to assimilate these rules on certain well-understood principles. I do not think it will be at all affecting either judicial independence or judicial prestige. But, if the Hon'ble the Home Member thinks that it will amount to that, and that it will bring about a hornets' nest of the judges of six High Courts about his ears from different parts of the country, I should be the last person to put him in that unhappy position. In the circumstances, I will be quite content if he will kindly communicate with the High Courts, as I understand he has promised to do, the specific points raised in this debate. In that view I shall ask your leave, Sir, to withdraw this Resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I explain, Sir, that what I intend to do is to have the papers connected with this debate sent to the Hon'ble Judges for such action (if any) as they may think fit." 11-43 A.M.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

POINT OF ORDER.

On the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes rising to move his Resolution, the Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel said:

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May I rise to a point of order, Sir? I had given notice of my Resolution* No. 7, regarding fiscal autonomy earlier than my friend the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes did of this Resolution, and it ought to be given precedence ordinarily, unless you regard that Resolution† No. 3 is of such public urgent importance that it should have precedence." 11-44 A.M.

The Vice-President:—"The practice of the Council has been invariably to take Resolutions in the order in which they are set down on the paper. I am sure that no prejudice will accrue to the Hon'ble Mr. Patel by following this course. We are going to consider Resolutions both to-day and to-morrow."

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE TRADE STATISTICS.

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"Sir, I beg to move the Resolution which stands in my name, namely:— 11-45 A.M.

'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he appoint a Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill, the Hon'ble Mr. Mant, the Hon'ble Mr. Ley, the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha, the Hon'ble Mr. Crum, the Hon'ble Mr. Paton, the Hon'ble Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan, the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy, the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, the Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis and myself to examine the trade statistics and to consider and report to the Governor General in Council whether or not it is advisable to apply to the Indian Customs Tariff a system of preference in favour of goods of Empire origin'.

"This may seem, and indeed is, a very large question for a Committee of this Council to approach, and I want to explain why I suggest that it should be approached in this way. His Excellency the Viceroy, when he addressed

"This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to appoint a Committee, consisting of an equal number of official and non-official members of this Council to investigate the question of fiscal policy to be adopted hereafter by the Government of India as a result of the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee and devise and suggest such tariff arrangements as seem to it best fitted to the needs of India as an integral part of the British Empire."

† 3. By the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—

"This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he appoint a Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill, the Hon'ble Mr. Mant, the Hon'ble Mr. Ley, the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha, the Hon'ble Mr. Crum, the Hon'ble Mr. Paton, the Hon'ble Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan, the Hon'ble Sir Fazalbhoy Currimbhoy, the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, the Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis and the mover, to examine the Trade Statistics and to consider and report to the Governor General in Council whether or not it is advisable to apply to the Indian Customs Tariff a system of preference in favour of goods of Empire origin."

[Sir George Barnes.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

the Association of Chambers of Commerce in Calcutta last month made it quite clear, as perhaps you will remember, that the Government of India do not wish to make any general change in the traditional policy of Government in tariff matters without the support of public opinion. It may be said that it is impossible for a Committee of this Council, in the time at their disposal during this Session, to go into the question as deeply as may be desired, and I quite realise the validity of this criticism. But it does seem to me that they can at any rate examine the statistical position, and without going into any very elaborate detail give their opinion on the question whether the admission of preference as a general policy into our Customs tariff would or would not be to the benefit of India. I feel sure that the publication of their opinion, and of such papers on the subject as they think fit to publish, will be a valuable guide to the formation of sound opinion by others outside the Council Chamber who are interested in the subject.

"I may be asked what is the object of the Government in raising this very difficult and thorny question at the present moment? The reason is that the principle of Imperial preference has been recently adopted in the tariff of the United Kingdom and in the tariffs of several of the Dominions. The question has consequently become one of practical politics for India, and it seems to the Government that the time has come for examining the question afresh. As, Sir, you are aware, the question was carefully examined during Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty, and the results of that examination are contained in an exhaustive Minute by Sir Edward Law. In the despatch which covered the Minute and which has been published, Lord Curzon's Government came to a conclusion against adopting a scheme of Imperial preference, and this Despatch and Minute must form the starting point for any new inquiry. My Department, I need hardly say, has made an examination of the statistical position as it exists at present in comparison with that which obtained when Sir Edward Law's Minute was written; but we believe that the practical knowledge which the gentlemen whose names have been suggested as Members of the Committee can bring to bear on the subject will be most helpful, and will do much to secure a true view of the effect of preferential duties on the trades in which British India is interested.

"If this Council, then, accepts the Resolution which I put forward, the first papers which will need their careful consideration are the Minute and Despatch of 1903. I do not propose at the present moment to weary the Council with a mass of figures. but, I think, they may be interested to know how the statistical position in 1903 compares with the statistical position for the year before the war which is the latest year which is really worth considering. In 1903, the United Kingdom's share of our import trade was 66·5 per cent., the share of other parts of the Empire was 9·5 per cent., and the share of foreign countries was 24 per cent. In the year before the war, the United Kingdom's share had fallen to 64 per cent., the share of other parts of the Empire to 5 per cent., and the share of foreign countries had risen to 31 per cent. As regards the export trade, the United Kingdom's share had fallen from 25 to 2 ·5 per cent., the share of other parts of the Empire had risen from 13 to 14 per cent., and the share of foreign countries had risen from 62·5 to 65·5 per cent. As far as statistics of imports and exports go, the two positions in 1903 and 1914 are therefore similar to an extraordinary degree when we take into account the great changes which the world has undergone during the past five years. Indeed, the variations are so slight that they would not seem prima facie to vitiate the general conclusion reached in 1903 that India can have little to gain from a scheme of Imperial preference. There are, however, other sides of the question which will deserve the attention of the Committee if it is eventually appointed. In the first place, I would observe that the adverse decision of Lord Curzon's Government was based in some measure on the danger of reprisals by foreign nations. We should like to have the opinion of the Members of the Committee, who have many of them got special means of forming an estimate on this point whether that danger is to-day a real one, or as serious as it seemed to Lord Curzon's Government. The position is further changed, in the second place, by the adoption of a policy of preference in other parts of the Empire, including the United Kingdom. The Government desire that the question should be looked at quite dispassionately, and in the first instance from a purely interested point of view. What has India prospectively to gain or to lose? Supposing a scheme of preference to goods of Empire origin is generally adopted, as in fact in actual practice it already has been in portions of the Empire, will it be a wise policy in our own interests to abstain, or will it be wiser for India to join any such scheme? We must remember, I think, that we hope in the future to be something more than a source of supply of raw materials for other people's industries to work up. We look forward to the development of our own industries I think we are even justified in looking forward to the possibility of finding export markets for our manufactured products either within the Empire or without. I think I might reasonably say that there are some portions of the Empire, not far from our own shores, which we might justly look upon as a natural outlet for our goods. If we are to compete on unfavourable terms in those markets with other portions of the Empire which are admitted to preferential duties, it would seem primâ facie that we should be placing ourselves at the outset at a disadvantage.

"This, of course, is only one aspect of the case, which has many sides to it, and I do not wish to be thought in any way as suggesting a decision in favour of one side or the other. Nor again do I wish to be interpreted as suggesting that the matter should be looked at absolutely from a selfish point of view. As His Excellency the Viceroy remarked to the Association of Chambers of Commerce. while it is the interests of India to which we have first to look, it will be unwise to take a wholly parochial view, and in developing the tariff policy of the future, we ought to be able to evolve some system which will be to the advantage not of ourselves alone, but also of the Empire of which we are a part. And here, I may remind the Council that this is not the first occasion on which the question has been discussed in this Council Seven years ago, on 17th March, 1913, the Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis (who I am glad to say is still a Member of this Council) moved a Resolution in the following terms:—

'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council the desirability, in view of the loss of opium revenue, of considering financial measures for strengthening the resources of Government, with special reference to the possibility of increasing the revenue under a system of preferential tariffs with the United Kingdom and the Colonies.'

"In a carefully reasoned speech, he quoted the trade figures which were then applicable, and urged that India had nothing to fear from retaliation in the event of her increasing her import duties with the object of giving preference to other parts of the Empire. The figures on which the proposed Committee must work are of course the most recent figures. But there are parts of Sir Gangadhar's speech which apply to present conditions as much as they did when his speech was delivered, and I should like to make my apologies to him for quoting a few sentences from what he said. He asked:—

'What has India to gain by a scheme of Imperial preference? Her exports to the United Kingdom, for instance, are much smaller than her imports thence. She will have to give preference in a great many things and will receive a preference in a very few. Sir, I admit the premises, but I deny the conclusion. It is true that we ask for very little—favourable terms for our cotton goods, our sugar, our tea, tobacco and coffee, and it is true that we can give a great deal. But I maintain that this is not a question to be treated in the spirit of a petty huckster lamenting over a one-sided bargain. There are likewise other advantages to be reaped from Imperial preference, of which I need but mention one as an instance, the solidarity of the Empire.'

Those were Sir Gangadhar's words. Since then, the position has been somewhat changed by the adoption of the principle of preference in the United Kingdom Budget. Our tea, tobacco and coffee are all given a preference on entry into the United Kingdom. Our sugar would be entitled to a preference if we had any to export, but, unfortunately, India is an importer of sugar and not an exporter. With regard to cotton goods, the position is somewhat changed since the date when Sir Gangadhar made his speech. There was then an import duty of 3½ per cent on cotton piece-goods and a corresponding excise duty of 3½ per cent. The import duty has, as you all know, been raised since then to 7½ per cent., while the excise duty remains at its old figure of 3½ per cent. Thus, the excise duty at present forms a much smaller proportion of the import duty than it did in 1903 or in 1913. I only refer to this matter here because I wish to add that, in the view of the Government of India, it must be a condition of the acceptance of the principle of Imperial preference by India that the excise duty on cotton piece-goods should be totally abolished.

"Now, Sir, I want again to make it quite clear that this is not a Resolution in favour of Imperial preference. We only want the position to be examined. It is a Resolution for the appointment of a Committee whose duty it will be to give their opinion on the question of policy; that is to say, whether, viewed in the cold light of statistics, it will be consistent with the interests of India to apply to the Indian Customs tariff a system of preference in favour of goods of Empire origin."

12 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis:—"Sir, when I moved that Resolution about Imperial Preference in 1913 the issue was not one of practical and immediate importance to India, except in so far as it helped Government to make up partially the huge loss in opium revenue. British public opinion then favoured Free Trade, notwithstanding the activities of the party formed by the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. I could not have expected, however much I may have wished, that any practical results would soon follow the adoption of the Resolution. The difficulties in the way were enormous. There was a certain amount of feeling, one might say prejudice, in India against the Colonies. The motives of the United Kingdom were also suspected by the people in consequence of the history of our import duties upon Lancashire goods and the countervailing excise duty. There was no disposition in any quarter in this country to establish cordial relations with His Majesty's Dominions by initiating a system of preferential tariffs. The strength of our economic position in regard to certain raw materials certainly did not incline us to look ahead, and to prefer Imperial interests to our immediate gains. The situation was further complicated by the fact that the whole subject of Imperial Preference had been carefully examined by this Government in 1903, as has just been said by Sir George Barnes, and in their Despatch to the Secretary of State for India of 22nd October 1903 they had recorded their considered opinion, based upon a scrutiny of the trade statistics, that a scheme of Preferential Tariffs would not be advantageous to India. The reply of the Hon'ble Sir Guy Fleetwood Wilson clearly showed that Lord Hardinge's Government were not prepared to take a different view, although even according to the Finance Minister £28 million pounds sterling worth of Indian produce would be benefited under British Preferential Tariffs. I was not unconscious of the attitude of Government, and were it not for the signs of the times indicating the growth of a distinct feeling throughout the British Empire in favour of a closer union among the scattered units and of Imperial Preference supplying the bond, the Resolution would not have been moved. The problem then before constructive and Imperial statesmanship was, according to my lights, to reconcile the special economic, commercial and financial interests of India with the larger interests of the British Empire which could only be converted into an organic whole by a zollverein or a customs-union. India was frankly protectionist then as now, but she could not have a protective tariff so long as her fiscal policy had to conform to the policy of free trade England. It would be disingenuous on my part to disclaim some protectionist feeling. But protection was impossible and not within the range of practical politics. Imperial Preference offered, to my mind, a via media which was likely to secure to this country a modified form of protection at the same time that it supplied a bond of indissoluble union to the disjointed and quasi-independent units of the Empire.

"India had then as now certain Imperial obligations, and it was difficult to see how these obligations could be discharged if our tariffs were regulated on any policy except that of Imperial Preference. With a clear perception of the needs of the situation, it was not necessary for me to be inspired by outside influences (it has since been hinted in certain quarters I was) to claim for Imperial Preference a dispassionate hearing. Our Imperial obligations are more onerous now after the War than before, and we all, protectionist or free trader, must approach this subject of future Indian tariffs with a wide outlook and handle it with statesmanship. The development of inter-Empire trade is admittedly one of our principal obligations as an integral unit of the Empire. And human ingenuity will fail to discover any fiscal policy other than that of Preferential Tariffs which can be adopted consistently with this central object. Imperial Preference is more than necessary in our present circumstances—it is unavoidable. There is no alternative to it. The substitution of Free Trade by it in the United Kingdom only makes its adoption in India imperative, apart from the question of gain or loss. I am glad to find that some of our people are coming over to this view. But if there is any loss in our dealings with protectionist countries, that will certainly be minimised through British economic, commercial and diplomatic pressure upon them. Britain, furthermore, is now in closer political alliance with powerful Powers, and it is extremely unlikely that these Powers would risk a severance of the ties by hitting India through exclusion of her exports. Any heavy duty, besides, on our exports by way of retaliation will be largely discounted by the increasing volume of our exports due to expansion of industries. It must likewise be borne in mind that the safety of our exports at sea depends upon His Majesty's Navy towards the cost of which, initial and recurring, we have so far contributed little, and it would be ungenerous on our part to refuse to reciprocate the friendly feelings of the Great British Power in commerce.

"But with all the advantages of Imperial Preference, I was not under any delusion in 1913 about its adoption by the Empire as a workable plan so long as England clung to Free Trade. I expected time would reveal its virtues. The War, however, has done for us which years of propagandist work would have failed to do. Truly, the world has covered in a few weeks, according to the vigorous words of the Prime Minister, the track of centuries.

"Sir, the federation of the British Empire is to-day a live issue; it is an absolute necessity. Imperial interests require it. There must be closer association in matters economic as much as military, between India and the Colonies on the one hand, and between them and the United Kingdom on the other. And the accepted ideal further is that the Empire should be self-contained and self-sufficient both as regards raw materials and manufactures. This can only be reached by the formation of a customs-union. And Imperial Preference is a sine qua non for its success. In the altered conditions it will not do for us or any other part of the British Empire to follow the attractive cry of Protection or Free Trade. The federation of the British Empire is a real, stern necessity, and as practical men it is as well for us to recognise the equally stern fact that federation is only possible on the basis of Imperial Preference. We must abandon once for all our insular prejudices and take a broad view of things. If we want to remain citizens of the Empire, we must show preference to the other members in the matter of trade. It will certainly not promote our interests and the interests of the Empire to allow Japan and the United States to be in undisputed possession of the market in India vacated by Germany and Austria. Moreover, the idea that all foreign sellers may be kept out by heavy protective tariffs may be patriotic and attractive, but in practical working will be productive of mischievous results. India cannot be self-contained as regards manufactures for long generations; she cannot utilise all her raw produce herself; she has to sell her goods, raw and manufactured, abroad. A protectionist India will be a sufferer in all these matters,

[Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis; The Vice-President; Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

It is also a point for earnest consideration that India cannot be in the Empire and yet be out of it. If she is to be a self-governing Dominion of the Empire, she must submit to some restrictions in the matter of her trade with the outside world and to some discriminative principles in her trade with the other units of the Empire.

"Sir, the United Kingdom with a statesman like grasp of the situation, is gradually abandoning the fetish of Free Trade and introducing a modified system of Preferential Tariffs with the object of developing her trade relations with India and the Colonies, as also of strengthening the bonds of union with them. A reversion to either pure Free Trade or pure Protection is extremely unlikely. The only practical alternative is some such policy as Imperial Preference. And it is very necessary that its potentialities as a source of strength or weakness to Indian interests should be explored, and that as early as possible, by a committee in the light of the trade statistics of recent years. The recommendation of Lord Selborne's Committee regarding the fiscal policy of India is qualified with the important proviso that the autonomy of India may be interfered with in case her action jeopardises Imperial interests. In this view our safest course would be to move along the lines of least resistance. This is noway a party question. The Commitee proposed will not commit the Council to the adoption of any particular policy but will only see, on an examination of the trade returns, if Imperial Preference would be seriously prejudicial to our economic interests, or whether India is likely to gain by it in the long run. And as the Committee is to be appointed for this examination, I beg to support the resolution."

12-9 P.M. The Vice-President:—"I think I must remind the Council that we are not going to discuss to-day the whole question of Imperial Preference, but only the appointment of a Committee to examine the trade statistics and report to Government, which is a very different question."

12-10 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"Sir, I am of opinion that this is a resolution which ought to have been brought before the new Legislative Assembly in which we will have more representative Indian commercial members; and I would have liked if the resolution were drafted on the lines of the resolution which was recently passed by the Indian Industrial Congress in Bombay. With your permission, Sir, I will read the resolution:—

'That this conference strongly disapproves of the policy of Imperial Preference attempted to be introduced as manifested in the recent legislation regarding the exports of hide and skins and urges that no measure of Imperial Preference should be adopted till the whole question has been examined by a committee fully representative of the various commercial interests of the country as indicated in the despatch to the Secretary of State reviewing the report of the Indian Industrial Commission, and until the Indian legislature is in the position of deciding for itself the fiscal policy best suited to the interests of the country and carrying it into effect.'

"Sir, when the Indian Industrial Commission was appointed, there were loud complaints in this Council and outside that the fiscal question was not included in the scope of its inquiry, but the reply of the Government was that owing to the war this question could not be taken up then, but that it would be taken up after the termination of the war. Sir, the questions of Tariff and Imperial Preference are interwoven. I will clearly say to this Council that I am a staunch supporter of Imperial Preference where we can adopt it with due regard to the interests of the Empire and of India. But before we settle the question of Imperial Preference, we have also to consider the question of tariff, as both are interwoven. At the same time, I do not wish to object to this resolution, because it recommends only the appointment of a committee to examine the trade statistics and make a report to the Governor General in Council. I hope the Hon'ble Mover has no idea of restricting the scope of this committee by not allowing evidence to be taken if it is needed; because on merely statistical grounds I do not think the Committee will be able to give the proper decision and advice which they ought to give. For instance, for the information of the Council, I will just quote one example, that of dyes; we want to protect the British dyes industry as much as we can, but if foreign countries like Japan are able to secure German dyes 50 per cent. or 60 per cent. cheaper and compete with us in the manufacture of dyed cloth, then if we are to protect ourselves we have to put a heavy duty not only on German dyes, but also on the foreign manufactured cloth which use German dyes. There are many such questions for solution, and, I think, this committee ought to be allowed to examine witnesses in big centres like Bombay and Calcutta before giving their opinion.

"Sir, I have heard with very great interest the statistics which have just been given by the Hon'ble Mover. We know that since the war, trade with the British Empire has decreased, while the trade with foreign countries has increased enormously. We are very anxious that we should make the Empire self-contained, but, at the same time, the Imperial question cannot be finally settled unless the whole tariff question has been gone through. I hope the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry will take up that question also very soon, because we shall then be able to frame a definite policy and to develop our industries and make this Empire more self-contained. With these few remarks I support the resolution."

The Hon'ble Haji Chaudhuri Muhammad Ismail 12-15 P.M.
Khan:—"Sir, I have pleasure in giving my support to the Resolution moved by the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce. India cries aloud for industries other than that of agriculture, and the only way to help the establishment of industries is to adopt a system of protection. Even Mill has advocated preference for nascent industries and educated opinion in India has always asked the Government to help Indian industries by a system of preference for Indian goods. Unfortunately this preference, though supported by the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and the Right Hon'ble Mr. Balfour, has never been adopted by the Government of India for the prosperity of Indian industries. The War, however, has brought about a change in the old state of affairs, and Imperial Preference has been adopted in the tariff of the United Kingdom. We can now hope to see the extension of the policy to India. But before the scheme is adumbrated, it is necessary to examine the situation with the help of statistics—which can be done by a committee competent to discuss the matter and examine the condition and possibilities of Indian Industries and Commerce under a system of Indian preference. Therefore, Sir, I welcome the proposal to appoint such a committee."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I am really very sorry to 12-17 P.M. have to oppose this Resolution. I cannot understand why at this particular juncture this question regarding the adoption of Imperial preference in our tariff custom should be at all before the Council. If I understood the Hon'ble Mover aright, he gave the impression that because the British Government had recently accepted, perhaps tentatively, the policy of Imperial preference, therefore this Government ought to consider the question of Imperial preference afresh. Now it is a matter of common knowledge, Sir, so far as India is concerned, that the whole country is wholly and essentially protectionist. All public men are protectionists, and if my impression is correct, I believe the officials themselves were so far protectionists . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"I am still a free-trader."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Yes, excepting my friend Sir Dinshaw Wacha . . . .

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha; The Vice-President; Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir George Barnes.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"And other people besides in the Indian world who are also free-traders."

The Vice-President:—"Order, order."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I am glad to know that my friend is still a free-trader, though not in favour of Imperial preference. . .

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"I have not said anything about Imperial preference."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"The point that I was driving at is that the Government of India were themselves, so far as I know, protectionists and they agreed with the general opinion of the country in this matter. Then, again, the matter was settled so far as protection versus Imperial preference was concerned by a thorough inquiry in the time of Lord Curzon. The question was carefully examined and the Committee arrived at the conclusion that Imperial preference would not be to the advantage of India. When I observed, Sir, that the Government of India were protectionists till very recently, I had the authority of the Secretary of State in that behalf. I invite the attention of this Council to the observations of the Secretary of State in the debate on the Government of India Bill in the House of Commons. The reference appears on page 396 of the Parliamentary Debates in the House of Commons on Thursday, the 4th of December 1919. Mr. Montagu said :—

'I hope I shall be able to convince the hon'ble and gallant Member (Colonel Wedgwood) that what he seeks to do is quite unnecessary. The proper plan of Parliamentary procedure is that fiscal proposals should be proposed by the Government. I am quite in agreement with the Hon'ble Member with regard to fiscal autonomy for India, and I would point out that it is not the Government of India which has been in disagreement on this point. It has been the Secretary of State. There has been no controversy between the officials and the non-officials. Most of the officials have been Protectionists. I myself, as the hon'ble and gallant Member knows, am a convinced Free-Trader.'

So it is perfectly clear that till this resolution was moved by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes, the public in India were under the impression that the Government of India were Protectionists and were therefore entirely at one with non-official opinion in the country. I for one cannot therefore understand how the Government of India have now suddenly developed a taste for Imperial Preference. But whatever the facts may be . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"I did endeavour to make it as clear as possible that we have not developed a taste for Imperial Preference. This is simply a resolution for a committee to inquire into the question and review the facts."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I am glad to know that the Government of India have not developed that taste, but where is the occasion for this resolution then? The question has been settled; we are all Protectionists, the Government of India are Protectionists, why do you want to consider the question of Imperial Preference if you have not developed that taste? . . .

The Vice-President:—"I think the Hon'ble Member should not repeat such statements as that. The Government of India is not committed to the policy of protection."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"The Government of India is not committed to the policy of Imperial Preference, I am glad to know that."

The Vice-President:—"I said of protection."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"A reference has been made in the speech of the Hon'ble Mover to a resolution moved by the Hon'ble Sir

[19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. W. E. Crum.]

Gangadhar Chitnavis in 1913. Now when that resolution was moved by my friend he believed and the country believed that Protection was impossible and therefore Imperial Preference was the second best. Now that state of things has changed. My friend Sir George Barnes has quoted a passage from the speech of Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis on that resolution, but Sir Gangadhar, in moving that resolution, made it perfectly clear that it was altogether hopeless to expect protection at the hands of the British Government, and therefore the only possible thing was Imperial Preference. If Protection could be had and would be within practical politics he maintained that he was out and out protectionist. That being so, Sir, even the consideration of the question of Imperial Preference is out of the question at this time when we have been granted fiscal autonomy. Then again there is another consideration. With whom are we going to enter into this union for Imperial Preference? With the self-governing Dominions? Now these self-governing Dominions, South Africa, East Africa and the rest of them, have not been treating us even as human beings. We are outside the pale of civilization in their eyes, and are we going to consider the question of Imperial Preference, of entering into a union with these States who do not agree to regard us even as human beings? Look at the most deplorable, most disgraceful and humiliating treatement which is meted out to our brothers and sisters in South Africa and East Africa even to-day. So long as we are not self-governing partners of the British Empire, it is useless to even consider the question of Imperial Preference at all. Under these circumstances I strongly oppose the resolution. I think it is mischievous to consider the question of Imperial Preference at this juncture. We have now got fiscal autonomy and we are Protectionists, let us devise our own tariffs and regulate them. That being so why should we at all think of Imperial Preference?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum:—"Sir, as you yourself have pointed out, this resolution is in danger of becoming a discussion on the merits or demerits of Imperial Preference rather than merely a discussion as to whether this committee should be appointed. And the question of fiscal policy has also been brought in. Now I quite admit that it is not an easy matter entirely to separate the question of fiscal policy from the question of Imperial Preference, but, at the same time, I do not think that we can possibly ask a committee composed like this to tackle the whole question of the fiscal policy of India. But we have heard from the Hon'ble Member for Commerce that he is ready to put before a committee of this sort a very considerable mass of figures and papers which have been collected by his Department; and I submit that under the circumstances the best thing we can possibly do is to go through these figures and discuss them and form some opinion first of all on the question of Imperial Preference There is no doubt about it that, apart altogether from the fiscal policy of India, the question of Imperial Preference has been receiving a very large amount of attention in other parts of the Empire, and there is no doubt about it that England has, to some extent and in certain cases, granted Imperial Preference to India. I certainly think, therefore, that we should take this opportunity of discussing with a committee as proposed the question of Imperial Preference. 12-28 P.M.

"Now, the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy has suggested that it would be impossible to discuss the question of Imperial Preference without the Committee visiting the trade centres and taking evidence generally on the question. I do not think that this will be necessary for a Committee which is merely discussing the question of Imperial Preference. It would most certainly be necessary for any Committee or Commission discussing the question of fiscal policy. What I would like therefore to suggest to the Hon'ble Member is that he should go a little bit further with regard to the scope of the work of this Committee than he has gone and that the Committee should also be empowered to recommend to the Governor General in Council the best methods of considering the future fiscal policy of India. I think that if this was brought within the scope of the Committee, it might even meet Mr. Patel's Resolution

[Mr. W. E. Crum; The Vice-President; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

*No. 7 which he is going to bring forward, and I think that then we could very well examine the question of Imperial Preference in some detail and make recommendations upon the methods which would be useful with regard to the consideration of the question of the whole fiscal policy in the near future. . . . .

The Vice-President:—"Do I understand that the Hon'ble Member desires to move an amendment to the Resolution?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum:—"I did not know it was in order to move an amendment. I was making a suggestion."

The Vice-President:—"The position with regard to amendments is that any member can object to an amendment of which notice has not been given. But it can be admitted, if necessary, so long as a member does not object."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum:—"In that case I would ask you leave to move the following amendment to the Resolution, by adding the words 'and on the best methods of considering the future fiscal policy of India'."

12-36 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I feel myself rather in a difficult position as to how to vote on this proposition and that is my excuse for speaking. I am not an expert in finance, but the difficulty to me is, how this question cropped up at all. Is there an Association in India that asked for it? Was there any agitation or did anybody suggest that this matter should be taken into consideration at this time? I am unaware of anything of this kind Not only was there nothing of that kind in the public press, but what little there was was against it. So the difficulty that occurs to me is, how the question comes up. The next difficulty is that we have not got any products to export. All that we do at present is to send out our raw products to other countries and get what we can without having anything to export in the shaped-finished articles. Why is it necessary for us to consider how we shall export it and what treatment we shall give to it? As it was aptly remarked in the earlier part of the debate to-day we must catch our hare before we think of distributing it or cooking it or doing what we like with it. So I thought we should devote our attention and concentrate upon producing more and having something finished that can be exported; and when we have got that, then it will be time enough to think out all these problems. So I thought myself that increased production, improved manufacture and facilities for producing finished articles would take precedence over all questions of this kind, and in that view of the matter I feel that it is rather premature to go into this question now and appoint a Committee.

"There is a further reason which weighs with me generally. I do not mean to discuss the proposition, but merely to state that there is a difficulty which I feel. There is the protection school; there is the fair trade school, there used to be the school of which we do not hear much now called the free trade school. and the fourth doctrine that appears to be coming in now is Imperial preference. Now if this is to be adopted or if the matter is to be considered, I would suggest to the Hon'ble Member for Commerce that, if possible, he would accept this fair trade principle also to be investigated at this time. If fair trade is introduced, then that meets all those questions which were discussed in 1903 and 1913 to a certain extent.

"With these remarks I wish to oppose this proposition."

12-38 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I would heartily support the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Crum. I think it is necessary that the Committee should have power to formulate some recommendations in regard to the tariff policy in order to be able to arrive at definite conclusions with regard to the question of preference.

"Then, coming to the question of the Resolution itself, there seems to be some misapprehension. We are not asked to commit overselves one way or the other, as regards our future policy in the matter of Imperial Preference. The Government has at present under the law the power of regulating the tariffs in any way they choose. Under the Government of India Act also they would be supreme, and therefore the Governor General in Council can regulate the tariffs in any way he chooses, and the opinion of the Legislative Council would be really only of an advisory character.

"Therefore, I should have thought that we would welcome this Resolution coming as it does from the Government who want to take us into their confidence and ask us to discuss with them the pros and cons of the matter and to help them with our suggestions. We may agree with, or may finally differ from, the conclusions of the Government, but there seems to be no objection whatsoever to our giving our counsel to the Government when they place all the materials before us I should have thought that no objection could have been reasonably taken to this Resolution. The Government are in a position to do what they like at the present moment under the law, and all that they ask for, is our co-operation in the way of making recommendations. It is perfectly open to us in the Committee to say we regret we cannot endorse the grant of preference, and the Government themselves have told us that they have not pledged themselves one way or the other. I, therefore, think that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel and the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde are labouring under some misapprehension with regard to the scope of this Resolution. If the Government had said that they had come to a conclusion, there might have been something to be said against this Resolution ; but they have not taken up that attitude at all. I would put another suggestion also before the Hon'ble Members. We have practically in a way crossed the Rubicon. When we passed the Raw Skins Act we did give preference to the United Kingdom in the export duty, which the Government of India levies in respect of raw skins and hides. Therefore, the matter has become one of practical politics and the Industrial Conference which sat at Bombay objected to that and on reasonable grounds. They said the country had no opportunity of discussing the matter and the Government of India had chosen to embody in the Act a principle which has not been discussed by the people. I think the Government of India are now giving an opportunity to the people through their representatives of discussing the matter. Of course, if the composition of the Committee is not all that the members desire, we might ask for its enlargement and for other people to be included in it ; but, I think, the Resolution is thoroughly sound and reasonable and should be supported accordingly."

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy :—"May I speak 12-40 P.M. on the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Crum ?"

The Vice-President :—"Technically, the Hon'ble Member is in order, but I hope he will be as brief as possible."

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy :—"I will, Sir. I heartily support the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Crum. His amendment has solved many of my difficulties. By putting in those few words we shall be able to discuss also the principal question.

"Then, if we appoint some machinery like a commission to go into the tariff question, this Council will be free also to advise that the Imperial question, if it is found difficult, can also be entrusted to it. So I heartily support this amendment."

12-41 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Nigel F. Paton :—" I just want to say one word, Sir, and that is that I am in full agreement with Mr. Crum's amendment."

12-43 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" I just want to say a few words, Sir. I am not an expert in these matters at all, and I confess that I am a protectionist; but because I am a protectionist is no reason why, in the light of new circumstances and conditions, I may not change my opinion. There is no such thing as a principle in politics, and my authority for this is Edmund Burke himself. He says that there is no principle in politics, but adds this qualifying clause—which is most important—namely, 'that it is circumstances which impart to every political principle its colour and discriminating effect.' Those are his words. Therefore, every political principle, whatever it may be, is to be judged by the circumstances of its application. The world is moving; we are all moving; the protectionist finds that new circumstances and new conditions have arisen. Is he not to revise his opinions in the light of these new conditions and circumstances? If the Empire adopts the doctrine of preference and we people of India find that the doctrine is advantageous to us, are we not to adopt it? Should we not revise our views in the light of new facts? I do not pin myself down to principles and convictions which will not prove beneficial to the interests of my country. That is the criterion. Is it beneficial to India that we should adopt the principle of preference or not? If it is, I say accept that principle and modify your opinions and views. What do you ask the committee to do? The Committee has to consider the principle of preference and also consider the methods by which the question of fiscal policy might also be discussed and judged. It seems to me to be a perfectly desirable and legitimate thing to do, and I really cannot understand the point of the objections that have been raised. I am prepared to give my support to the resolution, and I hope it will be agreed to."

12-44 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha :—" Sir, I welcome this resolution moved by the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry. My only difficulty is this, that whatever this Committee may do, even after examining all the statistics and taking into consideration Mr. Crum's amendment, the Government will not be in a position on the basis of the recommendations that Committee may make, to lay down a final policy which can be safely adopted in the future. This is a very large question, a question which will eventually affect vastly the economic conditions of the country. The country has not been given an opportunity at all of discussing the principles of the fiscal autonomy India should have, and what should be her future tariff policy, whether it should be preferential, or free-trade, or protectionist. or fair-trade or retaliatory or whatever you may call it Therefore, I say, Sir, that unless the country is taken into the confidence of the Government, not this Legislative Council only of which not all of us are representatives of the people, it will be unwise and even mischievous simply, on the recommendations the proposed Committee may make, to start the hare of a preferential tariff. That is my fear on the subject. As far as the Committee itself is concerned, it is at liberty to examine the question and make any recommendation it likes, but its word can hardly be considered as final and binding on the country. The country has not been entirely taken into confidence by the Government. If anything is to be done, let the country be allowed in the first place a full and fair opportunity to consider the question, discuss it from all points of view, and offer a variety of opinions thereon. I think, Sir, that as regards preferential tariff my friend, Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis, was somewhat dogmatic when he said that England had adopted preferential tariff! I deny the proposition. England has not adopted preferential tariff as her future fiscal policy, though, no doubt, there has been some coquetting on the subject by the Ministry. . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis :—"I said 'she is thinking of adopting it'."

[19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Sir Dinshaw Wacha; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; The Vice-President.]

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha :—"Ah! I should say, Sir, that the present Government of England is called Government by coalition. This Government by coalition is a government of stopgaps, of compromises and of temporary expediencies. It is not a Government which is competent to lay down the sound fiscal policy which all England may approve. Nothing of the sort. This Government may be dissolved to-morrow; another Government may come in its place. Mr. Asquith is a strong free-trader and he denounces this preferential tariff, so do many other experts. The Economist of August 1919 went statistically into the whole question of' preferential tariff and declared that preferential tariff—if you do not tax foods and other articles but merely manufactured goods—will be a preferential tariff in name only. It would be 'a farce.' These are not my own words; they are the words of the Economist. To say therefore that in England they have finally adopted a preferential tariff or something approaching it is simple nonsense.

"Then there is another vital issue. At the present moment the whole world is in what you may call an economic confusion or chaos. There is also the big but most complicated question of international exchange. Exchange problems, I need not observe to this Council, certainly affect all classes of trades and industries. Then, again, there is the more serious problem of unsettled Europe We do not know what the policy of a settled Europe will be; we do not know how trade with Germany, trade with Austria and other States of Central and Eastern Europe will be affected. Until all those countries with whom we have the most important trade settle down and declare what their own policy will be in the future, whether they will have preferential tariff with regard to their foreign trade or any other, it is of no use India rushing forward at this hour and committing itself one way or the other? I am afraid it cannot. The world's economics have been since the war in the melting pot. Maxims and dogmas current before the war, during the war, and after the war are all melting. New dogmas and maxims have come into being and are forging themselves These have not yet been tested and verified; and I consider that until the whole economic question relating to the old and new world is finally settled, which will not be for three or four years to come, one way or the other, it is simply futile for India to lay down an economic policy which may be deemed beneficial to the people. There is, however, no harm in appointing a Committee of the character proposed, although I do say that this Committee cannot be considered to be a representative committee for a final verdict. A handful of members of trade experience in the Legislative Council cannot be recognised as expressing the opinion of the country itself. The country may be protectionist, or it may be preferential, or it may be free-trading, but let it clearly and definitely declare itself. All these are considerations which cannot be ignored. My own opinion is, Sir, that the question is of so momentous a character that it would be most unwise to decide it so hurriedly as at present seems to be the case. I wish the Government of India had not put it forward at all, and that they had waited for sometime to see how Europe settles down, how the economic conditions there take a final shape, and how the exchange problem is going to be settled before rushing into this question. Howevor, Sir, here is the resolution and as I feel very strongly interested in these problems, I shall certainly serve on the Committee and do my best; but I cannot say that our recommendations should be considered final It is the country and the country alone which should make the final pronouncement on it, and the time will come when it will have to do so, though not immediately."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"May I know, Sir, whether Mr. Crum's amendment means the same thing practically as the resolution of Mr. Patel which stands as *No 7 on the list?" 12-49 P.M.

The Vice-President :—"I did not catch what the Hon'ble Member said."

* Vide page 105.

[19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Mr. W. E. Crum; Sir George Barnes; The Vice-President; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

12-50 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"I want to know for information whether Mr. Crum's proposed amendment means the same thing in fact and substance as the resolution of Mr. Patel which stands as No. 7 on the list."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum:—"I rise to explain, Sir, that I do not mean quite the same thing. Mr. Patel's resolution is for the appointment of a Committee, but I am not sure that the best way of considering fiscal policy would be that. There may be other ways of considering it. I want this Committee appointed by Sir George Barnes to consider the best methods of considering that policy; that is my point; it may meet, I think, Mr. Patel's resolution partly, but it certainly does not actually follow the proposal which Mr. Patel has made."

12-51 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"I do not think there is much for me to say. Mr. Crum's amendment will solve many of the difficulties which were before the Council. It has solved Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy's difficulties altogether, and, I believe, that it has to some extent solved the difficulties to which Mr Patel has referred. With regard to what Sir Dinshaw Wacha has said I can assure him that all that is intended is a statistical examination, more in the nature of a preliminary survey. I think that will meet his objections in the matter."

The Vice-President:—"The question is—'that this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he appoint a Committee to examine the trade statistics and to consider and report to the Governor General in Council whether or not it is advisable to apply to the Indian Customs Tariff a system of preference in favour of goods of Empire origin.' The Hon'ble Mr. Crum has an amendment that the following words be added:—'and as to the best methods of considering the future fiscal policy of India.' I will put the amendment to the Council first."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The following motion was then put and agreed to:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he appoint a Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill, the Hon'ble Mr. Mant, the Hon'ble Mr. Ley, the Hon'ble Mr B. N. Sarma, the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha, the Hon'ble Mr. Crum, the Hon'ble Mr. Paton, the Hon'ble Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan, the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy, the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, the Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis and the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes, to examine the trade statistics and to consider and report to the Governor General in Council (1) whether or not it is advisable to apply to the Indian Customs Tariff a system of preference in favour of goods of Empire origin, and (2) as to the best methods of considering the future fiscal policy of India.'

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER AND REPORT ON RULES AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1919.

12-54 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I beg to move that—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee of all the non-official members of this Council be appointed to consider and report on the rules and regulations framed and to be framed under the Government of India Act, 1919.'

"The first point I make is that there should be a Committee of non-officials of this Council to report on the rules framed and to be framed For this there is a precedent. When the reforms proposals came up they were placed before a Committee of that kind. There is a precedent and there is likely to be another

So far as these rules are concerned I consider they should be placed before the Committee that I propose. The next point is this; I know that there is an informal Committee appointed to consider the rules framed and to be framed. As regards this Committee I wish to submit that it may be necessary sometimes to appoint these informal Committees, but in my opinion these Committees are no good. These informal Committees are liable to run into grooves; we could not at such informal Committees raise objections, I mean no disrespect to them, but I am bound to say they are apt to be one-sided and to take only one view of the matter. I should like these rules to be discussed from all points of view and to be clearly understood by everybody. Another objection which I have to these informal Committees is, that there appears to be no real authority for them under the law. They make recommendations which may or may not be accepted but they cannot be debated upon. So I humbly submit that these informal Committees will not serve the purpose required, and I therefore desire to submit my motion. My point of view is that it is desirable to go into the question of ascertaining exactly what we have got under the Government of India Act and to try and get the utmost we can out of it; to try and discover for ourselves what is its full scope and fully utilise all that it gives to us, and that would be the way to make it successful. If we do not go far enough we shall discover this and if we go too far we shall discover where we are wrong. Before a person purchases a house he likes to see all the rooms and to walk over the whole compound, to find out exactly how he stands. Similarly, we have this new Act and would like to examine every portion of the rules and to see every thing that is prohibited or not prohibited by it. In my opinion the whole subject requires examination, as I have suggested, so that we may have the full benefit of it and not only a portion. That is one point; another is that some people say under the Act everything necessary is given; others hold that what is given is very little. A third set say something is given but it does not go far enough. I think that all these differences would disappear if we were to sit together and examine all the provisions of the Act and the rules framed under it. At such a meeting all misunderstandings would tend to disappear, and there would be only mutual co-operation and good understanding. Lastly, I should hope that on such a Committee the officials who attend will kindly give us such information as we require. The Government officers have given full consideration to this matter and the collective experience of the Government of India will thus be utilised to make these rules as workable as possible. I also wish that when we are discussing this matter, should we go wrong or ignore any points, we shall be set right—so that we may understand the whole Act as fully as possible. Somebody will kindly be deputed to give us that information so that we might read the whole thing, understand the whole thing as fully as we possibly can and, wherever necessary, we might get information from the officials deputed. So considered from this point of view, it appears to me very desirable that these rules and regulations should be examined by a committee consisting of all the non official members of this Council assisted,—I do not say that in so many words, but that is my suggestion,—assisted, where necessary, by the experience of the officials or by official explanation. With these words, Sir, I would submit this resolution for the consideration of this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.—" Sir, I wish 1-4 P.M. to give my whole-hearted support to the motion which has been brought forward by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde. Sir, the rules and regulations to be framed under the Reform Act are of vital importance to us, in certain respects they will be of greater importance than the Act itself. As was observed in the House of Commons the other day when this matter was debated after the Report of the Joint Parliamentary Committee was submitted, everything is to be left to the rules, but judging by our experience of the Reform Act passed under Lord Morley's scheme and the regulations framed thereunder, I think it our imperative duty to press that the rules to be framed should be considered from every possible point of view. Speaking for myself, Sir, I was inclined to move that the rules should be considered by a yet larger body, in fact I thought that this whole Council should go into committee, and I also thought that the draft rules might be published with advantage inviting public criticisms, and after criticisms are received from all sources, the matter might be considered by the Government. Of course, it will be said that the Government is being assisted by a committee and the rules will be published thereafter. Now as regards the small committee, we do not know how it is composed. Apart from that fact, I think, Sir, on principle we must object to the process of selection rather than election. We do not know the names of the members who are on this committee, and I am not quite sure that all important interests are represented on it

"Then coming to the question of publication after the rules have been settled by Government, I have very great doubts, judging from our past experience, if Government will really make any change at all, however small it may be, when once it makes up its mind. I have known one learned judge who used to write his judgment and then hearing the arguments of pleaders. We know from experience, Sir, that that is the practice followed by Government usually. Once it makes up its mind and settles a thing, it will never change its opinion. No doubt, it invites public opinion and criticisms, but it is only formally done and much attention is not paid to such criticisms and opinions. On this ground, Sir, I am inclined to think that it would be better if the rules are now considered by a much bigger body. My Hon'ble friend Mr Khaparde desires that all the non-official members of this Council should go into a committee following the precedent that was followed in 1918 Sir, it is well-known that, from all points of view, we look upon the Reform scheme of Lord Morley as a failure, and that was due to the regulations. The scheme was all right when it left England, but here it became extremely unsatisfactory by reason of the regulations framed here; it was in fact wrecked. Let me mention by way of illustration that under these regulations even Lord Sinha is not eligible to be a member of any Legislative Council. I hope, Sir, we shall not commit the same mistake again, and I do hope that Government will see its way to accept the proposition of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparade and allow the rules to be considered by all the non-official members of this Council."

1-10 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Marris :—"There is a preliminary point, Sir, in the resolution to which I should like to draw the attention of the Council, and it is that the Hon'ble Member's motion is so far incomplete in form. He has failed to indicate to whom this committee of all the non-official members should after consideration make their report, whether to the Governor General in Council, or to this Council itself To pass from that however, I am glad, Sir, that the Hon'ble Member in putting this proposal to the Council made no suggestion that it is the object or the intention of Government in this matter to observe an attitude of secrecy. The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda did indeed darkly suggest that Government sought to take up a position comparable to that of the District Judge who wrote his judgments before he heard the arguments. I think I may with complete confidence ask the non-official members of the committee who have been good enough to co-operate in the work already done, to say whether the picture which the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda has drawn is or is not a complete travesty of the actual proceedings in the committee. A a matter of fact, we have had our informal committee working for some time. It has held several meetings; it has got through a good deal of work already; and if I may, Sir, I would gladly take this opportunity of acknowledging the entirely reasonable and conciliatory spirit with which the non-official members of the committee have met the Government, and the sense of responsibility which has informed the suggestions which they have made. I leave it to the non-official members of the committee to say, if they care to do so, whether they think there has been much to criticise either in the proposals laid before them or in the attitude of the Government members in supporting or discussing those proposals, and whether there has been anything at all in Government's attitude of the rigid or wooden or impracticable, anything at all to deserve any of those classical epithets that are from time to time applied to the operations of the Government of India.

"Now I will state, as briefly as possible, the reason why I do not ask the Council to accept the Hon'ble Member's resolution. What he asks us to do in effect is to swop horses in the middle of crossing a stream. But we believe in our own mount For the purpose in view we believe our machinery to be the better. We have got a small, and with all deference to the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda, a thoroughly representative and competent committee, with the major provinces all represented on it, without at the same time making it so big as to limit informal discussion. The Council will readily appreciate the importance of this point. For, if instead of our small and manageable advisory committee we had a committee four times as big, as the Hon'ble Mover wishes, or indeed a committee five or six times as the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda would, as I gathered, prefer, everybody knows that it would be a quite impracticable body. General discussion would be impossible. You always come to a point in the process increasing the size of a consultative body where informal discussion can no longer take place because it leads to chaos. Beyond that point, therefore, you have to proceed by resolutions and amendments formally moved, because the body as a whole has become so big that it can no longer proceed by the quick interchange of ideas and informal discussion, and must be guided by formal rules. And let us remember, Sir, that the element of time in this matter is of great importance I appeal again to the non-official Members of the Committee who have had experience of the difficult nature of some of the subjects we have had to discuss. I believe they will agree with me that if, for example, the matter of the composition of the future Indian Legislative Assembly where various interests inevitably clash had had to be determined by a series of discussions in a body such as the Hon'ble Mover or the Hon'ble Mr Chanda suggests, a body four times as big as the Committee which has been considering the question and which has already come to its conclusions, the time consumed would be in geometrical progression; it would be not four times as long but sixteen times as long, and I for my part at all events should feel no confidence in our work being done in time for His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to inaugurate the new constitution. It is obvious that time is of the essence of this matter, and for this reason we have a great deal of work to do; we also have to do it by a complicated procedure. We have first of all to discuss the rules here, then we have to send them to the Local Governments. The Local Governments are very much concerned with many of them, and they have to discuss them with their advisers For exactly the same provision has been made by Local Governments. They also are not conducting their proceedings with an air of mystery, but their non-official members are freely consulted. After consideration by the Local Governments, the rules have to come back here and, if necessary, be re-examined. They have then to go Home and be laid before the Joint Committee, and a great many of them have to go before Parliament, and some of them have actually to be passed by a vote of Parliament Now we have not got a whole year to do all this, and there comes a stage at which we cannot get on further until we have actual legally-made rules to work with. In the whole process of inaugurating this new constitution, I think there are two areas of uncertainty, two indeterminate portions in respect of which we cannot be quite sure how long the work will take to do. One is the actual formation of the vast electoral rolls. The agency, the machinery available varies very much in different parts of the country, and although we may say with fairly reasonable confidence that at almost all the places the work will be done in time, still there are places about which a certain anxiety may reasonably be felt. Nor until the whole ground has been explored do we know what hidden difficulties we may find ourselves up against and what time it may take to surmount them? That is one area of uncertainty. The other is the time which the Joint Committee and Parliament at Home will take to put these rules through the final mill. That matter is beyond our control entirely. Therefore, on both these grounds, it is absolutely essential, if the work is to be done in time, that we should have a certain amount of time in hand. That is why we have got to get on quickly now. I hope, Sir, that with the willing and eager co-operation that we have been receiving there will be no difficulty; but I repeat that I could not guarantee that we should be ready in time if all these rules, which it is essential to deal with at a reasonable pace now, had to be subjected to the very slow machinery, the incomparatively slower machinery which the Hon'ble Mover proposes. There is one point I omitted to mention. Let the Council think how difficult it would be for an enormous committee of this kind even to find time to meet at all with the pressure of their other work, both upon this Council and Select Committees. The mere difficulty of securing meetings at all would greatly impede progress.

"The Hon'ble Mover, gently as he pressed the point, indicated a preference for a committee selected by this Council and not by Government. Now as to that, Sir, there is just one word to be said. Whatever obscurities may be thought here and there to attend the Joint Committee's report, one thing is clear. That body had a strong belief in the efficacy of Parliamentary methods, and they have told us to model ourselves as far as we can on the august example of Parliament itself. Well, Sir, what would Parliament do in a case like this? In Parliament the discussion of a technical matter (and the whole of this is technical) would be conducted by a Select Committee. Even in the case of public Bills (other than finance and money Bills) the practice is to refer first to a Standing Committee The Government of India Bill was a case in point. Now it is quite true—and I make a present of the point to the Hon'ble Member for all that it is worth—that Parliament appoints the Committee and takes its report. Well, Sir, I have no doubt we should be exactly the same, if the conditions were analogous. If we had a responsible Government here that would undoubtedly be the procedure. If in the alternative the Statute had directed that these rules and regulations should be made with the assent of the Legislative Council, the same line would have been taken; but we have to take our orders as they have been given to us and the orders are perfectly plain. These rules are to be made by the Governor General in Council with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India in Council. And therefore any committee assembled by the Government of India to assist it in framing these rules, as far as may be in accordance with ascertained public opinion, must necessarily be an advisory body, and the appointing authority must be the Government and not the Council. To admit the Hon'ble Member's suggestion would in fact be a constitutional innovation which we have no authority to make. I therefore trust, Sir, that after this explanation the Hon'ble Member may not be disposed to press his proposal, for I maintain that we have met him substantially, though we have not met him in form. If he does press his proposal, I trust the Council will be abundantly satisfied that the Government are only anxious to take Indian opinion fully into their confidence, and in taking the course which it is, are merely making use of the best machinery. I have only to mention one other fact, and that is, that two qualified representative Indian gentlemen whose position and experience enable them to speak with knowledge seeing that they have seen both sides of this question of the business and machinery and processes of making reforms, both from the side of Government and from the non-official side. Having had such experience of both sides they are entitled to speak with great authority; and they have expressed themselves as abundantly satisfied with the anxious care which Government is taking to meet, to ascertain and to satisfy non-official opinion; and indeed they went so far as to say the arrangements made by Government had exceeded all expectations which they had entertained in the matter. I, therefore, regret, Sir, that the Government cannot accept the resolution which has been moved."

[19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Sir, I rise to support the resolution of my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde. In the lengthy reply which my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Marris gave, we did not hear the names of the committee that has been appointed, the committee of which we have heard so much. Of course we heard the certificate given by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Marris to the members of that committee. He says they are sober and very good people and experienced people and all the rest of it, but we do not know who those members are. We have not been told. I do not know why no Press Communiqué gives those names; this lengthy reply of my friend does not give the names, and why even up to this moment those names have not been given out by the Government to the public and to the members of this Council, I cannot understand. However, whoever they are, what I would like to see is this. This committee is charged with the duty of advising the Governor General in Council as to the rules and regulations to be framed under the new Act Well, those rules are to be framed, not only for the Legislative Assembly, but also for the local Councils and, therefore, I would certainly expect that that committee should consist of men who have had considerable experience in the local Legislative Councils. I do not know if that condition has been satisfied in the composition of that committee, and that fact has been taken into consideration by this Government. 1-25 P.M.

"But apart from that question, Sir, I lay very great stress on the point mentioned by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda. It is a question of election versus nomination. If you do not think that there should be a committee it, is quite a different thing; you are not bound to appoint one; the rules are to be made by the Governor General in Council. Then, why appoint a committee, why give to the matter the semblance of the advice of the non-official members. But if you do appoint a Committee, why not appoint it by election and make it a reality? Let this Council decide who the members of that committee should be. I think it needs no words from me to convince this Council that a committee of this sort should be appointed by election rather than by nomination. Every one knows in what mysterious manner you sometimes find some names entered in the list of nominated members on committees or on other bodies also. My friend the Hon'ble Sir William Marris says that Government has no policy of secrecy; their attitude is not one of secrecy. If that is so, why are the names of the committee not published for so many days? He says the Committee has been sitting and has done work for several days, and that he has been very much satisfied and that other members are also satisfied. That may be all true, but we do not know anything about it. If there is no attitude of secrecy on the part of the Government, why do we not know anything about these things? And even at this last moment why does he keep back the names? I cannot for the life of me understand this.

"Then again, Sir, there is already complaint in the country. Perhaps this Council is aware that they have appointed a provincial advisory committee in Madras by nomination. There has been a protest by the Provincial Congress Committee against the method by which that committee has been appointed. Similarly, this is a protest, I understand, from my friend Mr. Khaparde, against the method by which this committee has been appointed. I really cannot understand why, if you want to take non-officials into your confidence, you do not say to the non-official members themselves, 'Well, gentlemen, whom do you want to send as your representatives to this Committee? Government want your advice, will you select your people?' Well, if the Government does not adopt that course and says, 'We will take the advice of such people as we like', they will get advice that they like and they will get such people as they like. That is quite true, but let them know that they are not the people of the choice of this Council much less of the public. I respectfully submit that if you want to make the Reforms a success, this is not the way. Why is this Committee appointed? Why are the non-officials to be consulted? It has been a complaint that the Morley-Minto Reforms were made nugatory by the rules framed by the Government of India. No committee was appointed, non-officials were not consulted, and they made rules as they liked and the Reforms became a failure. That has been the complaint, the general complaint. In order to provide against similar mischief it has been insisted, and very right insisted by the Secretary of State, I understand, that public opinion must be taken into confidence. Therefore, the Government of India has thought it right to appoint a sort of advisory committee by nomination. It is playing the same old game. You can select your own men, and you take their advice. The public knows nothing about it. You say 'we will publish the rules.' Of course, you will publish the rules and afterwards you will consider them. We have no say in the matter. We will send you our objections and they will go into the waste paper basket. If you really mean business you must take us into your confidence; you must ask us 'Well, whom do you select?' My friend says all the members should be brought together and they should form a committee. My friend the Hon'ble Sir William Marris says that is an impracticable proposition, it will cause delay, it will not be a working proposition. I do not know why. I think my Hon'ble friend is much mistaken about the wisdom and the capacity of the non-official members. Only the other day, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde pointed out, a committee of non-official members met under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea to consider the voluminous report on reforms, what is popularly known as the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, and in three or four days we went through the whole of the report and made our recommendations to the Governor General in Council. Every one had his say, the Indian and the European non-officials, and we got on very well and in four days we made the report and presented it to His Excellency the Viceroy. There was no difficulty. I think it was my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea who went personally to present that report to His Excellency the Viceroy, if I remember aright, and there was no difficulty. Yet we hear that these rules are being considered for days together by a nominated committee, and nothing seems to have been finally settled. I think if we non-officials met together round the table, discussed matters and considered them, there would be no difficulty. We should present our side of the case and then it would be for the Governor General in Council to decide. I do not know whether the Hon'ble Sir William Marris sits on that committee, but I suppose there are some officials on it. That is not the way to get real non-official opinion. If we, the non-officials, are allowed to meet together, we talk the matter over, we discuss it in all its aspects and we express our opinions freely and independently. We say there what we feel. We are not used to speaking quite independently in the presence of high officials, and is it not much better if we are allowed to discuss these rules ourselves and place our views before His Excellency?

"With these observations I very heartily support my friend Mr. Khaparde's Resolution, and I trust the Council will accept it. There is no substance in what the Hon'ble Sir William Marris has said."

1-33 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea:—"Sir, I did not want to speak at all on this question, and if I do speak it is in response to the invitation of the Hon'ble Sir William Marris as to the attitude of the Government in regard to those who are members of that committee. I am a member of that committee and with regard to the attitude of the Hon'ble Sir William Marris and of the Hon'ble Mr. Muddiman I will say this, that it has throughout been most conciliatory and even deferential towards the views of the non-official members of the committee. I think I re-echo the sense of every member who has been put on that committee . . . . . .

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:—"Yes."

[19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Mr Sachchidananda Sinha.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea :—"I think we all agree that the Government has given us throughout the utmost latitude of expression, has treated our suggestions with great consideration, and has accepted many of them that ought to clear the atmosphere.

"With regard to the decision of the Government to have a few and not the entire body of the non-official members, it is not for me to enter upon a defence of that proceeding. That point has been explained by the Hon'ble Sir William Marris, and I am not called upon to add anything to it.

"I desire to point out one mistake, which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel makes, namely, that the names of the members of the committee have not been placed before the public. I have reason to believe that the Associated Press did send a wire which has appeared in the newspapers giving the names of the members of the committee. I do not know that I should detain the Council with any further observations. I would once again repeat that we have been treated with the utmost consideration, that we have done our best, and that our suggestions have been received with great attention and even with deference."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"May I say just 1-34 P.M. a word, Sir, on this question? As one of those unfortunate non-official members on this committee whose position has been by implication impugned, and perhaps perfectly justly so, by my friends Mr. Khaparde and Mr. Patel, I would like to say a word in response to the invitation of Sir William Marris. I had no idea about this committee, until I got a letter asking me if I would care to work as a member of it. I felt I would not be justified in refusing the offer of the Government, simply because I was not elected, as I believe in doing what little I can for the country, even on sufferance; and I, therefore, accepted it. But I would like to take this occasion to say, and say it emphatically, that my leader, the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea has stated the absolute truth, when he said that the members of the Government who were on the committee, Sir William Marris and Mr. Muddiman have been most deferential to us, and we have had a very full and fair and frank discussion on every point that has arisen in the course of the debates, and that after very long and careful consideration they have gladly accepted whatever views we expressed by a majority, I mean we the non-official members of the committee. At the same time I will not say that I would not have very much preferred if the Government had adopted the course of asking the non-official members of this Council to elect for this committee a certain number of members; that would certainly have carried much greater weight. The result of mere selection is that even a man of my sterling independence is being charged by implication as having come under the good grace of officialism. I certainly do not like that; I would personally prefer very much that I was a member of this committee by election, and I know the limitations of being chosen by selection. But, at the same time, I cannot honestly say that this committee, which contains all interests and members of most of the major provinces, was wanting in its loyalty to the country and its best interests. I would certainly, as I say, have preferred to be elected, but as the Government did not choose to do so, I am sure I cannot be responsible for their action. Therefore, Sir, I feel some difficulty in supporting my friend Mr. Khaparde who now wishes the matter to be brought before the whole Council, after the Reform Committee has already sat, I think, for five or six times. I think it would be very difficult to get through the entire body of work before a much larger committee of the whole Council. If we had not to prepare the whole scheme and send it to the Secretary of State in a limited time, and if the time at our disposal were unlimited, it might have been a better arrangement; but as Sir William Marris has said the whole thing must be done quickly and laid before the Houses of Parliament soon, as they have got to consider them. In view of this, I think, I cannot give my support to the proposition put forward by Mr. Khaparde that the matter be referred now to the whole of the non-official members of the Council. My friend, Mr. Chanda, had even a wider suggestion, that the whole thing should be put before the Legislative Council—the non-officials as well as officials together. On that principle Mr. Patel might feel justified in asking that there should be a still larger body, including members of all the Provincial Councils also; all that is a counsel of perfection, and far be it for me to say one word to detract from the value of such suggestions. But having regard to the very limited time at our disposal, these are not, I regret to say, working propositions. For these reasons I regret I am not in a position to support my friend's proposition."

1-38 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Sir, I have listened with great interest to all the debate that has taken place on my motion, but I regret to say that I still feel that I ought to move this Resolution and press it on the attention of this Council as strongly as I can. I do not like to make a speech now in support of it, but with your permission, Sir, I shall briefly reply to some of the allegations that have been made. The first is that these gentlemen, who have been selected on the informal committee are very good people and that they have been doing their work very well, and we have heard two of these gentlemen getting up in their places and saying that they have been freely making suggestions, and that the said suggestions have been accepted with very great care and all that. Well, it was never a part of my case that these people who were on the committee were not good people, nor was it on that account that this has been put forward. The next question is that a big body is an unworkable body subject to certain limitations. If at all it is an unwieldy body, then why have they been invoked into existence by legislatures at all? I believe these big bodies have some virtue of their own for they have been constantly invoked. Then, again, Parliamentary practice was referred to. Fortunately last year when I was on a short visit to England I saw something of the procedure in Parliament. In Parliament there are definite bodies; when Government wishes to form a joint committee then they ask each party to nominate. Government say 'We want a body of ten and we shall take six and for the remaining four you nominate from members of your party,' and then the parties nominate their men, and then the joint committee comes into existence. The joint committee on our new Government of India Act was formed in this manner. Well, now this was not the procedure followed here. I am sorry that the further argument was rather difficult for me to understand, namely, that it is the Government of India that has got to make these rules and send them to the Secretary of State, and therefore this Council has no right to ask for anything; and that if we are consulted, it is as a matter of favour that we are consulted and we need not have been consulted at all. This same matter occurred with regard to the reform proposals; they were made by two great officers of State, His Excellency the Viceroy and the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State, and they were not bound to consult us, and we certainly could not possibly have asked for that, and yet why was it placed before us? I believe the essence of co-operation is that you invite the other people to come and help you when you are not bound to do so. If you are bound to do so, then I do not thank anybody for asking me because he was bound to do it. Co-operation means that you call in the assistance of people when you are not bound by law to do so. Well, judged from that point of view, if my view is right, then this speaks rather ill for co-operation, namely, Sir William Marris saying 'The Government of India has to make the rules; you have no locus standi; if we call you it is a matter of favour.' I submit this is not right. Anyhow I shall not press that point further.

"Then comes the further proposition that there is no time to bring them before this Council; there is no time even to refer them to the committee which I propose to be composed of non-officials. I heard this in the debate in the House of Commons when I was there; they said there was no time; I believe it was Colonel Yate who raised the point and said that he did not like to give his adherence to the Act then. To the answer that there was no time, the reply came from many quarters of the House that it was a very unfortunate thing that most momentous issues had to be decided and most far-reaching conclusions had to be reached in a hurry. I believe it was Colonel Yate who said that if that was so, if we had to act in a hurry, better not act at all; it does not matter; India has waited for so many years, she may well wait a few months more, but let us give her a good constitution. Similarly, in this case also, there was a hurry in getting this Act through, there is hurry in framing the rules; it is said that they cannot be brought before the non-official members of this Council. It is not a very large body; we are a small body as we are, and there is not much harm in that, as was pointed out by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel. On a larger question like this we all submitted our report, and there would be no difficulty in doing the same here.

"A further point that was taken was that there was a technical difficulty in my Resolution, in that I did not say to whom that report should be submitted. Well this is, I believe, a technical defect. I maintain that if these rules are placed before this Council without consultation, that is a serious objection. The serious objection is this. I have great respect for my friend Mr. Banerjea. I agree he and his colleagues are good men, but unfortunately I do not worship in the same temple with them. I deny the statement that I have no business to exercise my own judgment. Therefore I submit my Resolution for the acceptance of the Council."

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris:—"I will not detain the 1-48 P.M.
Council for more than a short time. In reply to the allegation of secrecy that was made by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel and repeated by Mr Khaparde to some extent in his reply, I may remind the Council of the answer given a short time ago in reply to a question put. It was said in it that the Government of India proposed to forward a copy of the suggested rules, and that every non-official member in this Council was requested to forward any observations he wished the Government to take into consideration. In view of that statement and in view of the practice which has been followed of circulating papers to non-officials, I do not think the Council will agree that either the Hon'ble Mr. Patel or the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde have really any substantial grounds for suggesting that they have been kept in the dark. As to evidence of the desire of the two Hon'ble Members to participate in the framing of these rules, I think I am right in saying that I have not received any comments from either of them . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I rise to offer a personal explanation. The rules were sent to me on Tuesday night at 12 o'clock and they were asked for on Thursday."

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris:—"I am grateful to the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and to the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha for their testimony as to the way in which the business of the committee has proceeded, and to the evidence it affords of the way in which the non-official wolf may lie down with the official lamb. As regards the question of the control of the committee, I mean the Hon'ble Member's desire that it should be elected rather than appointed by the Governor General in Council, I can only say again that the act of election connotes control. If you elect a committee you give it a mandate to do so and so, and it comes charged with that mandate and is more than an advisory body. But the responsibility for the rules is with the Government, and therefore all that the Government can do is to call in advisers of its own selecting."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"I ask for a division."

The Vice President :—"I shall take a division by a show of hands."

The Council divided and four voted in favour of the motion, the majority against it.

The motion was therefore rejected.

[At this stage the Council adjourned for lunch.]

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO CONDITIONS OF FACTORY LABOUR.

2-49 P.M. The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer :—"Sir, I beg to move—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a strong commission be appointed to inquire into the condition of factory labour and to consider the desirability of establishing committees of arbitration for the purpose of going into and settling disputes between employers and workmen in centres of industry and to make other suitable recommendations.'

"Sir, during the past few months, India has witnessed labour unrest of unprecedented dimensions and unparalleled intensity, which, at one time caused grave anxiety to Government and people alike. The chief and the direct cause of the labour troubles has, of course, been the high prices which have prevailed in the country for the last few years. War conditions and the failure of the monsoon over large areas in 1918 were responsible for the abnormal rise in prices, but owing to the disturbed state of things over a great portion of Europe and Asia, the level of prices has remained high in spite of the termination of the war. Wages of labour in our industrial centres did not increase in proportion to prices and the working classes had to suffer severe hardship. The continuance of these conditions became intolerable to labour and a wave of discontent and unrest has passed over the whole industrial field in India. The unrest has found an outlet in strikes which have occurred in almost all parts of the country; and the discontent of labour of all kinds is smouldering everywhere. Strikes are indeed not an altogether novel phenomenon in this country; we have had strikes now and again in the past, and they have become inevitable under the factory régime which is being established in our midst. India is at present on the eve of a great outburst of industrial activity; and new industrial concerns are being started almost every day. This means that a larger number of workmen will be engaged in factories of the modern type and will have to live in conditions which are associated with large scale industry. Overcrowding, insanitary dwellings, insufficient wages, etc., are evils which will accompany this industrial development unless proper safeguards are provided from the outset and a policy of farsighted social amelioration is adopted.

"Sir, it is unnecessary for me to recall here the history of the strikes which have taken place recently in different parts of the country and of the circumstances under which they were settled. Let me, however, refer to one or two features of the labour unrest which deserve our careful attention. Workmen in mills, workshops, on the tramways and elsewhere have not only demanded a higher wage, but a reduction of the hours of work and other important concessions. The conditions of work in factories and the terms of what is called the wage contract, which is imposed upon the labourer, have likewise been in dispute. In fact all the relations subsisting between employers and workmen have been scrutinised with a view to their modification in favour of the wage-earning classes, and thus the labour problem in India seems to assume a shape similar to that in Western countries. What is, however, particularly interesting to note in connection with this question is the fact that with a growing unrest and self-consciousness among the Indian working classes, they are not yet organized enough to be able to formulate their demands in a proper way and to represent them in a responsible manner. A few labour unions have been formed among them, but they are not yet effective organizations that may be trusted to promote, in a systematic regular fashion, the well-being of the workers, nor to negotiate with the employers in cases of dispute. The history of the recent mill strike in Bombay is instructive from this point of view. For more than a fortnight the operatives in the Bombay mills remained outside the factories, collected in masses and made occasional demonstrations. But they could not speak through the mouths of accredited representatives and had no recognized leaders. The employers, all the while, knew their own minds but could not hold converse with representatives of labour that could commit the strikers to any particular course of action. This chaos among the ranks of the operatives and their divided counsels rendered it difficult for outsiders to intervene with advantage in the dispute. It was only after bodies like the Social Service League and the Labour Settlement Committee had taken up the question, that something like regular discussions could be carried on between the workers and the organized employers. And the kindly intervention of His Excellency Sir George Lloyd was of material importance in bringing about an understanding between the two parties.

"Sir, I have referred to these facts to illustrate the peculiar conditions of labour in this country which have got to be faced. We already have a Factory Act that is intended to ensure certain provisions in factories and to check certain abuses to which large industries are subject. The Act was passed after conditions in Indian factories had been exhaustively studied. But I have to urge that the time is now come when the whole problem must be re-considered in the light of the new facts and tendencies which are visible in the industrial sphere. In other countries, the State has played an increasing part in the regulation of the relations between the employer and the workmen, and the terms on which labour should be engaged and made to serve in factories. It is a matter for sincere satisfaction that a special department of industries has been organised by the Government of India, and the provinces also have their industrial departments. I think one of the important questions which the Government of India Department of Industries will have to tackle, will be the question of labour. The International Labour Conference which recently met at Washington, and at which India was represented, is a movement of great potentialities, and its deliberations and resolutions are bound to have a profound effect upon our industries and labour. The Department of Industries will have to deal with questions connected with this world's labour movement into the vortex of which India has been already drawn. The lines of policy to be pursued with regard to labour questions will now have to be determined, and the decision must be based upon the fullest information about conditions of factory labour obtaining in the different parts of the country. It is for these reasons that I am pressing for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the whole question of factory labour and factory legislation. The labour situation in India is not now what it was only a few years ago, and it is necessary that questions concerning the employment of women and children in factories, the wages of workmen, their hours of work, the condition of their housing, and, in particular, the desirability of devising some suitable machinery, by means of which disputes between employers and operators may be settled by arbitration, will have to be considered. In the absence of well-organized labour unions in India the importance of some agency of the nature of committees of arbitration is extremely great. And the responsibility of creating such agencies rests primarily on the shoulders of Government. In other countries, the State has taken steps to instal appropriate machinery to this end, and I feel that Government in India will have to do likewise Our methods of dealing with industrial disputes may perhaps have to be different so as to suit our peculiar requirements, but the principle underlying the arrangements has to be admitted. Sir, I believe, I have said enough to show why Government should accept the suggestion embodied in my Resolution, and I therefore move the resolution."

3 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy :—" Sir, I am in agreement with the proposal made by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Haroon Jaffer. A Resolution similar to this has already been passed by the Commercial Congress. At the same time I think this resolution is a little premature. We want first of all to know what the Government has done about the Industrial Commission's report. They asked for opinions on these industrial questions from the different Local Governments. Have they obtained that information? That is the first point. Then, as one of those who were affected by the strikes in Bombay, and being in the know, I can inform this Council that our present Governor, Sir George Lloyd, is doing his best in getting all the information he can to solve the problem of labour trouble. The first question in Bombay is about housing. We have to settle how houses should be built and how they are going to be financed. Then the question of labour checks has also been discussed with the millowners. Then comes the third question of my friend about conciliatory boards. When the strikes occurred in Bombay, the Millowners' Association as a body were very willing to join the Conciliatory Board and abide by the decision of that Board; but the question, whether the decision of the delegates who might be appointed by the labourers should be binding on them, was a very difficult problem. And, therefore, although it is the very best solution, unless the people are educated and unions are formed, I think it is rather a difficult problem. I think the Government of India first of all ought to get all the information from different provinces about the conditions at different industrial centres, about sanitation, about the housing problem, about the working hours, After getting this information, I think the Government ought to appoint a commission of Inquiry into all these things on the lines mentioned by the Conference. They say :—

'In view of the present condition of labour, this Conference respectfully requests the Government of India to appoint a commission fully representative of labour and capital fully to investigate the labour conditions in India, such as wages, education, housing, hours of work, etc., and to submit such proposals for improvement as may be compatible with the healthy growth of the industry.'

" With the healthy growth of the industry,"—that is the chief problem. Suppose, for instance, the Government might think or the people might think an eight-hour day suitable, then it would not be possible for Indian industries to compete with the other industries of the world. All these are very difficult problems, and I think my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Haroon Jaffer should keep this resolution in abeyance for some time until all the different provinces have made up their minds definitely and have recommended to the Government of India what action they should take. Then only, I think, will the Government of India be able to appoint a commission and have an inquiry. I am always for all-India legislation. Supposing the mills in Bombay worked ten hours, the mills in other parts of India—in the Punjab and in Calcutta—ought to be made to work the same number of hours. There ought to be uniformity in this industrial legislation, and therefore I would welcome legislation later on."

3-4 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum :—" Sir, I am very much in sympathy with Mr. Jaffer's Resolution, but I agree entirely in what Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy has said regarding its being inopportune at the present moment to appoint a committee of this sort. The Industrial Commission went very fully into the question of labour and examined the position of labour in all provinces. They have made certain recommendations, and I understand that these recommendations have been for some time before the Government of India, and are now to a large extent being acted on. There is another very important matter, and that is that the Government of India have presumably only just received the report of the International Labour Conference at Washington. At this Conference the Government was represented, employers were represented and labour was represented, and until the reports of the various sections that were represented come to India, and indeed until the actual people who represented these interests come back again and are able to discuss the matter in person with Government, I think it is premature that this committee should be appointed. What I would like to suggest to Government is, that they should accept the principle of the Resolution, but I suggest that as regards the actual wording of the Resolution, it should be opposed."

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—" Sir, I wish to say a word. 3-5 P.M. I entirely agree with what has fallen from my friends the Hon'ble Mr. Crum and the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.

"As far as the labour unrest in India is concerned, there are many factors which are contributing to it. Of course, labour unrest is universal throughout the world, and there is no doubt that it is slowly penetrating into different parts of India. A great deal of misunderstanding has taken place in reference to the recent Bombay strikes, and public opinion was for a time against the millowners, as if they were a hardhearted lot of people who did not like to increase the wages of their labourers. To have thought so was a great mistake as events have proved. The millowners themselves had their own case; but so long as the strikers were on the warpath nothing could be done. In fact, it was a 'lightning' strike such as had never occurred before except in January 1919. Then the mill operatives organised themselves in a very threatening manner, looted shops and did one thing and another, made a great deal of row and committed a lot of mischief; and it was only when the aid of the military was invoked, that the trouble was checked. This time the arrangements were perfect, but still the operatives organised themselves even better than last year. For the Hon'ble Mr. Jaffer to say that there was no organisation, no labour unions, is not quite correct. There was some kind of union and something behind the strike. There were some agitators of a political character who have been known to have dissuaded the mill operatives from going to their work. The millowners had notified from the very first hour of the strike that the operatives should first resume their work, and then they would be offered the terms which they considered fair and reasonable. But as a preliminary they deemed it right to enforce discipline. It was not right on the part of the strikers, some hundreds of thousands of men, to go out on strike in an hour without giving previous notice in conformity with rules at all mills, and then say 'we will not return till you do this, that and the other.' There may be grievances on the part of the operatives, but there are grievances also on the part of the millowners. The latter have their own complaints to make against the operatives. Not that they are entirely against redressing the grievances of the labourers. Nothing of the kind. There has been a great deal of misunderstanding (I may say even misrepresentation) on the point which, by and by, will be cleared up, but to accuse the Bombay millowners of being a hardhearted lot and of doing nothing is simply fiction. I can assure the members of this Council that my friend Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy and I, who are members of the Millowners' Association, that the allegations hurled against the millowners are ill-founded or unfounded, are doing our work and we know about these things much better than the outside public. I am afraid the Hon'ble Mr. Jaffer has been misinformed on many points, but I do not want to waste the time of the Council by referring to each and every one of them. The long and the short of it is that the hours of labour must of course be reduced. I myself have been agitating on the subject for the last fifteen years, and my speeches at the annual meetings of the Millowners' Association will show, how far I have been in sympathy with labour. I think that the status of labour, their wages and other kindred matters will have to be recognised. But that does not mean that the millowners themselves are so very apathetic and indifferent to the real grievances of their operatives as a certain class of pseudo-humanists have tried to make out,

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

" As to the question of housing and education, I am afraid that it has been misunderstood altogether. I ventured to observe that employers of labour in no part of the world are bound to provide houses for their workers. They give them liberal wages, i.e., wages commensurate with the cost of living including shelter. It is the duty of the State anywhere to provide houses for the working classes of every kind : not only for factory operatives, but for workers in a variety of industrial establishments. The same is the case with education. It is, of course, the duty of the State to give elementary education to all classes of people, and in this Council for the last three years I have every year been putting interpollations on the subject as well as for housing, and I got the Government last year to admit, as it were, that the State has its own obligations as far as sanitary dwelling-houses and education of the working classes are concerned. I think a step has now been taken in that direction, though it is only of a most elementary character. In England, the Government have given a grant of 3 million pounds for 1919. The Indian public knows very little of the Indian labour question so far as Bombay is concerned : of course, I can only speak for my own Presidency. I have no doubt that the Hon'ble Mr. Jaffer has brought this Resolution in a very sympathetic spirit ; but I am afraid he has not thoroughly understood the question ; possibly he has been misinformed on many points. No doubt the millowners could have settled the whole trouble between themselves and their labourers if the latter had only been willing to listen to reason and had not been instigated by other people. Then it would not have been necessary for Sir George Lloyd to have at all intervened in the matter. It was only when the situation became a little more threatening and mischievous on account of the way in which the parties began to move here and there in large numbers and when the military had to be brought in (and even motors had to be requisitioned), that His Excellency was constrained to intervene.

" The labour unrest in Bombay was in a parlous state in the third week of January last, and justice and fair play demand that no partisan view should find place in this Council. I frankly recognise the services which Sir George Lloyd rendered in bringing both parties together towards a settlement ; but even before his intervention the millowners were willing to do everything reasonably possible in their power to do consistently with the principles of labour and production. At the same time, it must be observed in the interest of truth that the mill operatives were so recalcitrant, that they were obdurate enough not to resume work. That was the chief difficulty. Otherwise, I think the strike could have been brought to an end in much less time. But where the mill people were so obstinate, the millowners thought it was their duty to hold out too. I ask the Government, supposing there was a mutiny in a regiment, what would the Government do? Would they not enforce martial discipline? The Government are large employers of labour. Suppose there has been a strike at the Docks or other places, what would the Government have done? Would they not have enforced discipline before all else? If there was no discipline, the strikers would with impunity repeat every six months or every three months what they had done. The millowners really believe and fear that this recent strike will not be an end of the matter, and that the mill operatives may again perhaps have another strike six months or three months hence. The question of future economic wages has, it is true, to be considered ; but surely it has to be considered in connection with capital. If capital were not there, there would be no wages, and I do not know what the operatives would do. But these are large problems which cannot be satisfactorily settled in a day or a month. These are very large and important questions in the abstract which have to be taken into consideration from the practical point of view and by the light of experience and my friend does not know anything of these large labour questions which have been going on for the last fifty years elsewhere. I am indeed sorry that the Hon'ble Mr. Jaffer should have brought up this question at this time. The Hon'ble Mr. Crum was quite right in saying that the Industrial Commission is now really going through this large question. After all the information has been collected by the Government, it will be time to appoint a Commission. Nobody is unwilling to appoint a Commission and I believe such a Commission could be easily appointed by the Government themselves without any Resolution by Mr. Jaffer or by any other member of the Council. Of course the Government fully understand what the situtation is. If Government are going to legislate they cannot legislate only for Bombay. They will have to legislate for the whole of India, because there is a variety of industries and a variety of operatives to be considered, and in what way each kind of labour can be regulated and controlled. It cannot be that operatives should have it all their own way and that employers of large labour should sit with folded hands and even do nothing, not enforce discipline. In the recent strike the whole question depended entirely upon discipline. The men went off on strike without giving regular notice, notwithstanding the fact that there are notices posted on the boards of each mill to the effect that operatives going on strike should give previous notice, generally a notice of fifteen days, and the rule distinctly says no pay could be given while on strike. Yet they all organised and struck work. The millowners had no other alternative but to say 'come in, we must have discipline, we must not have a breach of discipline; when you resume work, we will consider your demands and satisfy them in a just and sympathetic spirit.' And the millowners did not go behind on their promised word, for, eventually, when the trouble was settled, the millowners had the same terms to put before the strikers as they had determined upon at the outset.

"I am afraid, Sir, that a great deal of misunderstanding and misrepresentation has taken place on the subject. Of course everybody sympathised with the operatives at first, but as days past the sympathisers, I mean the fair minded, admitted that operatives were a great deal at fault. To accuse therefore that the mill-owners of Bombay were hard-hearted people who wanted to cut the throats of the operatives and all that sort of nonsense, is simply unfair. I wish to take this opportunity of speaking very publicly on this question, as there seems to have been a great deal of misunderstanding with reference to the Bombay strikes, a misunderstanding deliberately propagated by designing persons. Whatever may be the question, so far as labour is concerned, Government are at liberty to do anything they pleased and none can dispute their authority to appoint a Commission."

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"Sir, I may state at once that the object which the Hon'ble Member has in mind in bringing this Resolution is absolutely identical with that which is inspiring Government action just now; but I propose to suggest other ways for tackling the questions than the appointment of another all-India Commission. The conditions of factory labour in India were regarded by the Industrial Commission as one of the three most important questions to be tackled in any measures designed to assist industrial progress. In their Report the Commission laid stress on two conclusions of fundamental importance:— 3-15 P.M.

(1) No industrial edifice can be permanent, which is built on such unsound foundations as those afforded by Indian labour under its present conditions; and

(2) the margin of improvement possible is so great that the problem is well worth solution.

"The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy wanted to know what the Government have done in these matters since the Commission reported. I will endeavour to show the Council what has been done. Since the Report of the Industrial Commission came under consideration by Government, other circumstances have conspired to stimulate activity in dealing with this difficult, and one might say vitally, important subject I propose to indicate very briefly what has been done, and is being done, in order to deal with the conditions of factory labour. When I have finished, I hope my Hon'ble friend will realise that his object in bringing these questions to an issue, and the object which the Government have been actively pursuing, are really identical. I hope then that he and the Council will agree with me on at any rate two points :—

(1) that in some matters connected with labour action is immediately necessary;

(2) that certain inquiries already started must be completed, further data must be collected, and the essential facts must be classified before a Commission can be usefully employed, or whether special and local committees will not do instead.

Some of the factory labour questions are so urgent that action of some sort must be taken before a Commission can even be assembled.

"As every practical man knows, there are conditions sometimes when prompt action, no matter how imperfect, is better than further deliberation for the purpose of obtaining the most perfect advice. There are circumstances when first-aid methods, even by the amateur, are better than waiting for the consultation of professional surgeons. It is necessary to deal at once with those matters that will not wait for any Commission, and to separate those questions that can be left for more deliberative methods, for constitutional treatment under advice such as can best be secured by a representative Committee or Commission.

"I have already mentioned the attention given by the Industrial Commission to the troubles and defects of factory labour. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy will bear me out when I say that that question received our most earnest and careful attention. Most of my colleagues possessed the experience necessary to entitle their opinions to be regarded with great respect. We collected facts and ideas from many witnesses who had made a study of Indian labour questions; and the oral evidence recorded was supplemented by visits to numerous factories, either collectively or individually. We had had at our disposal also the evidence collected by the Factory Labour Commission ten years previously, and were thus in a position to recognise the changes that had occurred in the interval.

"The recommendations of the Industrial Commission have been followed up seriously by Government, and I will just draw your attention to one point alone, which will be sufficient to show you the kind of attention that Government has paid to the recommendations of this Commission on factory labour questions. A circular letter was issued last June to Local Governments dealing with one of these questions in particular, i.e, the question of the hours of factory labour and the necessity, or possibility of there being a necessity, for a revision of the Indian Factories Act of 1911. I will read an extract in which my Hon'ble friend will recognise sentiments similar to those of his speech :—

'I am directed to invite your attention to paragraph 252 of the Industrial Commission's Report, in which they state their views in regard to the question of hours of labour in factories in India. This paragraph should be read with other passages of the Commission's Report, especially their remarks in Chapter II regarding labour in the various mills, in paragraph 142 on the necessity of primary education among the labouring classes, in paragraph 149 regarding the position and prospects of skilled artisans, in paragraphs 235 and 236 on the effects of the low standard of comfort of factory labour on its efficiency, and in paragraph 254 on welfare work among factory workers. The effect of the complete picture drawn by the Commission is disquieting. There is a keen and increasing demand for factory labour, but little apparent desire on the part of labourers to increase their efficiency and little prospect of their being able to do so under present conditions. The pressing problem of housing, which is under separate consideration, is becoming acute in some of the most important areas. Labour is growing more conscious of its own wants and power; it is showing signs of a capacity for organisation; and is generally unsettled. Industrial India, as the Commission point out, will have to face more intense foreign competition than before the war, and it is incumbent alike on the Government and on employers to examine the position together, and to decide, as soon as possible, on a remedial policy.

'2. The prospects of improving the efficiency of Indian industrial labour appear to be promising, if proper measures are taken. These measures, which include education, housing and social welfare, will require to be dealt with by a co-ordinated policy, if the future industrial position of the country is to be adequately safeguarded. The efficiency of workers is closely connected with their education, their standard of comfort; the shortening of factory hours may not prove an unmixed good, if the workers are not put in a position to make a proper use of their spare time.

* * * * *

On receipt of replies to this letter, the Government of India will consider what further action should be taken; whether, for instance, it will be necessary to appoint a Committee of Inquiry, or whether the opinions received warrant the framing of legislation, either with or without further discussion with Local Governments. You will doubtless desire to obtain the full assistance and advice of the various interests concerned in forming your views on this important problem, which cannot be satisfactorily solved without the fullest co-operation between Government and all classes of the industrial public.'

I think that letter shows, Sir, that the Government has taken up the proposals of the Industrial Commission very seriously, and have taken steps to secure the views of Local Governments and has invited Local Governments to obtain the views of industrial and commercial bodies in their own Provinces.

"The replies of Local Governments are now coming in, and we should soon be in a position to decide which matters permit of immediate reform, and which it may be necessary to refer to a special Committee or, if the Hon'ble Mr. Jaffer wishes it, a Commission.

"My Hon'ble friend, the author of the Resolution, stated that the 'discontent of labour of all kinds is smouldering everywhere'. There is no doubt about the accuracy of his description of the labour world in India. But the conditions which he describes in some cases call for immediate action rather than reference of the question as a whole to another deliberative Commission.

"I have just referred to the action taken by Government to settle the question of factory hours and to discover in what ways the Factories Act of 1911 requires revision to meet modern conditions of labour. I am quite prepared to find that certain specific questions may be referred, but I am not at present in favour of referring the question, as a whole, to another Commission. There are other questions which seemed to the Industrial Commission even more important than those covered by the Factories Act. Among these are the housing of the workers, their social welfare and education. Educational reforms will not affect the present adult workers: they will help the next generation, but will not quench the smouldering discontent that is now threatening our industries.

"Following the lead of Bombay, where a Primary Education Act (due to the persistence of my friend, Mr. Patel) was passed at the end of 1918, most of the Provinces have passed legislation to facilitate compulsory, or partly compulsory, primary education in municipal areas. So far as this goes, the movement helps to carry out one of the recommendations of the Industrial Commission, and I hope the local authorities will soon find it practicable to apply and to extend these Primary Education Acts. Legislation, however, has not so far for various reasons produced much visible fruit. I realise that there are difficulties, financial and otherwise, in the way of this, but municipalities so far have not been able to show the great keenness for primary education that was shown before the Acts were passed. But, as I have said before, this is not a reform that will allay the existing industrial unrest.

"A question of more immediate importance is, that of the housing of workers, especially in those industrial areas that have recently developed at a rapid rate. The reduction of factory hours is of no use to the worker so long as his so-called home is even less comfortable than the mill. And the question is one of immense difficulty because of the enormous cost of effecting reforms in areas already congested, and because reforms of any value require land, as well as money. The Industrial Commission devoted much attention to this question, and their recommendations, having been analysed, are now being referred to Local Governments as matters of urgent importance.

"I think every member here will agree that repeated and overlapping Commissions on the same question must result in delay rather than progress.

[Sir Thomas Holland.] [19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

To employ a Commission usefully, also, it is necessary to classify the questions and to prepare the raw material for its use. We have accumulated a mass of facts and are now busy sifting those that admit of immediate action from those that may require special study. It has been said that when the devil had exhausted all other devices for retarding progress, he invented the Committee; and the Commission, with this special object in view, is such an improvement on the Committee that its inventor might readily obtain, at any rate, provisional protection, without infringing the devil's patent rights. I would not in any circumstances suggest another general All-India Committee under present conditions for dealing with the material accumulated already.

"In addition to the general question, the Industrial Commission devoted very special attention to the alarming conditions at Bombay, where the difficulties are greatest and the necessity for improvement is most urgent. Every time there is a strike at Bombay, one cannot help sympathising with the strikers, because of the degenerating conditions under which they live; but all the time, strike or no, one sympathises with the mill-owners, because the conditions that have grown up without control make it impossible for them, either individually or collectively, to improve the life conditions of the mill-hands. I have had opportunities of studying the social welfare of workers in the principal industrial areas of India, in England, in America and Australia; but I have never seen anything quite so depressing as some of the labour quarters in Bombay. On the whole, I think, it not unfair or even indiscreet (which is worse) to say that I would rather see the mill industry of Bombay wiped out than accept an indefinite perpetuation of the conditions under which many of the workers are necessarily compelled to live. We have heard a great deal about the treatment of Indian labour in Fiji, and many of the criticisms have been endorsed by Government; but, after seeing Bombay, one feels inclined to suggest that criticism, like charity, should begin at home. No one class in particular can be blamed for the state of affairs at Bombay; it is just the result of rapid growth in a restricted area, and no one has so far been successful in removing the trouble. Fortunately, however, the question now promises to get out of the region of mere discussion, for His Excellency Sir George Lloyd has brought to the problem fresh ideas and fresh energy, with the result that a practical scheme for reform is now taking shape.

"In so far as the Government of India are concerned—whether as a channel to the Secretary of State or as a final authority for sanction in regard to the financial and legislative measures necessary—all necessary formalities are, under His Excellency the Viceroy's special orders, being treated as matters of extreme urgency. The Bombay representatives in this Council need no assurance from me that, with His Excellency Sir George Lloyd on the spot, there will be no avoidable delay in carrying out effective reforms. And these reforms will begin to take shape, I hope, before another Commission can even be assembled. At Bombay, the question is urgent on economic as much as on humanitarian grounds: each concession obtained by a strike does the worker little good, whilst it imposes on the industry an additional tax, which will be permanent, non-productive and serious.

"Another question that requires immediate action rather than reference to a commission, is the report of the recent Labour Conference at Washington. As a signatory to the League of Nations, India is committed in a qualified way to the agreements reached at this Conference, and we have now to examine our laws and regulations, with a view of effecting any necessary legislation. On cursory examination, the conventions adopted do not appear to be difficult for us to adopt, but on this point Local Governments and industrial bodies will have an opportunity of expressing their opinions. The conventions fall in fairly well with the majority of the replies now being obtained to the Government of India circular which I referred to. The principal features of importance are the adoption of a 60-hour week for a factory labour maximum; the prohibition of night-work for women in factories; the raising of the age minimum for children from 9 to 12 years; and the extension of the meaning of the term 'factory' to an institution using power and employing as few as ten workers. We have to be prepared to declare the decision of Government before the next Conference, possibly eighteen months hence; so that there is no chance of appointing another Commission to tour over the whole of India, and Hon'ble Members will have noticed that one of these conventions has already been anticipated by the insertion of a clause in the Census Bill empowering the collection of industrial information from factories employing ten or more workers. That was inserted on receipt of early information as to the conventions that were adopted at Washington.

"Another matter now under consideration is the difficult question of adopting in this country arrangements for the settlement of strikes possibly on the lines of the Industrial Arbitration Courts Act, which was passed last year at Home.

"The Hon'ble Member, who moved this Resolution, pointed out, quite correctly, that conditions elsewhere do not apply without modification to India, and that here, at any rate, there is an opportunity for a Commission to work. I agree with him partly, but I would go even further in one respect and point out that local conditions in India vary so greatly, that it is more appropriately a matter for Provincial Committees than for an All-India Commission to undertake this question of devising means for the settlement of strikes. I am willing to confess that I do not myself see any practicable way of utilising in India the provisions of the Arbitration Courts Act now in force at Home. This is a case in which I certainly feel tempted to shunt responsibility and postpone action by adopting the devil's device in referring this matter to a Commission. It seems to me, however, that the adoption of the English system is at present impossible, and so long as there are no labour organizations capable of undertaking and carrying out any form of obligations, it will not be possible to introduce anything in the way of Arbitration Courts along these lines. Similar systems, perfect enough on paper, have broken down in other countries where human nature inconveniently intervenes. This question is, however, naturally distinct and different from the actual conditions of factory labour which were studied by the Industrial Commission.

"It seems to me that by linking together in the same resolution the question of factory labour, the question of the settlement of strikes and the establishment of committees of arbitration for the purpose of settling labour disputes my Hon'ble friend, the mover of the Resolution, has unconsciously linked together, for treatment by the same Commission, questions which, in degree of urgency, are quite dissimilar, and, in nature, require treatment by slightly different kinds of specialists. To refer to a Commission all the questions included in the Resolution would be, from the administrative point of view, like running slow goods trains and fast expresses on the same pair of rails; each would delay the other. They are questions utterly distinct in nature as well as in urgency.

"As I have said I am in entire sympathy with the object of this Resolution, and as my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Crum pointed out, I should like to accept the principle of the resolution but not the wording of it. But I hope I have said enough to show the Hon'ble Member that the time is hardly suitable for the appointment of an all-India Commission just now; and I shall be very willing for him to put me into the witness-box, say, in the September Session, and cross-examine me as to what we have done to improve matters. Before then, I hope to have as a colleague the co-operation of Mr. Chatterjee, who is now fresh back from the International Labour Conference at Washington, and I hope that before then too we shall have received from the Local Governments answers to our inquiries with regard to the questions that have been raised by the Industrial Commission. I should like to clean up our shop before undertaking another Commission and proposing more chewing of the industrial cud. My Hon'ble friend, Sir Dinshaw Wacha, raised a question that I should like, with your permission, Sir, to speak about for one minute. It has a bearing on this subject, but I do not know that it actually supports my contention necessarily. It is a question that was raised recently by Sir Narayan Chandavarkar. I think everybody will agree that it would be futile to suppose that the troubles of labour can be cured only by commissions, by the constitution of Arbitration Courts, by the liberalisation of the Factories Act, or by any form of Government machinery, imperial or local. These will be of no avail if the employer fails to recognise the worker as a human being, with feelings and even ambitions like his own.

"Every one who knows the character and life of Sir Narayan Chandavarkar must have welcomed his intervention in the recent epidemic of strikes at Bombay. In an article published in the Times of India on the 13th, he describes the most important lesson that he learnt during the strikes as the general want of human touch between the mill-owner and the mill-hand. Referring to the settlement measures under consideration of the Local Government, he says—

'But all such institutional arrangements for the settlement of labour disputes and prevention of strikes will, I humbly venture to think, fail if they are not backed up by what is the essence of harmony between employers and employed—a human and humane attitude of mind and heart on the part of employers of labour. Let me not be misunderstood. Far be it from me to condemn mill-owners as wanting in sympathy for the lot of their operatives. There is sympathy, but it is economic, not human. What the operatives complain of is that the mill owners, with an exception here and there, treat them on business and not human principles' . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"That is incorrect, whatever may be the authority."

The Vice-President:—"Order, order."

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"Sir Narayan goes on to say:—

'By all means create Arbitration Boards and Labour Unions, house the operatives properly and so on; but a mere adjustment of their outward circumstances will not give the right response unless the affections of the operatives are addressed within—unless the mill-owner moves among and sees and sympathises with them in their human relations and makes them feel that he and they are one family. At present the operative is made to move apart—his world is divided from the mill-owners. And yet the mill-owners complain that the operative goes on strike because he has become the dupe of agitators who love to fish with him in troubled waters. If that is so, the remedy is with the mill-owners themselves, with their hearts first and hands afterwards.'

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Sir, I rise to make a personal explanation. I do not think that Sir Thomas Holland is quite correct in quoting one-sided views of a particular gentleman. We can give another view, but this is not the place to do it, and it seems to me that Sir Thomas Holland has stated a one-sided view in this respect."

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"May I proceed, Sir?"

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Member has already had his half hour. I hope he will finish now."

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland:—"I will close in one minute, Sir. It will save me the necessity of stating the other point of view that Sir Dinshaw Wacha has so eloquently put before the Council. I was quoting Sir Narayan Chandavarkar and leave him responsible for his words; but I think Sir Narayan Chandavarkar may be accepted by everybody here as one of those who in his life was a practical exponent of one of Jeremy Bentham's tables of motives: 'If you want to win mankind, you must make them think that you love them, and the best way to make them think that you love them, is to love them in reality.'

[19TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Sir Thomas Holland; Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer; The Vice-President.]

"May I suggest to the Hon'ble Member who has moved this Resolution that the Government of India is unquestionably in sympathy with his object, but I would suggest that he should not press the Resolution until he has had an opportunity of seeing what we can do and what we are attempting to do in the matter of dealing with the factory labour situation in India."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:— 3-47 P.M.
"Sir, my friends Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy and Sir Dinshaw Wacha, as the representatives of the Mill-owners' Association, consider my Resolution premature and inopportune. In reply, I may tell them that that is what I had expected from them. Now I must thank the Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland for the sympathetic attitude he has adopted towards my Resolution. I am very gratified to find that the Government are taking steps in the matter, and that when the necessary materials have been collected, they will consider the question of appointing sub-committees to deal with special questions. I should have very much preferred the appointment of an all-India committee to go thoroughly into the whole question, but . . .

The Hon'ble the Vice-President:—"Order, order."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:—
"With these few words, Sir, I beg leave to withdraw my Resolution."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The Council adjourned till Friday, the 20th February 1920, at 11 A.M.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Friday, the 20th February, 1920.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C., K.C.S.I., Vice-President, presiding, and 62 Members, of whom 55 were Additional Members.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :— 11-3 A.M.

Representation of the Sardars in Gujarat.

1. "(a) On what principles do Government propose to reconsider the special representation of landholders in the Provinces?

(b) Is it a fact that the Franchise Committee have recommended special representation of the Sardars in Gujarat in the Bombay Presidency, whether such Sardars are landholders or not?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) It has been ascertained that the Joint Committee's intention was that the special representation of landholders in the provinces should be reconsidered on the lines indicated in paragraphs 15 and 16 of the Government of India's fifth despatch to the Secretary of State, and this is being done.

(b) The Franchise Committee have proposed that the Sardars of Gujarat should form a landholders' constituency. If the Hon'ble Member has any particular point to urge in this connection, the Government of India will be glad to bring it to the notice of the Government of Bombay."

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Mr. Shafi; Sir Claude Hill; Sir George Barnes.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Separation of executive and judicial function.

2. " (a) Is it not a fact that there is an unanimous demand in the country for the separation of the executive and the judicial ?

(b) Do Government propose to take up the question in the opening of the new era ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"Government believe there is a large volume of opinion in favour of further separation of the executive and the judicial. They have no doubt that the new Governments under the Reforms Scheme will give the question their early consideration."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Resolution of the Government of India on Local self-Government.

3. "Which of the Local Governments or Administrations, if any, have introduced or passed legislation to give effect to the Resolution of the Government of India on local self-government ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied :—

"Since the publication of the Resolution of the Government of India on local self-government in May 1918, the Governments of Madras and of Bengal have introduced into the local Legislative Councils measures of local self-government and those measures have been passed. The Governments of Madras, Bombay, Burma and the Central Provinces have also introduced legislation on local self-government."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

The silk industry.

4. "What action have Government taken on the report of the expert employed to make investigation into the silk industry ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"The recommendations contained in Mr. Lefroy's Report on the silk industry in India have been communicated to the Local Governments concerned. The Government of India have decided that the first problem to be solved is the production of disease-free seed, and with this end in view they have decided to establish a Central Seed Station at Shillong, and have engaged the services of a protozoologist, who is now conducting investigations into the diseases of silk worms. The policy to be pursued in the future will depend to a large extent on the result of these investigations."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Liquor shops in Bombay.

5. " (a) Is it a fact that the Government of Bombay have vetoed the Resolution of the Bombay Legislative Council passed in 1918 to the effect that the power to determine the number and location of liquor shops should be given to select Municipalities ?

(b) Do the Government of India propose to request the Government of Bombay to reconsider their decision ? "

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

" (a) Yes.

(b) No. It would not be proper for the Government of India to interfere in the matter."

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

6. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following observations of Lord Carmichael appearing at page 983 of the unrevised Official Report of the debates in the House of Lords of 12th December, 1919 :— Government assistance to moderates.

'I say that the Indians must themselves make this Bill a success, but I think it will lie with us, with the Government, to help the moderate men. It will lie with the members of the Civil Service to a great extent to help them and I believe they will do so.'

(b) Will Government be pleased to say how and in what way they propose to help the moderate men in order that they may prevail?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) Government have seen the report referred to.

(b) The Government of India understand that the reference is not to any particular section of political thought, but to the cause of moderation in general. They think that this will be best promoted by making the Reforms Scheme a success, as they will endeavour to do, so far as lies in their power."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

7. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following query of Lieutenant-Commander Kenworthy and the reply thereto by the Secretary of State appearing at page 274 of the Official Report of the debate in the House of Commons of Wednesday, 3rd December, 1919 :— Irrigation and Land-revenue.

'Lieutenant-Commander Kenworthy :—Did the Government of Bombay itself suggest and recommend that these subjects should be transferred?

Mr. Montagu :—No, so far as my recollection goes, I think my hon'ble and gallant friend will find that they recommend the transfer of irrigation by a majority and the reservation of land-revenue by a majority.'

(b) Will Government lay on the table the recommendations referred to and state whether the above reply of the Secretary of State is correct?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The remarks under item 15 'Land Revenue' and item 26 'Irrigation' in annexure No. 1 to the report of the Committee on Division of Functions show that the facts are as stated by the Secretary of State in his answer to Lieutenant-Commander Kenworthy's question. As the recommendations of the Bombay Government have already been published, it is not proposed to lay them on the table."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

8. "(a) Is it a fact that the Secretary of State in the House of Commons gave an assurance that the recommendations of the people of India would be considered by the Government of India in framing rules under the new Act? Consideration by Government of the recommendations of the people of India when framing rules under the new Act.

(b) If so, how do Government propose to give effect to that assurance?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The Hon'ble Member is presumably referring to the statement of the Secretary of State that the recommendations of various people would be considered in framing the rules in India.

(b) The Hon'ble Member is referred to the answer given to the question asked by the Honourable Mr. Khaparde on the 11th instant, which explains the steps proposed by the Government of India for the consultation of non-official Indian opinion in regard to the framing of the rules. Analogous action will be taken by Provincial Governments in regard to the rules, regulations and orders with which they are concerned."

3. " Which of the Local Governments or Administrations, if any, have introduced or passed legislation to give effect to the Resolution of the Government of India on local self-government ?"

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Government assistance to [illegible]

6. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following observations of Lord Carmichael appearing at page 983 of the unrevised Official Report of the debates in the House of Lords of 12th December, 1919 :—

Irrigation and Land-revenue.

7. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following query of Lieutenant-Commander Kenworthy and the reply thereto by the Secretary of State appearing at page 274 of the Official Report of the debate in the House of Commons of Wednesday, 3rd December, 1919 :—

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

ules gov-rning fran-hise under he new ct.

9. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the remark of Sir J. D. Rees at page 467 of the Official Report of the debate in the House of Commons of 5th December, 1919, to the effect that the Government of India can make changes at any time in the franchise now settled ?

(b) Do Government propose to include in the rules to be framed under the Government of India Act definite principles governing such changes ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) Yes.

(b) The attention of the Hon'ble Member is invited to the remarks of the Joint Committee on clause 7 of the Government of India Bill. The Joint Committee have recommended that the franchise as settled by the rules to be made under the Act should not be altered for the first ten years, and that it should at present be outside the power of the Legislative Councils to make any alteration in the franchise. It is not proposed accordingly that the rules should provide for any alteration of the franchise except in respect of women suffrage, for which it is proposed to make provision in accordance with the Joint Committee's special recommendation on this matter."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Grant of the vote to ex-sepoys.

10. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the speech of Mr. Spoor appearing at page 257 of the Report of the 4th December, 1919, in which he says that the Joint Select Committee with complete unanimity once adopted the proposal to give the vote to ex-sepoys, but that later on that decision was reversed because of a telegram that came from the Government of India expressing disapproval of the proposal ?

(b) If the above statement is correct, will Government state the reasons which prompted them to send the telegram and oppose the proposal ?

(c) Do Government propose to reconsider their decision and give the vote to ex-sepoys in all the provinces in India ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) Government have seen the report of the speech.

(b) The Government of India's views on the question of soldiers' voting were communicated in paragraph 7 of the fourth despatch. Later on after consulting Local Governments they telegraphed on October 16th recommending a strict adherence to the property qualification for voters as most Local Governments, with the exception of the Central Provinces, preferred it. The views of the Punjab Government were received and communicated later. That Government, which was more concerned with the question than any other Government, proposed that retired commissioned officers as such should be enfranchised, but not retired non-commissioned officers.

(c) It is now proposed that in all provinces retired commissioned and non-commissioned officers should be entitled to vote. The Government of India believe that this is in accordance with the views of the Joint Committee."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Residential qualifications.

11. "Did the Franchise Committee or Lord Selborne's Committee reject the proposals of any Local Government in favour of residential qualifications, and, if so, for what reasons ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to paragraph 29 of the report of the Franchise Committee and to paragraph (l) of the Joint Committee's report on clause 7 of the Bill. The Government of India are not in a position to add anything to the statements which the Committee themselves have given of their views on this matter."

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris; The Vice President.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"May I ask a supplementary question, Sir? Is it a fact that the recommendation of the Bengal Government in favour of residential qualification has not been accepted either by the Southborough Committee or the Joint Committee?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris :—"I ask for notice of that."

The Vice-President :—"The Hon'ble Member must give notice of that."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Larger representation of the depressed classes.

12. "(a) What action do Government propose to take to carry out the recommendation of Lord Selborne's Committee in favour of larger representation of the depressed classes in each Province?

(b) In the rules to be made to give effect to this recommendation, do Government propose to provide that, as far as possible, no person who does not belong to the depressed classes shall be selected to represent them?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The Government of India have addressed all Local Governments in pursuance of the recommendation referred to. In Madras, where the representation previously proposed for the depressed classes was clearly inadequate, it is proposed, the Government of India understand, to raise the number of seats reserved for them from 2 to 7. In other provinces the Government of India will welcome some increase, if grounds for the same can be shown to exist.

(b) The Government of India do not, as at present advised, propose to limit by rule the discretion of the nominating authority in his selection of persons to represent the depressed classes. They have no doubt that, so far as possible, representatives will be nominated who are members of this section of the population."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Pleaders and the Original Side of the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay.

13. "Have Government considered the desirability of requesting the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay to throw open the Original Side to pleaders?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The answer is in the negative. The matter is one entirely within the discretion of the Courts themselves."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Passing of a Law under the new Act.

14. "Will Government be pleased to say whether under the new Government of India Act the Governor General can, without the approval of his new Executive Council (including at least three Indian Members), on signature make a Bill, which either Chamber has failed to pass in the form recommended by him, into an Act of the Indian Legislature?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to the terms of section 26 read with section 47 (2) of the Act."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Extension of the franchise to India.

15. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the observations of Mr. Spoor regarding the securing of a wider franchise which appear at page 325 of the Official Report of the debate in the House of Commons of Wednesday, 3rd December, 1919?

(b) Do Government propose to improve the proposals of the Franchise Committee as a result of the debate on them in the House of Commons?"

[Sir William Marris; Mr V. J. Patel; Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The Government of India have read the report of the speech of Mr Spoor.

(b) The Joint Committee have recommended that an effort should be made to remedy, in part at least, the present disparity between the size of the electorates in the different provinces. In accordance with this recommendation steps are being taken to increase largely the electorates in the provinces of Madras and the Punjab."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Budget resolutions under the new Act.

16. "Will a non-official Member of the new Legislative Assembly be entitled, when the Annual Financial Statement is under consideration, to move a resolution recommending the increase of the expenditure provided in the Budget for any head?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to section 25 (6) of the Act, which does not empower the Legislative Assembly to increase the amount referred to in any demand."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Representation of the Urban wage-earning class.

17. "(a) Will Government state what action they have taken or propose to take on the recommendation of Lord Selborne's Committee that an attempt should be made to secure better representation of the urban wage-earning class?

(b) Is it proposed to provide for the representation of the wage-earning class of the city of Ahmedabad under this recommendation?

(c) Do Government propose to call for the report of the Bombay Government on this question?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The Government of India are anxious to give effect, wherever possible, to the recommendations of the Joint Committee. As the Hon'ble Member, however, will probably realise, the practical application of their recommendation regarding the representation of the wage-earners is attended with difficulties. It will involve the creation of a special franchise, and the preparation of a separate roll for which the materials available are scanty in the extreme. A large number of the wage-earners are not permanent residents of the centres where they seek employment; they come and go at uncertain intervals; and their earnings, which must necessarily form the basis of the roll, are not only hard to ascertain, but often subject to wide fluctuations. The Government of India have grave doubts, which are shared by the Local Governments concerned, as to whether it will prove possible completely to overcome these obstacles. But in deference to the views of the Joint Committee they have decided that the attempt must be made as regards the wage-earners in Bombay and Calcutta, the two cities in which this class is largest. They cannot ignore, however, the risk of a serious breakdown when the electoral machinery devised for the purpose is put to the test of the elections, and they therefore do not think that in present conditions and with the limited organisation at their disposal, it would be prudent to extend the experiment to other towns in which the problem is less urgent."

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis asked :—

Rise in prices of ghee and butter

18. "(a) Is it a fact that ghee and butter have for some time past been exported from India in large quantities by Government or on private account, and that they have gone up very high in price in Indian bazars?

(b) If so, what is the quantity that has been exported during the last three years, and how long are such exports likely to continue?"

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Sir George Barnes; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir William Vincent; Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer; Sir Arthur Anderson; Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

"The export of ghee and butter during the last three years have been as follows :—

Year.	Ghee.	Butter.
1917-18	6,513,200	1,522,880
1918-19	4,889,352	690,142
1919-20 (For nine months ending December.)	2,802,916	480,212

It is correct that prices have risen. The exports during the last two years, however, have been considerably below normal. I cannot undertake to prophesy the extent to which exports are likely to take place in the future."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde asked :—

Overseas allowance.

19. "Will Government lay on the table the correspondence relating to the grant of overseas allowance to European British officials ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The Government of India are unable at present to place on the table the papers regarding the grant of overseas allowances. A further communication from the Secretary of State is awaited, and when the correspondence is complete, Government will consider whether they can publish it or not."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer asked :—

Waiting rooms for third-class lady passengers.

20. "(a) On what railways are waiting rooms for third-class lady passengers provided ?

(b) Do Government propose to ask the railways which do not provide such accommodation to supply this want on important railway stations ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"(a) Government are not in possession of detailed information as regards waiting rooms, but they understand that screened off accommodation in waiting sheds is provided in some cases.

(b) The matter is within the competence of railway companies and Government will bring the point to their notice."

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur asked :—

Death of an up-country man at the Howrah Railway Station.

21. "(a) Is it a fact that on the 27th June, 1919, an up-country youth died at the Howrah railway station on account of overcrowding in a railway carriage and no doctor was available at the said station to render him medical help ?

(b) Do Government propose to inquire who are responsible for allowing the carriage to be overcrowded at the starting station, and if the persons responsible have been punished ?

(c) Do Government propose to issue necessary instructions to prevent a recurrence of such overcrowding ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"The Railway Board are informed that at Howrah station on 26th June, 1919, an intending passenger to Puri collapsed on the station platform. An ambulance was immediately sent for and the man was conveyed to Howrah hospital but expired on the way. His death is reported to have been due to heat stroke and heart-failure. There is no evidence to show that it resulted from overcrowding."

[Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur; Sir Arthur Anderson; Mr. W. M. Hailey; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur asked :—

Reserved accommodation for females on railways.

22. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to two letters published in the Amrita Bazar Patrika of the 25th September, 1919, in which it was alleged that on the 19th September a European soldier entered a second-class lady's compartment in the 97 Up train, Eastern Bengal Railway, and declined to leave it when asked to do so?

(b) Has the matter been inquired into and, if so, what is the result of that inquiry?

(c) Do Government propose to take necessary steps to prevent males, whether European or Indian, from entering female compartments?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"(a) and (b) It has been ascertained that on the 19th September, 1919, a soldier was noticed by passengers of a local train running between Calcutta and Dum Dum to be on the footboard of the Intermediate class female carriage. Some passengers pulled the communication cord and stopped the train. The soldier did not enter the female compartment. The matter was reported by the railway authorities to the Officer Commanding, Dum Dum, who stated that the man had returned to England.

(c) Section 119 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, already makes provision for the punishment of the offence referred to."

INDIAN SECURITIES BILL.

11-19 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to Government Securities."

RESOLUTION RE AMALGAMATION OF THE ORIYA-SPEAKING TRACTS.

11-20 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"Sir, I beg to move the resolution which stands in my name that—

> 'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a mixed Committee of non-officials and officials be appointed to formulate a scheme for the amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking tracts at present administered or controlled by the Governments of Madras, Bengal and the Central Provinces, with the existing Orissa Division of the province of Bihar and Orissa.'

"I may state, Sir, at the outset that I have placed this resolution before the Council in response to a demand made to me personally by the Utkal Conference, which is a representative gathering of the Oriya-speaking people, who inhabit various provinces of India. At the last session of that Conference a resolution was adopted by it requesting me and the Hon'ble the Raja Sahib of Kanika, who represents in this Council the Oriya-speaking people, to place this resolution before the Government, and it is in accordance with that wish that I have brought up this resolution. The Resolution is intended to ameliorate the condition of a large number of His Majesty's Indian subjects and, if I may say so, to relieve a long suffering race who, in this particular matter, have a just and genuine grievance. The Oriya-speaking population of India is roughly 15 millions. It has been now for a long time divided under different administrations, for historic or other reasons. These scattered remnants of a great race have for a long series of years been trying to coalesce into one compact body. The Resolution I am submitting has a long history behind it as regards the efforts of the Oriya people to be brought under one administration. I need not, however, take the Council earlier than the letter from the late Sir Herbert Risley, issued by him, as Home Secretary to the Government of India, in the year 1903, in which the suggestion I am now making to the Council was made by the Government of India themselves. In that letter Sir Herbert Risley propounded the whole problem in most lucid terms and pointed out that the division of the Oriya-speaking people under various administrations was the cause of great anxiety and difficulty to the Government of India and the various Provincial Governments concerned. His exact words are as follows: 'The difficulties arising from the problem thus created have been for years a source of anxiety and trouble to the different provinces concerned' and later on he says :—

'The Government of Madras have repeatedly complained of the anxieties imposed upon their administration, by the great diversity of languages (Oriya, Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, and Canarese) with which Madras Civilians are called upon to cope and which render the transfer of officers from one part of the presidency to another a matter in any case of great difficulty and often of positive detriment to the public interest.'

The proposal made by Sir Herbert Risley on behalf of the Government of India was that the Oriya-speaking tracts should be amalgamated and brought under one administration. I find in a book called 'The Oriya Movement'—which has been recently published by some patriotic Oriya gentlemen, and in which the history of the movement is recorded at great length—that the proposal of Sir Herbert Risley evoked great interest. I find that my esteemed friend the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur, as Secretary of the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, endorsed the views of the Government, and he said that the proposal, if accepted, would conduce to much good. Similarly, I find that Mr. Parsons, the Secretary of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce (and this may interest the Hon'ble Mr. Crum) said the same thing. He said that 'the Committee do not anticipate that any such change would prejudicially affect mercantile interests'. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce thus supported the proposal. Unfortunately the Madras Government at that time under Lord Ampthill, took up, for reasons which I have never been able to understand, a hostile attitude towards the proposal. When the matter came up to the Government of India for final disposal, Lord Curzon had gone away. He had left the country and Lord Ampthill was acting as the Governor General for the time being. It is not surprising that the proposal did not find favour with Lord Ampthill and it was vetoed by him. But although it was vetoed by the Government of Lord Ampthill the Oriya people have kept up since a constant agitation, and they have never tired of bringing this matter to the notice of the Government. When Mr. Montagu came out here in 1917 the representatives of the Oriya race went before him, made a submission on this point and put their case as emphatically as they could, with the result that I find that in the Joint Report on Constitutional Reforms some reference is made to the subject in paragraph 246. It is said therein that 'we are bound to indicate our own clear opinion that wherever such re-distributions are necessary and can be effected by a process of consent the attempt to do so should be made.' So far as the 'process of consent' goes, there is not the least doubt that any inquiry made, whether by means of a Committee or otherwise, will satisfy the Hon'ble the Home Member that the Oriya people are in deadly earnest about this matter. So far as the people in Bihar are concerned, who are under the same administration as the people of Orissa, I may state that no politically-minded Biharee has any objection either to the amalgamation of the Oriyas under one administration or, if need be, to the separation of the Oriya tracts from Bihar and their formation into a separate province. I may here explain that I have been asked by some members why I advocate in my resolution the amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking tracts under the Bihar and Orissa Government rather than their formation into a separate province.

[Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The reason is that of the two schemes the one I am proposing is perhaps the more feasible and the more likely to be accepted by the Government at present. The Hon'ble the Home Member seems to be in the mood of believing that the Government as now constituted are merely marking time, and that everything is to be done by the Government which will come in under the Reforms Scheme. It is, therefore, that I think that my proposal which is that these Oriya tracts should be brought under one administration of Bihar and Orissa is a more simple proposition than that of a separate Government. It is for this reason that I have put my Resolution in this form. If a Committee be appointed and the report be favourable to the proposal, then under section 16 of the Government of India Acts of 1915-16, the Governor General in Council can carry out the measure without any reference to the Secretary of State or the Crown. Under my proposal a whole district has not to be transferred, but only portions of certain districts. A reference to the Crown is necessary only when the Governor General in Council has got to transfer a whole district from one province to another. The most important tract outside Bihar and Orissa is Ganjam, a district in the Madras Presidency.

"Excepting one taluka (as a sub-district is called in the Madras Presidency, corresponding to a 'sub-division' in Bengal and Bihar) of it, called Chicacole, the rest of the Ganjam district is, broadly speaking, inhabited by the Oriyas. Similarly, in the Central Provinces (since the transfer in 1905 of the Sambalpur district to the Orissa division) there now remain five zemindaries, as they are called, but which are parts of British India, in the districts of Bilaspur and Raipur; and there is also a group of five Indian States in that province. In Bengal, I understand that a small portion in the Midnapore district, called the Cantai sub-division, and some other Thanas have got an Oriya-speaking population. I am not giving the Council exact figures and details, I am only stating the case generally of the Oriya people. These are the principal tracts outside Bihar and Orissa on the three sides of the Orissa division, which contain an Oriya population, and the case is that on the ground of convenience of administration, and also on linguistic as well as sentimental grounds, all these tracts should be brought under one Government—that of Bihar and Orissa—for the time being. Speaking on this subject, Sir, I may claim to have some personal knowledge, for when the province of Bihar and Orissa was formed I went myself, at the request of Lord Hardinge, to the Orissa division and even to Ganjam to talk over matters with the representatives of the people there, and I have seen with my own eyes the deplorable condition of the Oriyas in the Ganjam district in the Madras Presidency. I do not mean to say that they are worse off materially than the other populations in the district, I am not talking of their economic condition, but I do say that, detached as they are from the parent body, a small community living in the midst of a large non-Oriya population, their condition is certainly far from happy or enviable. Mr. Stanley Rice, a member of the Indian Civil Service, wrote many years back a very interesting book entitled 'Occasional Essays on South Indian Life', and in it there is a chapter on the Oriyas in Ganjam. I find this is what he says of them :—

'Orissa proper lies within the province of Bengal, and the people of Ganjam suffer in that they have been separated from their brethren; they are foundling children, alien from the more favoured, because better recognised Dravidian races; alien even in the origin to which their ancestry has been traced.'

Again :—

'The Oriya of Ganjam labours under two disadvantages. He is very far from Madras, and he inhabits only part of a district. He speaks a language which is spoken in Bengal, but not in any part of the Madras Presidency save Ganjam.'

"Now, similar difficulties are experienced daily by the Oriyas, who are found in the Central Provinces or in the Midnapore district of Bengal. The Oriyas themselves place their grievance on various other grounds. But I need not expatiate on them, because the Hon'ble the Raja Saheb of Kanika, who will speak after me as a representative of the Oriya community, will tell the Council better than I can what these grievances are. I am quite sure that the Council fully realise that a small population scattered under various administrations and always in a minority in each province can never make itself effectively heard on any important question. Wherever they are, they are always bound to remain at present a hopeless minority. Even in Bihar and Orissa, where they are much more fully represented than in the Madras Presidency or the Central Provinces or Bengal, their numbers are only four or five in a Council of 25 non-official members. Well, this state of affairs can be but fully remedied when, as I hope before long, the Oriya people will get a self-contained province of their own, but that is a problem for time to come, which, I believe, the Hon'ble the Home Member will say, must be tackled by the Reformed Councils when they come into existence. But I do think that there is absolutely no reason why the Government should not be pleased to constitute even now a small committee to investigate the matter and to formulate a scheme just to transfer these fringe areas and the Oriya-speaking people in them from Madras, the Central Provinces and Bengal to the one administration of Bihar and Orissa. There will be a palpable advantage for the time being in bringing together all these scattered units under one administration. That being secured, the chances of their getting a separate self-contained province of their own will certainly be facilitated in due course. I do not think, therefore, that I need take up the time of this Council any more, and I leave it to my Hon'ble friend the Raja Saheb of Kanika to speak further on this important subject."

The Hon'ble Raja of Kanika:—" Sir, this resolution, so ably 11-35 moved by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha, has my most cordial and emphatic support. This is a question, which concerns the very vital needs and aspirations of about eleven millions of His Majesty's loyal and devoted subjects. And, more than this, this is a question which has been agitating the minds of those eleven millions for years past, and, so far as present indications go, it will continue to do so until and unless their inmost national aspirations are finally satisfied. 'Unsettled questions,' it has been said, 'have no pity for the repose of nations' and Orissa is no exception to the rule. Orissa knows no peace and wants no repose until the problem, which the present resolution attempts to tackle, is satisfactorily solved.

"Sir, the problem of Orissa is simply this; the real Orissa is something greater than the present Orissa division. The geographical demarcation is wholly misleading. Large tracts of land, with a predominantly Oriya population, now lie outside our geographical boundary and these people—more than two millions in number—most naturally and earnestly want to be united with the parent country. This is an aspiration which it will be the duty of the Government and, may I add, their privilege to satisfy. Orissa is a great country, with a very glorious past. Her history and her literature have been the delight of millions of people for centuries, her architecture has been one of the greatest glories of India. Her glorious civilisation is one of which any nation can be proud. More than two millions of people have been ruthlessly parted from those who are bound to them by the closest ties of blood, of race and of language. Common traditions, common ends and common aspirations bind them together. A common language and a common literature is their common legacy. The Oriya-speaking tracts now lie scattered in Bihar, Madras, Bengal and the Central Provinces.

"We want that all the Oriya-speaking tracts should be united to Orissa. This demand is not a new one. For a long time past, public opinion in Orissa and in these outlying tracts has made itself heard in no uncertain manner on this question. The Utkal Union Conference, year after year, has ventilated the public opinion on this all-important matter. The Oriya population of Ganjam have sent numerous memorials and petitions to Government, both Imperial and Local, praying for this union. An Oriya memorial to Lord Ampthill in 1905, speaks bitterly about the position of the Oriyas, and in 1909 the Oriya Samaj of Ganjam waited on Sir Arthur Lawley and prayed for union with Orissa.

[Raja of Kanika.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

"So far as the Government is concerned, as early as 1868, Sir Stafford North-Cote, Secretary of State for India realised the necessity of bringing Orissa under a separate administration on account of the grievous failure of the Government of Bengal to grapple with the great famine. Though nothing came out of it at that time, the matter again came to the attention of the Government in 1895, at the instance of Mr Commissioner Cooke, and again in 1908, when the Government of India in its famous letter—known as the Risley letter—actually proposed to unite the whole of the Oriya-speaking peoples both hill and plain under the administration of Bengal. The public reception of this proposal was very encouraging, except that the Government of Madras under Lord Ampthill opposed the transfer of some of the Madras tracts under the pressure of Telugu agitation. When, however, the whole matter came back to the Government of India for a decision, the Telugus were extremely lucky, because just at that time Lord Curzon had gone home on leave and it so happened that Lord Ampthill officiated for him. It thus came about that Lord Ampthill, as Viceroy, was called upon to judge in a matter in which, as Governor of Madras, he had given his own opinions very strongly himself. The result was a foregone conclusion. The transfer of Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agency tracts was negatived, and only Sambalpur was transferred to Orissa.

"The next definite stage was reached in 1911 when the famous Partition of Bengal was undone. In the Despatch of 25th August 1911, the Government of India undertook to carry out such administrative changes and re-distribution of boundaries as might seem necessary. But this was never done, and Orissa remained as she was.

"Then, on the 6th February 1918, a resolution was moved in this Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma urging the re-distribution of provinces on a linguistic basis. Mr Sarma laid down three conditions of any such re-distribution, namely, that the people should desire such a change, that they should be sufficiently numerous, and that they should speak the same language. Although he pointed out that all the three conditions need not co-exist at the same time, yet it will be seen that in the case of Orissa all the three conditions operate. Mr. Sarma himself conceded the justice of the claims of Orissa The opposition to the Resolution, however, came more on account of expediency than on principle. And the Resolution was in the end negatived

"The next stage was the recommendation on this and similar subjects contained in the joint report on constitutional questions. The representatives of Orissa including the Oriya members of the Imperial Madras and Bihar and Orissa Legislative Councils had presented a long address to His Excellency the Viceroy and Mr. Montagu praying for a union with the outlying parts. The joint report conceded the propriety of distributing areas on the basis of language, but it suggested that such re-distribution on uniform linguistic or racial tests should be made after the Reforms were carried into effect, and that the creation of the Sub-provinces of Berar and Orissa at least might be taken in hand on an early date On the 7th March, last year when I drew the attention of the Government to it by a question in this Council, I was informed that the matter will not be taken in hand except by the Local Government after the Reforms. This, Sir, may be logical but not fair to us, for after the Reforms, we are not much better off. We are as we were, in a hopeless minority in Bihar, Bengal, Madras and the Central Provinces, and what chance is there that we would get the support that we deserve? In this matter at least, the Reforms do not help us at all, and that is why we ask the Government of India to give us a lead. On the contrary, the Reforms will greatly add to the strength of the other homogeneous peoples in these provinces, which will only result in their keeping us in a still more backward position. Unless the Oriyas are also made a homogeneous and united people they cannot possibly get the same benefit from the Reforms as these other people. Rather, their position will be very much weaker than even now. If the matter is left to be decided by the reformed local Councils of each province, it will practically mean a deliberate denial of justice to us. As Mr. Curtis in his evidence before the Joint Committee pointed out. The dictum . . . to the effect that re-distribution of provincial areas should only be effected 'by process of consent' is a case in point. From whom is consent required? The question is as vital to the whole issue as the question whether the Poles in Silesia can be re-united to their countrymen without the consent of the whole of Prussia.' Further, as this matter affects more than one province, I think it is only proper that the question should be taken up here in the Imperial Council.

"The evils of the dismemberment of Orissa are so great, and are so many, that I am sure this Council will recognise that the earliest opportunity should be taken to solve the problem.

"Sir, this dismemberment has divided the Oriya peoples into several provinces thus impairing their collective strength. In each province we are left to live with much stronger and more virile races with the result that in an unequal competition with such peoples the Oriyas always suffer. Since the arrangement is lasting too long, and there is no desire on the part of the Government to alter it immediately, it is necessary to speak out. How long is this unequal competition going to last? How long must we be left to the tender mercies of stronger peoples?

"In consequence of the above, Oriya national interests are always sacrificed involving the loss of their solidarity as a distinct community, and the loss of their social, ethnological and political identity. As the Durbar Despatch of 1911 pointed out 'Orissa has long felt uneasiness at a possible loss of identity as a distinct community'. The national characteristics and the national aspirations of Oriyas are always sacrificed to those of the predominant races. And, Sir, how could it be otherwise? This unequal harnessing will always have the most disastrous results for the weaker part. The weaker part is relegated to a comparative backwardness, all healthy growth is arrested, and its distinct cultural integrity, even its national psychology and habits of life, are transformed so that very little of their identity is left in the process of time.

"Then, again, the Oriyas are threatened with the loss of their language and therefore of their literature in these tracts. In these outlying tracts, Oriya is sacrificed either as a medium of instruction in schools or of administration in Courts, with the result that very great inconvenience is caused to millions of Oriya people. This persecution of our language is one of our great national calamities.

"Again, this dismemberment results in serious administrative difficulties. The Orissa famine of 1865 with more than a million deaths gave the first warning, but this was not the last. My friend has already quoted from the famous Risley letter of 1903. I may just as well do the same. It says thus:—

'The difficulties arising from the Oriya problem . . . has been for years a source of anxiety and trouble to the different provinces concerned . . . The Government of Madras have repeatedly complained of the anxieties imposed upon the administration by the great diversity of languages with which Madras Civilians are called upon to cope . . No where are these drawbacks more conspicuous than among the Oriya-speaking people distributed . . . between three (now four) administrations and a source of constant anxiety to each . . . The Oriya-speaking group, in any case, emerges as a distinct and unmistakable factor, with an identity and interests of its own.'

"This anomalous arrangement results in the want of a close touch between the rulers and the ruled. To the Oriyas the centres of administration, namely, Nagpur and Madras, are too far off and communication for them is by no means easy and quick. Under such a system it is idle to expect any efficiency in the administration.

"Further, the present arrangement constitutes a grave political danger to the Oriyas. The Oriyas, as at present constituted, are in a minority in each province, and thus they are most inadequately represented, not only in the Councils, but also in every public or semi-public body in the country.

"As a consequence of the above, the Oriyas suffer from a loss of position, power, privilege and prestige. The advanced peoples develop vested interests and all high posts of trust and responsibility are monopolised by them. In matters of administration, they form an intermediate ruling race and being irresponsive and irresponsible, they most effectively keep the rulers and the ruled apart. Oriya interests thus fail to receive sufficient attention from each Local Government, and the Oriyas are not properly represented in the public services. Their education suffers through a lack of uniformity as different systems are pursued in different provinces according to the different needs of the stronger races in each province. I can conceive, Sir, of no greater instrument of denationalisation than this frontal attack on our language, our literature and on the uniformity of our education. I will now, Sir, turn to the advantages which will follow the unification of the Oriya-speaking tracts under one administration.

"Sir, such an arrangement will be a very good preparation for the New India, which His Excellency with Mr. Montagu want to bring about. Their 'conception of the eventual feature of India is a sisterhood of States, self-governing in all matters of purely local or provincial interests, in some cases corresponding to existing provinces, in others perhaps modified in area according to the character and economic interests of their people'. You can rest assured that you will take India a long—a very long way—towards this ideal by making a real and earnest attempt to make Orissa what she really is and what she really ought to be. Orissa is really greater than her present geography. The dream of a federal India is no doubt dazzling though still far distant, but before we attempt to answer the question — shall India's dreams come true? — we ought to try honestly to build all the steps necessary for that glorious realisation. The union of Orissa is and must always be one long step towards it.

"Then, again, it will yet save the language and literature of the Oriya people from the shackles of an arrested growth and even of stagnation. The literature of a people is its finest and greatest legacy, and that priceless asset of the Oriya people is threatened by the co-existence of other vehicles of human thought and human speech.

"It will mitigate, and to some extent even arrest, the disruptive social tendencies now working in Orissa by giving her a national life of her own, and, lastly, it will prevent the economic and industrial backwardness of the area by greater attention being given to it. Increased railway facilities, development of ports, better irrigation and embankments, a more uniform policy of economic and industrial development —all these and many others will surely follow.

"Sir, I have done. The vital needs, the inmost aspiration of eleven millions of people are at stake. A Bureaucracy is not always the incarnation of wisdom and the partition of Orissa is one of the gravest blunders which the Bureaucracy has allowed to continue. We have, in our days, seen the partition of Bengal, we have seen the unparalleled conflagration it brought about in Bengal. We have seen it described at one time as the greatest blunder of British rule in India, and at another time by a Secretary of State as a settled fact which could not be re-opened. And yet in this remarkable trial of strength between the people and the Bureaucracy, the people won. We Sir, in Orissa, draw our lessons and our inspiration from this mighty episode of Indian history. We are determined to go on until we win. The duration of our fight must be the limit of our faith. Even repeated failures and endless repulses will not make us quit. We have no desire to let a gramophone Government go on refusing to satisfy our national aspirations indefinitely. The Resolution commits the Government to nothing. Even Mr. Montagu in 1912 in the House of Commons said, that the question might be re-considered at any time if accumulated evidence is forthcoming. The Resolution simply asks for a detailed inquiry to see if such evidence is available now—an inquiry which, let us hope, will produce more light than heat. That is a modest request which I earnestly hope this Council will grant."

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Haji Chaudhri Muhammad Ismail Khan; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.]

The Hon'ble Haji Chauduri Muhammad Ismail Khan:— 11-52 A.M.
"Sir, it is with some hesitation that I rise to accord my support to the Resolution which has been moved by my Hon'ble friend. Being in close touch with the people whom I have the honour to represent in this Council, I am fully aware of the thousand and one inconveniences that the Oriya-speaking people feel in being placed under four different administrations, and I hope every member of this Council has sympathy with their desire for amalgamation under one province. And as long as it is not found possible to create a separate province for the Oriya-speaking people, the only course left open to Government is to place them all in the existing Orissa Division of the province of Bihar and Orissa. My friend Mr. Sarma has always advocated that provinces should be created on the linguistic basis and, I am sure, my Oriya friends, when they demand a separate province of their own, will find in him a ready champion. But that is not yet. And till that day arrives the only means of removing their inconveniences will be to amalgamate them under the existing province of Bihar and Orissa.

"I am aware that the Joint Committee in their Report observe. 'They do not think that any change in the boundaries of a province should be made without due consideration of the views of the Legislative Council of the province.' And it may, under the circumstances, be necessary to refer the matter to four different Legislative Councils. But I am sure the present Council is competent to express an opinion on the subject, and that opinion will uphold the claims of the Oriya-speaking people under the Bihar and Orissa Government for the present."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea:—"Sir, I rise to 11-54 A.M. support the Resolution. I only wish it had been a little wider than it is in its phraseology and in its scope. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Sinha recommends that the Oriya-speaking population scattered all over India should be brought under one administration, and that administration should be the Government of Bihar. He recommends that a Committee be appointed to consider a scheme of this kind. I think the scope of the operations of the Committee might be enlarged. It seems to me that they should have discretion given to them not only to consider a scheme of amalgamation with Bihar, but also a scheme for the formation of the Oriya-speaking populations now scattered all over India under an administration of their own. I think that represents the definite, considered aspiration of the Oriya-speaking population in India. This is only a preliminary stage. They want to be brought under one administration to begin with, which will eventually lead to the formation of a separate administration of their own in which the Oriya element will predominate. . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea:—"That, I take to be the definite aim and object of the Oriya-speaking population, and with that feeling, Sir, I am in the deepest sympathy. I am sure after listening to the very eloquent—I was going to use the word 'pathetic'—appeal of the Hon'ble the Raja of Kanika, there will be a strong feeling of sympathy on the part of the non-official members of this Council with that appeal and with this Resolution which embodies it. My friend has referred to the fact that the Oriyas are in a minority all over India; they are in a minority in Bengal, in Bihar, in the Central Provinces and in Madras. What does that mean? It implies that in all matters affecting their well-being the representatives of the Oriya-speaking population have no determining voice, and the evil is likely to be aggravated when the Reform Act comes into operation. Is there any prospect of any representative of the Oriya-speaking population becoming a Minister? I do not think there is. One of them may, but on the sufferance of the representatives of the people of Bihar. That seems to me to be an intolerable situation, inconsistent with the self-respect of a growing and advancing community. Sir, if you read the despatch of the 25th of August 1911, which announced the modification of the Partition of Bengal, you will find one argument urged by the Government itself which I now appeal to the Government to apply to the present case. They said—I am not able to quote the exact words, but I am giving the substance of their argument—that it was an intolerable situation for the Bengalee Hindus in consequence of the Partition of Bengal, to find themselves constantly in a minority in the new as well as in the old Province, and they urged that as one of the strongest reasons for the modification of the Partition of Bengal. Does not that reason apply to the present case? I do think this Council and the Government ought to come to the rescue of the Oriya-speaking population. I do hope that my Hon'ble friend the Home Member will see his way to accept this Resolution or at any rate to encourage the movement which it embodies. I do hope he will be able to give us an expression of the sympathy of the Government with the movement.

"Sir, there are other questions of partition which will have to be grappled with sooner or later. If I may once again call attention to the despatch of the 25th of August 1911, I may remind my Hon'ble friend the Home Member of the concluding paragraph of that despatch. I have not looked it up, but I think I am right in giving the substance of it. The concluding passage of the despatch says that the arrangements for the re-distribution of territory made under it are more or less provisional, and that a final arrangement has to be arrived at later on, after consultation with the parties concerned. That was said on the 25th of August 1911. This is the 20th of February in the year of Grace 1920. That final arrangement has not yet been made; that final arrangement has yet to be made; that final arrangement must soon be made, and I hope that, when it is made, the claims of the Oriya-speaking population to an administration of their own will be considered.

"Sir, we are entering upon a new stage in the history of our country, a stage of self-development. Are the Oriya-speaking population alone to be left behind? Are all the other peoples of India to march ahead of them? I am sure this is a proposition which the Government will repudiate with indignation. We must take them with us. We cannot take them with us unless and until they form an administration of their own in which their voice will be the determining factor in questions affecting their welfare and their progress. I say therefore, that in the highest interests of the Oriya-speaking population and for the definite realisation of the policy which has now been declared as the policy of the British Government, it is a matter of the first importance that this Resolution should be accepted, at any rate the Government should show their sympathy with the aspirations which it embodies.

"Sir, I have referred to the question of territorial re-distribution in connection with other provinces. In my own province that question is bound to crop up. My friend Mr. Chanda will, I am sure, speak about the necessity of re-incorporating Sylhet into Bengal. I may also add that Manbhum and Goalpara ought to form part of Bengal. I think my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha, will remember that in the year 1912 he and some of his Behari friends called at the 'Bengalee' Office and wrote a memorandum in which they distinctly declared that Manbhum should form a part of Bengal. I think I am right, Sir, in making that statement. I know it is, because my memory does not fail me in these matters. Well, there we have that outstanding question of Manbhum awaiting solution. Further Goalpara, which is a Bengali-speaking district, should be brought back into Bengal. Then, my friend Mr. Sarma has his grievance in this connection; the Tamil-speaking population and the Telugu-speaking people should be separated and should have different governments, the Andhra districts ought to be separated from the southern Madras. All these questions are awaiting solution. There is the Reform Act under which the Government is bound to consider them after an expression of opinion from the Legislative Council; that is under section 15 of the Act. Therefore you cannot burke this question; it is there. The resolution suggests a preliminary step which, I think, we should take I know these controversies are very irritating. The controversy regarding the Partition of Bengal is now a matter of ancient history, but still it haunts the imagination of my Hon'ble friend over there, the Hon'ble Nawab Nawab Ali Chaudhury, disturbs his mighty dreams, frightens him out of his wits, and in his wild ravings he thinks fit to call the Calcutta politicians a body of unscrupulous and unfair agitators. Well, these are the lingering remnants of controversies which are past and gone, but we must not be frightened in the same way as my Hon'ble friend is from time to time. Let us take courage in both hands, face the situation, grapple with this problem and solve it. It is worthy of the Government, worthy of my Hon'ble friend, the Home Member, and I am sure he will approach it with that broad and sympathetic mind which he often displays in dealing with large public questions. I think I am right in ascribing to him this attitude, and I hope he will justify it in this connection I trust, therefore, that the resolution will be accepted, or at any rate an encouraging reply will be given to it by the Hon'ble the Home Member."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, it is always a matter of great regret to me when I am unable to accept a resolution coming from the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha, a member who represents a province in which I have served, and my regret is the greater on this occasion, because I am informed, and, I believe, that there is a very great feeling in the division of Orissa on this question and indeed among Oriyas generally; and I think all of us who have been associated even in a small degree with the Local Government of Bihar have very great sympathy indeed with the Oriyas in their aspirations to be united. I would not also have this Council for one moment think that we are not alive to the disadvantages under which Oriyas suffer at present. I wish to make it clear therefore that the Government of India is in no sense opposed to an examination of this question. But it is an essential feature of the scheme of Reforms that territorial re-distributions should be postponed until the Reformed Councils come into being. May I read a passage from the very same paragraph of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report from which Mr. Sinha has cited? 12-3 P.M.

'We believe emphatically that re-distribution of provincial areas cannot be imposed upon the people by official action, and that such a process ought in any case to follow and neither to precede nor accompany constitutional reform. But we are bound to indicate our own clear opinion that where such re-distributions are necessary and capable of being effected by process of consent, an attempt to do so should be made; and therefore we desire that it should be recognised as one of the earliest duties incumbent upon all the Provincial Governments. In Orissa and Berar, at all events, it seems to us that the possibility of instituting sub-provinces need not be excluded from consideration at a very early date'.

"I should now like to refer to the opinion of the Joint Committee on this matter. They say:—

'The Committee have two observations to make on the working of clause 15. On the one hand they do not think that any change in the boundaries of provinces should be made without due consideration of the views of the Legislative Council of that province.'

That obviously refers to the reformed Legislative Councils.

'On the other, they are of opinion that any clear request made by a majority of the members of a Legislative Council representing distinctive racial or linguistic territorial unit for its constitution as a sub-province should be taken as a primâ facie case, on the strength of which a committee of inquiry might be appointed by the Secretary of State, and that it should not be a bar to the appointment of such a commission that the majority of the Legislative Council of the province in question is opposed to the request of the minority.'

"I draw particular attention to the last portion because it has been suggested that in the Reformed Councils the Oriyas will still form a minority in all the provinces in which they reside, and therefore they will not have an opportunity of making their position known or pressing their views. The position at present is this, that we have, beyond what the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha and the Hon'ble Raja have said, no expression of opinion from the Local Government or of the people concerned on the re-distribution of territory. I do not know, for instance, how far the people of the portion of Midnapore which it is proposed to separate from Bengal wish to be joined to the Province of Bihar and Orissa; perhaps my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea who represents the Province of Bengal here has some information. I do not know how the people of that portion of the Central Provinces which it is proposed again to unite to the Province of Bihar and Orissa view this question; nor have we really any adequate information as to the views of the residents in that part of Ganjam which it is proposed to remove from a province with which they have been associated for many years. It may well be that they desire that this area should be joined; but these are points on which we have no information. In any case, I would ask Council to remember what was put very clearly both by the Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis and the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri on a somewhat similar resolution moved by Mr. Sarma in regard to a community in Southern Madras when they pointed out very lucidly that the linguistic test is not the sole one in this matter. Political, historical and commercial connections have also to be remembered. In 1903, when Lord Curzon proposed to unite the whole of the Oriya-speaking tracts into one province—I have forgotten whether he intended to unite it with Bengal or make it a separate province. . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"Unite it with Bengal."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Papers were forwarded to the different authorities concerned and there was a considerable volume of opposition to the proposal. I quite admit that a great deal of that opposition was official. But I find also that the local bodies in the Ganjam district were opposed to it. I do not for a moment suggest that they would necessarily be opposed to it now. Similarly, opinion in the portions of the Central Provinces affected by the proposal was very varied then. The Feudatory Chiefs were opposed to the change that was then under consideration, and the Local Governments were definitely against the suggested re-distribution. It was in deference to these opinions that the proposals were finally abandoned. Similarly, I think Hon'ble Members will remember that when Mr. Sarma produced what appeared on paper to be a very reasonable Resolution a couple of years ago regarding a re-distribution of certain areas in Madras, opinions were very divided as to the advisability of making a change. I should like, if I might, to cite one opinion because it appears to me to be of exceptional value. It is an opinion by Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis. He said :—

'My humble experience has been against such territorial re-distribution. These re-distributions of provinces, as previous experience has shown, are not very often popular with the people and land the Government in difficulty. The general tendency seems to be to remain attached to the administration or the province under which they have long remained and with which they seem to grow in love on account of long association.'

"As illustrating the danger of embarking on such a policy as is now proposed, I will also draw attention to the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea on this resolution when he immediately proposed the addition of Goalpara, Manbhum and Sylhet to Bengal. Council will see the endless vista of disputes and contentions once these questions of re-distribution of territory are re-opened, and I put it to the Council that this is a point of some importance . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"I simply pointed out that these were questions that await solution."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I fortify this argument by quoting from what the Hon'ble Member said on Mr. Sarma's Resolution :—

'What I say is that as soon as you start an inquiry of this kind in any particular area that would constitute the signal for strife, for conflict, for controversy, for agitation, for bitterness. I ask my friend is he prepared to disturb the prospect of responsible government that was opening up for us by the weird spectre of re-distribution of territory? We know what it is in Bengal. We know what fierce, what bitter and angry passions were evoked. Men lost their heads, they could think of nothing else, they could dream of nothing else, they could speak of nothing else. Would he like an agitation of that kind to wreck the fair prospect of self-government? I appeal to him most earnestly to withdraw the motion. Let responsible government be established, I hope it will be within a measurable distance of time, and then it will be time enough for those responsible governments to take up and decide matters of this kind in a way that will be satisfactory to all parties concerned, because they will control public opinion, they will know what public sentiment is, and they will know that their positions of responsibility, of trust and power will depend on the volume of public opinion.'

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—" May I rise to offer a word of explanation. I think my Hon'ble friend has overlooked these words . . .

The Vice-President:—" The Hon'ble Member has already spoken "

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—" I am asking for your permission Sir, I do not often get up. I should like to offer an explanation with regard to the statement just read which will bear a completely different interpretation. If you wish me to sit down I shall do so at once."

The Vice-President:—" I must call attention to the rules. If the Hon'ble Member desires to make a personal explanation I have no doubt the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent will give way. But I must ask the Hon'ble Member to restrict his observations to a personal explanation."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—" It is only a personal explanation. In the first place this is a re-distribution by consent. Therefore trouble will not take place. In the second place, responsible government has been established, therefore the controversy and the bitterness and the conflict I anticipated then must now disappear. We have got responsible government and this is to be partition or re-distribution by consent. Therefore the two elements which are at the bottom of these observations are non-existent. Therefore, may I say that the quotation of the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent is somewhat irrelevant. "

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" I am prepared to leave it to the Council to decide whether the quotation was relevant or not. At any rate it has sufficed to elicit a somewhat laboured explanation from the Hon'ble Member "

(The Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea here interjected a remark while seated, which did not reach the Reporter.)

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" Did I hear the Hon'ble Member say that he has changed his mind? If so, that is a perfectly reasonable and justifiable position.

" I shall now turn to a more practical aspect of this resolution. I am sure the Hon'ble mover realises that I have every sympathy with his desire in this matter, but I feel that the Government of India is precluded by the recommendation in the report from which I have cited and by its own decisions reached in this matter on former occasions from appointing the sub-committee suggested. I am quite prepared however, if I can secure the sanction of His Excellency in Council to this course, to have a full investigation of the facts, to ascertain the views of the Local Governments and prepare such materials for the use of the new Governments as may assist them in arriving at a just decision in this matter."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

12-19 P. M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" Sir, if I speak now after the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent has explained the position of Government it is because I feel that the future safety and well-being of the Oriya-speaking people would consist in their having in time a province of their own and in their not being included in Bihar and Orissa. I believe that until lately that was the opinion of the vast majority of the Oriya-speaking people both throughout Orissa and in the Ganjam district. I will refer to a Resolution passed by the Utkul Union Conference specially convened for the purpose of discussing the constitutional reforms of Mr Montagu and Lord Chelmsford. Paragraph 2 of the Resolution runs :—

'Believing as it does in the sympathetic recognition of the special claims of the Oriyas for a separate administration as evidenced in the illustrious author's scheme in their proposal for a sub-province for Orissa, this Conference desire to place on record its conviction that unless a separate province under a Governor in Council and a Legislative Assembly with an elected non-official majority be given to the Oriya-speaking tracts, a proper solution of the question cannot be satisfactorily reached and the legitimate aspirations of the people concerned cannot be fulfilled.'

"Then Sir, the book on the Oriya movement to which my learned friend Mr. Sinha has referred complains bitterly of the proposals of the Bihar Government with regard to the representation of the Oriyas in the Council. It says that the provision of ten is utterly inadequate and unsatisfactory, and that the minimum should be five of the elective seats, and the question is asked 'This apparently is the ultimate reward of joining Orissa with Bihar without its consent.' I need not read further from this book for the purpose of showing that it cannot be said that the Oriya-speaking people of Orissa, Ganjam, Vizagapatam and other places are unanimously of opinion that their interests would be served by a union with Bihar The Hon'ble Mr. Sinha himself has stated that personally he would not have the slightest objection to the formation of a separate province for these people, but he brought this in only as a preliminary step. If he had asked for a separate province for the Oriyas, certainly I should have had very great pleasure in supporting it, although I would have had to point out, as the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent has pointed out, that any resolution on that subject would be a trifle too premature, because it is a matter for the reformed Councils in Madras, or rather for the Oriya-speaking people represented in Madras, Central Provinces, Bengal, Bihar and Orissa to say what form of government they require.

"Then, Sir, I have another objection also, I think, somewhat of a practical character to the union of the people of Ganjam and Vizagapatam with Bihar and Orissa when really their interests would not be served. I can understand their asking for a separate province. I have always believed that the future self-government of India cannot be achieved unless the provinces are arranged on a 'linguistic basis,' as far as possible, so that there may be homogeneity and cohesion, and I am still of the same opinion, but, Sir, that is not what this resolution asks for. If this resolution is accepted in lieu of the Oriyas being 4·9 millions out of 34 million people in Bihar, there would be about 6·9 out of a population of 36. That is all, and their position would not be much improved from the point of view of representation in the Bihar province. I fail to see, therefore, wherein comes any real advantage if any union is effected with Bihar. On the other hand, while it would be possible for an Oriya cultivator living in Ganjam to go to Madras within a day, and if the limits be lower down within less than a day, or say 20 hours, it would not be possible for him to reach Patna, the capital of the new province under anything less than two days or 36 hours ; and if you go to the Agency tracts, and Vizagapatam has been dragged into this discussion unnecessarily, it will be three or four days, whereas they can reach Madras much earlier. Therefore, from the point of view of administration, from the point of convenience, I do not see any advantages whatever except perhaps what may be based upon sentiment by reason of their association with Bihar. Of course, I do not despise sentiment and I am not objecting to the union of the Oriya-speaking people, where possible, but I am only pointing out that such a union instead of giving any real benefit to the people would prove a mere mockery and would merely add a little more territory to Bihar and also a little more to the difficulties of administration, because the officers from the headquarters will have to travel at least four days to reach the outlying parts, and new languages would have to be learnt.

"Then, again, a good deal has been said that in Madras the Oriyas have been cruelly suffering. While I fully sympathise with the aspirations of the Oriya-speaking people to come under one Government, I submit, Sir, the picture that was portrayed to us is overdrawn and does not represent the actual state of things. After all, you find that in the Orissa Province there are 4·9 or 5 million people roughly, and there are in Bihar and Orissa States about 4 million Oriya-speaking people, therefore the vast majority of the Oriya-speaking people about 9 millions are in Orissa itself, and surely they have not advanced to the extent that they ought to have advanced, and a mere addition of a million and a half or two would not very substantially improve the university or other attainments of the Oriya-speaking people.

"Then, Sir, I take exception to the statement made about Chicacole being the only Telugu-speaking taluq. What taluqs in Ganjam are to be included in Orissa is a question for a Boundary Commission, and we need not bring forward any controversial matters here for discussion, and it has no direct bearing on the question under consideration. I submit, Sir, hitherto we have been very much in the habit of talking as if the people belonged to a zemindary or to a province, and if a zemindari happens to be Oriya, all the talukas or all the people of that zemindary should be classified as Oriyas for the purposes of practical administration I protest against that. The people everywhere have got an individuality of their own. It does not matter whether it is a Zemindari-taluka or a Government taluk. The question would be as to whether, in a particular area, the Oriya-speaking people or others are in a majority, excluding other considerations, for a moment, and I think my friend has unnecessarily, though incidentally, mentioned the Oriya limits in Ganjam.

"Then with regard to the administration of Oriyas in the Madras Province, they do labour under some disadvantages not being a majority race under that same Government. That need not be emphasised. It may be said of others also But I do not know whether from the standpoint of secondary or higher education the Madras Oriyas are worse off than the Oriyas in Bihar and Orissa, and as they are as well looked after under Madras Government from an administrative point of view as they can be under the Bihar and Orissa Government, there is no necessity for drawing any comparisons of their inclusion in Bihar. I am in hearty sympathy with the essential principle underlying this resolution, namely, that all the Oriya-speaking people should be brought under one Government, and, while going so far as to say that I would join my friends in any agitation that may be necessary for securing a separate province for themselves, I think I must say that they would be jeopardising their own interests by coming under Bihar and Orissa where they would be an insignificant minority, with hardly any effectual representation on the University or on the Government of the Province. Nor do I think that the Oriya-speaking people are very much enamoured of being brought under Bihar and Orissa. I therefore do not think that I shall be justified in asking the Council to vote for this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, if I get up now after the speech of the Hon'ble the Home Member, it is only to express my sympathy with the spirit of this resolution. I entirely sympathise with the Oriya-speaking people who are now scattered in four provinces, in their desire to be united with their brethren, their kith and kin, with the main portion of the community who are now under the administration of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bihar and Orissa. 12-30 P.M.

"Sir, in a telegram which we received from Mr. Gopa Bandhudas, President of the Utkal Conference Council, he says:—'Oriya people bleeding in dismemberment.'

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir Dinshaw Wacha; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

"Now the Council may consider this language as rather inflated, but speaking from my experience and as one whose community has been similarly treated, I can assure the Council and the Government that the feelings of a people who are severed in this manner are certainly very painful. It may be mere sentiment, it may involve even the loss or diminution of privileges or of material advantages which union such as is contemplated here involves, but all the same it is necessary to bear in mind that sentiment rules the world more than anything else. Well in this view, Sir, my whole-hearted sympathy goes out to the Oriyas for union under one administration. I am inclined to agree with my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that it would be far better for the Oriyas to be under one administration rather than under Bihar and Orissa, but that is a matter of detail. After what the Hon'ble the Home Member said, I do not think I need pursue the matter; an inquiry will be made by the Government of India and I only hope that as a result of that inquiry the demand of the Oriyas will be met by uniting them in one Administration."

12-32 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Sir, I am only prompted by one consideration to speak in favour of the Oriyas having their own nationality and their own territorial limits. I am a Bombay man and it is really a far cry from Bombay to Orissa One is in the west and the other is in the east, and they are far apart. But what I do wish to say is to look at what has been happening just now in Eastern Europe? There, a large number of small nationalities are struggling in order to become homogeneous. There have been conflicts, and conflicts are still going on. The Supreme Council at Paris is not able to adjust all their differences; and I think the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea was right in his speech, which was quoted by Sir William Vincent, when he said that conflicts and other jealousies and ambitions are, of course, to be deprecated in this country That is the very reason which prompts me to say that were the future Government of India to be conducted under conditions of full responsibility, it is only natural that a people scattered in different places should aspire to become homogeneous in a single territory if they are not so now. I will give another instance On the Bombay side there are two Kanaras, North Kanara and South Kanara, and some of the Kanarese wish to go back to Madras and some want to be with Bombay. And for many years before the Reform measure was passed the people of Sind thought that they ought to be separated from Bombay altogether and form a province for themselves, or be merged in the Punjab. All these are indications of the trend of public opinion; all nationalities want to be homogeneous. Sindh wants to be Sindhi, Orissa wants to be Oriya and so on And I believe that in the future Government of India it will happen that all these small nationalities, which are now scattered on one side and another will aspire to become homogeneous That is a very good sign of the times, and I hope, if possible, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent would see how far the resolution of Mr. Sinha could be met by the Government I gather from the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that he is against it for very strong and cogent reasons I doubt not my friend Mr Sinha will be able to meet them; but still there are these opposing reasons here also. The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee brings forward one set of reasons, Mr. Sarma brings forward another set and the sentimental Mr. Chanda brings a third set of reasons He is a great sympathy man. Of course, I can understand differences of opinion for one reason and another, and what I should say is that, looking at it from a broad point of view and at the condition in which small nationalities are struggling all over the world to have independence of their own and form homogeneous communities under a single territory, it might be better if the Government of India would consider. perhaps a year or two hence, that nationalities like those of Orissa should be allowed to form a homogeneous province of their own."

12-36 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, I think I have every reason to congratulate myself on the trend of the debate on my motion. I must first express my sense of gratefulness to the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha for the very warm support they have accorded to my resolution, which has been moved, seconded and supported by the three members who represent in this Council the various constituencies of Bihar and Orissa. It has also received the support of distinguished leaders like Mr. Banerjea and Sir Dinshaw Wacha, and even Mr. Sarma, who has been trying to damn it with faint praise or praise it with faint damns, has, without committing himself, distinctly given it a qualified support. His support has been hedged in with all kinds of qualifications, limitations, provisos, ifs and buts, but even he has said that he sympathises with the spirit of it, and he would be glad to see the Oriyas brought under one administration. I would like to say one word about Mr. Sarma's objection. He seems to have a holy horror of the administration of Bihar and Orissa . . . .

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"I beg pardon, I say no such thing whatever. I said I want a separate province for the Oriyas and not a union with Bihar."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"I think he said it not in so many words but by implication. My contention is that while I do want the amalgamation of the Orissa tracts, still the position of Orissa in public life now is certainly very much better than it was before Bihar and Orissa were brought together. For one thing, I find that when Orissa and Bengal and Bihar were together, and before the new Province was formed, there were never more than two representatives of Orissa in the Bengal Council. Now in the Bihar Council we have got five representatives of the Province of Orissa, and it is thus more adequately represented. When Orissa and Bengal and Bihar were together it never fell to the lot of a native of Orissa to be returned to the Imperial Legislative Council. Since Bihar and Orissa were brought together Mr. Madhu Sudan Das was unanimously returned by the Provincial Council as a member of the Imperial Council. I think the position of Orissa has been improved by being bracketted with Bihar under a Government of their own. At the same time, as I have said freely and frankly, I should be the first person to press for a separate province for Orissa. I only brought the resolution in this particular form as a preliminary step to secure that object. And I shall beg the Hon'ble the Home Member, in the promise he has so kindly made of circulating the papers to the Local Governments, to include the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea and the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, which I most gladly accept, namely, that he may also include in the papers a consideration of the question as to how far it is feasible and practicable to constitute all the Oriya-speaking tracts under a separate Government of their own. The Hon'ble the Home Member in his reply to my submissions, for which I am profoundly grateful to him, for it is very sympathetic, coming as it does from him . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—"That qualifying clause nullifies it entirely."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"Then I did not mean what I said. He has done me the honour of criticising my proposals by citing a passage from a speech delivered in this Council by my old and esteemed friend Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis, who said that when the people of this country live under an administration they come to love it so much that they do not like to be detached from it. I think that was the substance of it. I have had the privilege of knowing Sir Gangadhar for a long time. He is himself of a most loving nature; he would love anybody or anything; he would love a stock or stone, leave alone an animate body like the Government. But I do not think Sir Gangadhar represents in this matter the correct attitude of the people.

[Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Mr. V. J. Patel.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

Now we in Bihar were for about 150 years under the Government of Bengal, forming with Bengal one administration, but I frankly confess we never loved the Government of Bengal. We always clamoured for a separate government of our own and we were not content until we got it. It is not true, therefore, that people who live under a Government get attached to it in spite of its limitations, and I think that proposition is not correct. However, I have no desire to pursue that matter, or to answer the objection of the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent, who seems to be of opinion that after the observations made by the Joint Committee in their Report, it is not open to the Government to accept the resolution for the appointment of a committee for the purpose I am seeking. The Hon'ble the Home Member may be right in his views, but I am equally entitled to maintain that there is no bar to the Government doing so if they choose to do it. But in view of the promise which he has so kindly made to have the papers circulated to the Local Governments, it will serve no useful purpose to argue these points at the present stage I desire to express once again my profound gratefulness to him on behalf of the people of Orissa, in the larger sense of the term, for the promise he has made, and I hope, when he has circulated the papers, including the point of forming a separate administration for the Oriya-speaking population, and when the new Councils are formed, some good will ensue to the people of Orissa.

"I would ask your leave, Sir, to permit me to withdraw the Resolution in view of the assurances given by the Hon'ble the Home Member."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE FISCAL POLICY.

12-48 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"Sir, I have the honour to move the Resolution that I read :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to appoint a Committee, consisting of an equal number of official and non-official members of this Council, to investigate the question of fiscal policy to be adopted hereafter by the Government of India as a result of the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee and devise and suggest such tariff arrangements as seem to it best fitted to the needs of India as an integral part of the British Empire.'

"Sir, the people of this country were agitating for years past for getting what they call fiscal autonomy. All shades of opinion in the country were at one on this question; to use the phrase used by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde yesterday, all parties, all shades of opinion, worshipped in the same temple so far as that question was concerned and all the deputations that went to England to represent their respective cases were agreed on this one point and pressed the question upon the attention of the Joint Committee, and the Joint Committee, as a result of the unanimous opinion of the country on that question, made some recommendations which I have not yet been able to understand quite properly, but which I will read to this Council. I will read only the relevant portions of the recommendation. The Joint Committee says :—

'Nothing is more likely to endanger the good relations between India and Great Britain than a belief that India's fiscal policy is dictated from Whitehall in the interests of the trade of Great Britain. That such a belief exists at the moment there can be no doubt; that there ought to be no room for it in the future is equally clear. India's position in the Imperial Conference opened the door to negotiation between India and the rest of the Empire, but negotiation without power to legislate is likely to remain ineffective. A satisfactory solution of the question can only be guaranteed by the grant of liberty to the Government of India to devise those tariff arrangements which seem best fitted to India's needs as an integral portion of the British Empire. It cannot be guaranteed by Statute without limiting the ultimate power of Parliament to control the administration of India and without limiting the power of veto which rests in the Crown; and neither of these limitations finds a place in any of the Statutes in the British Empire. It can only therefore be assured by an acknowledgment of a Convention. Whatever be the right fiscal policy for India, for the needs of her consumers, as well as for her manufacturers, it is quite clear that she should have the same liberty to consider her interests as Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Canada and South Africa.'

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"In the opinion of the Committee, therefore, the Secretary of State should, as far as possible, avoid interference on this subject when the Government of India and its legislature are in agreement and they think that his intervention, when it does take place, should be limited to safeguarding the international obligations of the Empire or any fiscal arrangements within the Empire to which His Majesty's Government is a party.

"This is in brief the recommendation of the Joint Committee on what we call fiscal autonomy. Now the first part of the recommendation gives the reason for the recommendation. It says that there is a belief in India that the fiscal policy of India is dictated in the interests of Great Britain from Whitehall, and it further says that nothing is more likely to endanger the good relations between Britain and India than that belief, and that every attempt should be made to root out that belief from the minds of the people. Clearly, therefore, such a belief does exist at the moment, and I go further and say that that belief is certainly well-founded. The people have good reasons for holding that belief, because, when England was free-trader, then the free trade policy prevailed. An attempt was made in 1911, I think it was by Mr. Bonar Law, by issuing an appeal to the people of India in favour of Imperial Preference, but, as the Government of the day was free-trader, Lord Crewe came out with a long speech in which he said that such a course would be an insult to the people of India. It would be placing India in a worse position than Colonies, and it would be ruinous to the people of India. I do not want to go into all that, but now, when the policy of free-trade has recently changed, we find a Resolution seriously moved by a member of the Executive Council in this very Council only yesterday to the effect that we should appoint a Committee to go into the question of Imperial Preference, because the Government at Home is now considering the question of Imperial Preference very seriously, and has in fact tentatively adopted that policy. So even after these recommendations of the Joint Committee which insist that attempts should be made to remove root and branch the belief in the minds of the people that the trade policy of India is dictated from Whitehall, the Government of India, instead of trying to remove that belief, is introducing, and adopted, a Resolution in this Council which will have the effect of furthering that belief. And I am sorry to say that the correspondence that passed between the Secretary of State and the Government of India on the question of Imperial Preference is also denied to this Council. However, that is another matter.

"I now come to the actual recommendations that have been made and the scope and the meaning of those recommendations. I find that speaking about those recommendations the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry some time ago in Bombay stated that something approaching fiscal autonomy had been granted to India. Well, Lord Curzon in his speech in the House of Lords in the debate on the Government of India Bill said that India had been given almost full fiscal autonomy, while Lord Sinha in one of his speeches in Bombay clearly gave the impression that we had been given full fiscal freedom. He said that with regard to fiscal matters India would have the same right of regulating her policy as all other Dominions of His Majesty. These are three different versions. My Hon'ble friend, Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy yesterday or the day before asked Government to explain what the extent and meaning of those recommendations were; and in reply he was referred to the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee. It is because of these different versions coming from different high quarters as regards the exact meaning and scope of these recommendations, that we seek to find out from the Government of India what they think of those recommendations, and the reply that we get is 'There are the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee; you look into them and put your own construction.' Well, we have put our own construction on them. Mr. Petit, Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Industrial Conference recently held in Bombay—what does he say of these recommendations? He says, after a critical examination of the recommendations of Lord Selborne's

[Mr. V. J. Patel.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

Committee, 'Under these circumstances I hope I may be pardoned for insisting or maintaining that what has been vouchsafed to us under the Act is not real fiscal autonomy as we understand it. If it is only a step (he is not sure whether it is even a step) towards it, let us hope that the complete transfer of it to the representatives of the people will not be withheld for a moment longer than is absolutely necessary.' This is the state of things. We do not exactly know what the recommendations mean; but the only way to find out is to try and put forward concrete proposals in regard to this matter in the form of legislation. Speaking for myself, I believe that the two qualifications or limitations which have been laid down in the recommendations deprive those recommendations of the pith and substance of them. But apart from that, if anything is really given in the nature of fiscal autonomy, it is not to the people of India, it is to the Government of India; and how far the Government of India in this matter will act independently of the Secretary of State and the British Cabinet and the British Parliament is a question for the future, because as I say, till yesterday we found that they were not free or acting independently in this matter. So long as the Government of India is responsible to Parliament, so long as the people of India have no control over the Government of India, fiscal autonomy, as has been recommended by the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament, has, to my mind, no meaning. But we have been assured times without number that fiscal autonomy has been granted by the Joint Committee and by Parliament, and therefore it is worth while now to try and see how far we can go in that respect. Of course I have stated the views that have been expressed from time to time, since the recommendations were made, by the politicians and public men and also by the Government of this country; but in the House of Commons also whilst this Bill was under discussion attempts were made by various members to find out from the Secretary of State himself as to what was the exact scope and meaning of those recommendations. I will just refer to one or two speeches in this connection. At page 512 of the official report of the House of Commons Debates on December the 4th, Mr. Montagu was invited in express terms to explain the House what exactly those recommendations meant. Mr. Denniss, who represented the industries and commerce in the House of Commons, put a point blank question to the Secretary of State. He said :—

'It is necessary that one almost supremely-important matter, which has scarcely been mentioned or thought of in the course of the Debate in Committee and here, should be brought to the right honourable Gentleman's attention so that he may tell us how far the fiscal policy of India will be controlled by the new Legislature. That is a matter of profound importance to all in this country who trade with India, many of our principal industries, many of our great commercial men and traders. So far as I can see the Bill is intended to remove every check upon fiscal policy or fiscal control of the new Legislature. As far as possible we entrust it entirely to this body of men, who in the Legislative Chamber will consist, to a great extent, of the rich men, the manufacturers and merchants of India. I believe this Bill is intended, as far as possible, to tie the hands of the Secretary of State and prevent him from placing any check upon any of the fiscal measures which may be passed, which may impose fetters upon our trade with India. The importance of that to our industry cannot be over-estimated, and it would not become me as one of the representatives of the centre of the great cotton industry, to let it pass without a warning of what may, and is more than likely, to happen in the immediate future. Our cotton industry is our greatest exporter, and India is our best market. Under the present law the Secretary of State for India has absolute control over the fiscal policy of India. So far as the Executive is concerned, he has the powers of superintendence, direction and control of all acts, matters, and concerns relating to the revenues of India.

'That power will be swept away by Clause 23 when rules are made under that clause. There is a certain protection in that these rules have to be laid on the Table of this House and Resolutions of both Houses have to be passed before the rules become part of the Statute; but the intention is that immediately on the passing of this Act these rules shall be made, and the Secretary of State will then be deprived of his powers of superintendence, direction, and control of all acts, matters, and concerns relating to the revenues of India.

'A further power which the Secretary of State has at the present time is that of disallowing the Acts of the Indian Legislature. He can intervene and advise His Majesty to disallow them, although passed by the Legislature and assented to by the Governor General. Up to the present time he has had control of the import duties into India on English goods. Some time ago we had a debate in this House on the Indian Cotton Duties. When India gave us her great contribution of £100,000,000 towards the cost of the War we agreed to the duties being raised, in consideration of a promise that there would be some day at the end of the War a system of Imperial Preference throughout the Empire in which the discrimination against English goods in regard to any of our Dominions and India would be done away with. It is the intention of the Bill that the Secretary of State shall no longer exercise his power of disallowing any Act imposing prohibitive restrictions upon the trade of this country with India. On this point the Report of the Select Committee referring to Section 33, says:

'He quotes the recommendations of the Committee and says :—

'That means the policy apparently is that the fiscal policy of the Indian Legislature is to be based on the same lines as that of Canada and South Africa. That means complete fiscal autonomy. The manufacturers and traders should know that that is the intention of the Bill.

'In the opinion of the Committee, therefore, the Secretary of State should as far as possible avoid interference on the subject'.

'That is to say, he is not to exercise his power of disallowing any such tariffs.

'When the Government of India and its Legislature are in agreement'.

'Then he goes on further—

'I rather tremble for the future of many of our industries in this country. I know the views of the Right Hon'ble gentlemen to some extent and perhaps this will give him an opportunity of making some statement on the matter'.

"The Secretary of State was thus invited to make a statement as to scope and meaning of these recommendations by Mr. Denniss in his speech which I have read. I may say here that to this query by Mr. Denniss no reply was forthcoming. The Secretary of State took no notice of it. He did not touch the point about fiscal autonomy in his final speech although he was more than once asked to explain the meaning and the scope of these recommendations. There is perhaps some explanation forthcoming in regard to a similar query by Mr. Stewart. This is what Mr. Stewart asked :—

Mr. Stewart.—'I had a motion down to leave out the clause my object being to ascertain what would happen in certain circumstances if the Secretary of State divested himself as he proposes to do, of his authority. As probably India will claim full fiscal autonomy under this Bill, what will be the position? Supposing India were to declare full fiscal autonomy, and try to make a bargain with some other country, giving that country better terms than she was prepared to offer this country. If the Secretary of State divests himself of all his powers, will India be able to legislate in this way, and will it not mean the breaking up of any system of Preference, the principle of which the present Government have accepted in a tentative form? I merely suggest that, for the Secretary of State to destroy his authority in this way is altogether unnecessary'.

This is the reply given by Mr. Montagu.—'I do not think fiscal autonomy comes into this clause at all: it is merely concerned with such matters as allowing the Government of India to act in administrative matters when it is in agreement with the Legislative Councils. All measures connected with fiscal questions will be Bills, and all Bills will have to receive the sanction of the Crown. The King has a veto over all legislation, and therefore nothing that can be done under section 33 will, I think, be likely to affect that matter. I wish it were otherwise because if there is anybody in this House who think we ought still to manipulate the tariffs of India in the interest of any part of Great Britain, I should like to test that by a division. My hon'ble friend says 'How are we to guarantee that India will not manipulate the affairs to the advantage of some body else?' What guarantee have we that Australia will not do the same? There is nothing which would do us so much harm as the slightest suspicion that we want to alter the tariffs of India in the interests of British trade. We have the solidarity of the Empire to depend upon, and the Imperial goodwill, which has always been developed by mutual trust, and I think my hon'ble friend is perfectly right to have raised this question which ought to be decided, but I do not think it can be decided under this Bill'.

So the Secretary of State leaves us to understand the recommendations in the best way we can. The Government of India does not help us and public men both in India and in England put whatever construction they like upon the recommendations. It is therefore absolutely necessary that we should find out exactly the scope and the meaning of the recommendations. There is no doubt that something has been given; there is no doubt that nothing has been given to the people of India, that something has been given to the Government of India, but we do not know how far the Secretary of State will not interfere with the fiscal measures which are to be introduced and whether he will require the Government of India to consult him before any measures are undertaken at all. As a matter of fact if I read the recommendations aright, the Government of India have no business whatever to consult the Secretary of State in the matter before fiscal measures are undertaken. The Secretary of State may in the two circumstances mentioned in the recommendations interfere at any later stage, but so far as previous consultation is concerned, he should have no voice in the matter. It appears that even now correspondence is going on between this Government and the Secretary of State on the question of imperial preference. I do not know why. In these circumstances, it is absolutely necessary that we should find out what these recommendations mean. I say let us take these recommendations in hand, and let us proceed to formulate and revise our tariff arrangements and let us make the whole ground ready for the new Legislative Assembly. The Joint Committee say that India must have the same right of regulating her tariffs as the Colonies have. We should therefore devise and formulate our tariffs in the best interests of India. Let us see how far we can go, how far we are allowed to go, and how far the Government is free to deal with these fiscal questions. It is our duty to bring the matter to a head. That can best be done by a committee of officials and non-officials appointed by this Council for the purpose of formulating a definite scheme. With these words I move my Resolution."

1-10 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"Sir, after the adoption of yesterday's resolution with the amendment moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Crum, this Resolution ought to have been withdrawn, because the object was attained by the Hon'ble Mr. Crum's amendment, i.e., the Committee will have power to devise the best method of considering the future fiscal policy of India. I think the Committee will fully consider in what manner the whole question ought to be considered . . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May I rise to a point of order, Sir? I should be perfectly prepared to withdraw my Resolution if that Committee will be entitled to go into the whole question . . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"No, no. I think, Sir, that a Committee of this Council will not be a proper body to consider the whole question. As I said yesterday, this question ought to be examined by a commission which should take evidence and go into the whole thing. It is a very big question, and it cannot be easily settled. I have also objection to this committee being composed of official and non-official members of this Council, because in our present Council we have not a large body of commercial men who alone can go into the whole question. I know that the Government of India have vast powers, and we know how the Government is going to be constituted under the Reform Act; but now we have got this, and we cannot improve upon it. I think that for the present we should be satisfied. I have been in this Council for the last few years, and I have always found that the Government of India have always been very sympathetic towards the commercial interests of this country. When the excise duty was imposed on us, the Government of India always fought hard for us and did their very best to reduce or remove it altogether. I am not a pessimist as far as the Government of India's interest in commercial matters is concerned. Not only that; but from yesterday's amendment by the Hon'ble Mr. Crum, which was accepted by the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry, it is clear that the Government of India are in entire sympathy. They want to solve this problem, and I entirely agree with the views expressed by the Right Hon'ble the Under Secretary of State, Lord Sinha. I think we must accept his word that we are going to get the same fiscal system later on as the Dominions have. But at present the Secretary of State cannot interfere. In view of the fact that the Government of India sympathise with us, I think we shall attain our object. I do not think that we should be so pessimistic about the whole question. With these few words, I would ask my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Patel, to withdraw his resolution, at least until the report of the committee which has been appointed is published."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum :—"Sir, I do not suppose there is any member of this Council who will disagree with what the Hon'ble Mr. Patel said at the commencement of this Resolution and with the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee to the effect that it is high time that India had a right to say something about her fiscal policy. But I do entirely disagree with the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's resolution as it is worded. 1-14 P.M.

"Now, Sir, I think it must be perfectly plain to anybody who has thought out the question at all that what the Parliamentary Commission meant by their finding was that the Government of India should, in future, have a free hand, or at any rate a much freer hand than they have at present in dealing with the fiscal problem, and since the Hon'ble Mr. Patel knows as well as any of us that commerce and the fiscal question are Reserved Subjects, and even Imperial subjects, it is perfectly obvious that at present the people of India should not have anything like a final say in forming a fiscal policy for the future. Now, Sir, I think it is very fortunate that it is so. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel told us yesterday,—I think I am quoting him correctly—that all Indian public men were avowed protectionists. Well, I was glad to see that my Hon'ble friend Sir Dinshaw Wacha refuted that statement, and I can recall another very prominent Indian public man, Mr. Padshah, who belongs to the well-known firm of Tata and Sons, who is also, I think, very far from an avowed protectionist. But I think that if what Mr. Patel says is anything like correct, it is very fortunate indeed for India that the Government of India is going to have a final say in this matter for some time to come, because I can hardly conceive of a more confused state of affairs than a lot of avowed protectionists who have never had anything to do with protection and never felt the good or evil of protection suddenly deciding upon what India's fiscal policy should be in the future. Therefore, I entirely agree with what my Hon'ble friend Sir Fazulbhoy said that a committee of an equal number of official and non-official members of this Council is not the right body to investigate a matter of this sort. I am not prepared to say off-hand what this body is, but as I suggested to the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes yesterday, the question as to what the right body is, might be discussed by the committee which he has already appointed under a formal resolution. My opinion agrees with that of the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy that the committee should, as far as possible, consist of experts who should visit the different parts of India and discuss the whole question of fiscal policy as it affects the various parts of India and various businesses in India taking into view the whole question of fiscal policy, not only as regards Indian industries, but also vis-à-vis her foreign imports. If India once puts on a heavy import duty on all sorts of articles which she imports merely because she thinks she can manufacture those articles herself, she might involve herself into a maze of difficulties, and I do put it to members of this Council that the matter of the future fiscal policy of India is a most serious matter. It is a matter which should be discussed with the very greatest caution. If it is wrongly treated it may lead India into an enormous difficulty. I am not saying that I am anything like as confirmed a free-trader myself as my Hon'ble friend Sir Dinshaw is, but I do say that we must act very carefully in this matter, and that we must discuss the whole thing with the greatest care and be guided by the very best advice of the very best persons before we move in the matter. For these reasons, Sir, I beg to oppose this Resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"Sir, I support this proposition with all my heart. I would have done so with some eloquence, but 1-19 P.M.

[Mr. G. S. Khaparde.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

unfortunately I have not got it. The fact, however, remains that there is a doubt as to whether what has been given under the clauses of the new Government of India Act would meet our requirements. As my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel has pointed out, there are really three or four different opinions on the point. I am not going to repeat them, but it is quite clear that there are these differences of opinion, and it is difficult to understand where or how we stand, so we bring a test case, because when a case of that kind is brought there are arguments on both sides and ultimately a decision is reached. This is what has happened in the present instance, and I take it that my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Patel has brought forward this proposition as a test case. It has been suggested that we have not got enough commercial men in this Council and therefore we are not fit to consider this matter. I humbly submit that this is met by the fact that the Government of India have got a Department of Commerce and Industry, and all information that may be required is likely to be available with the gentleman presiding over that Department. The necessary information being thus available, all that remains for us to do is to judge the matter, and as this Committee will be a mixed committee of officials and non-officials, I think it should not be a very difficult matter to reach a conclusion. I quite agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Crum that it is a very difficult matter and ought to be approached very carefully, but this is the way to approach it carefully. There is already a committee formed for one specific purpose, let us have another to go into this matter and discover how we should act hereafter, and when these two committees have met and formulated their conclusions, there will be ample material for this Council to arrive at the right conclusion. Why shut out this inquiry while the other is being made? These objections which have been taken to the formation of the committee now proposed by Mr. Patel appear to me to be not very well founded. I said yesterday that India was not at present a manufacturing country. We have not got many articles to export; we do not finish many articles here, we merely supply the raw materials, and that was the reason for my objection to the Committee which was proposed by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes, and I say that same objection which I took yesterday, helps me to support this resolution. We are mostly agricultural, and where we are not agricultural, we are only collecting raw materials to send elsewhere. In my province we discovered a whole mountain of manganese, and what has been done with that? All I can say is, that it has been carted away to the railway station and from there to the Port of Bombay and from Bombay to various parts of the world. That being so, we are not so much concerned to-day as to how we shall export our articles and whether we shall or shall not give preference, but our real question is, how we shall produce more, and have more articles to export, and then it will be time enough to determine that fact. I say this Committee proposed by Mr. Patel will help us to determine that matter and go into it fully, as to what we produce now and whether we have any finished articles, and how we can easily finish them in this country and how the tariff should be modified. We can then go into that matter and determine it. And what is more, if it is pointed out that it is not within our power to do this, then we shall know what our limitations in fiscal matters are. So, whichever way it goes, this inquiry will not only be very useful but also very fruitful. This will first of all settle a matter which has become very controversial now, some people thinking that nothing has been given, and others thinking that everything has been given, and others thinking that very little has been given. These matters need to be settled. I myself think that this Committee will be formed merely with the object of seeing the policy to be adopted hereafter by the Government of India as the result of the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee, and suggest such revised arrangements as seem best suited to the needs of India. The needs of India being increased production we have got so to arrange our tariff as will help more production. In that view of the matter these two Committees cover entirely different grounds. The first Committee, appointed yesterday, only considers how exports shall be carried on and what preference shall be given. This one is to consider the problems we have got here of increasing production and what arrangements are necessary for that purpose. So I do not see that they overlap, and their recommendations coming together might lead to a good decision and a wise decision It is really a matter that has to be gone into very carefully, and the more the points of view we approach it from, the better. It is no use approaching it from one point of view only and carrying those conclusions out. It has been said that Mr. Patel is very pessimistic. I am very sorry that observation has been made It is not a matter of pessimism; we want to discover what the position is, and so we suggest this means as a test case is brought in order to determine the application of any particular section of law. I humbly submit therefore that there is no pessimism in this matter. It has been said it would be a very dangerous thing for us to become Protectionists at this time. I have been a Protectionist from my college days, ever since I learnt the meaning of the word protection. In those days the late Mr Justice Telang wrote a book on that subject and it was discussed and a great controversy arose over it and a number of persons took part in it, including, I believe, the late Professor Wordsworth. So I have some knowledge of that matter. So far as I have learnt by mixing in the world I believe that neither Protection nor Free Trade is the best doctrine. The best doctrine I myself believe is fair trade; that is to say you see how you stand, you see what you can produce, you encourage what you want to produce and you discourage what you do not want to produce, and also take into consideration how other countries act towards you, and your policy is the result of these considerations. The point being how to benefit your country and consider how other countries act towards you, and whether it is possible for you and your Government to increase the production of what is required. I believe these are the different points for consideration and I heartily support this proposition that a second committee be formed to consider what is mentioned in the Resolution."

[At this stage the Council adjourned for lunch.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—" Sir, I understand the object of the Resolution to be that the future tariff policy of India should be inquired into at the earliest possible moment by the Government with the aid of a Committee composed of officials and non-officials. I am afraid that both the Hon'ble Mr. Patel and the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, who spoke to the Resolution brought in arguments which might not advance their position with the Government in inducing them to accept the resolution. They seemed to think that this would be a fitting place to test as to what the constitutional reforms are going to give us. Sir, I respectfully beg to submit that that could not have been their object, although they advance that as one of the arguments Both their object and our object is to see the future fiscal policy settled at the earliest possible moment so that we may have knowledge on the subject, definite guiding principles and a definite policy before other countries steal a further march upon us. 2-33 P.M.

" So far as the freedom of the Government of India regarding future fiscal policy of India is concerned, I do not see there is much room for controversy. In the words of Lord Curzon the fiscal policy of India would be largely in the hands of the Government of India as advised by the Legislative Council. His Lordship, on the second reading of the Government of India Bill, said: -

'For the first time a responsible and representative British Committee charged with establishing a Government for India have conceded to India almost absolute freedom of fiscal policy. They have laid down the proposition and the principle that she ought to be free to exercise in respect of her tariffs and so on the same degree of liberty as is enjoyed by the great Dominions of the Crown This is a change so fundamental and fraught with such stupendous consequences that I am amazed at the little attention which it has attracted in this country,' and he heartily supported the policy

" I take it, Sir, that there is a fundamental change in the policy and that the future Government of India will be at prefect liberty, so long as they are in agreement with the Legislative Council, to shape their tariff unhampered by Whitehall in any way they choose, but I do not think that there is any necessity for laying undue stress on this aspect of the matter, because I feel sure that, with this added responsibility, the Government of India would or ought only be too glad to receive assistance from the country as a whole before they shape their policy, and in my mind I have not the slightest doubt that they would safeguard the real interests of India if only the people are fairly unanimous and sensible in arriving at conclusions.

"Now, Sir, speaking on this question of fiscal policy one would have thought that the Government of India would have taken earlier steps in coming to conclusions with or without the aid of a Committee. It was impossible for them, so long as the policy was governed from Whitehall, to do it on their own initiative, but now that we have a definite pronouncement that upon them rests the responsibility in future of shaping the fiscal policy of the country they should take the earliest possible steps for consulting public opinion before they formulate their policy. Even during the war, it is hardly necessary for me to say, a Committee sat in London to consider what ought to be commercial and industrial policy after the war and arrived at definite conclusions with regard to the future policy of the British Empire and of the United Kingdom. The conclusions relevant now are summarised at page 52 of their Report. They say:—

'The producers of this country are entitled to require from the Government that they should be protected in their home market against "dumping" and "sweated goods."'

"Then they say:

'Key and pivotal industries should be maintained in this country at all hazards and at any expense. No ordinary economic rules apply to the situation of these minor but important industries. They must be kept alive either by loans, by subsidy, by tariff, by Government contracts, or in the last event by Government manufacture. They will necessarily be subject to Government supervision.'

"They add:

'As regards other industries, protection by means of Customs duties or Government, assistance in other forms should be afforded only to carefully selected branches of production which must be maintained either for reasons of national safety or on the general ground that it is undesirable that any industry of real importance to our economic strength and well-being should be allowed to be weakened by foregin competition or brought to any serious extent under alien domination or control".

"Then they say:

'Preferential treatment should be accorded to the British Overseas Dominions and Possessions in respect of any Custums Duties now, or hereafter to be, imposed in the United Kingdom, and consideration should be given to the expediency of other forms of Imperial Preference'.

Then they go on to state what is to be done with regard to the Allies.

"Now, with regard to the fourth item, we have appointed a Committee yesterday to see whether any preference could be given to other parts of the British Empire.

"But I submit, Sir,............

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"We are hardly discussing the question of Imperial preference now; the motion is for the appointment of a committee to consider fiscal policy."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Just so, to consider as to whether it is not desirable to adopt a system of preference among other things. Yesterday we appointed a committee to consider whether it would be desirable in the interests of India to admit any preference to other parts of the Empire. I submit, Sir, the time has come when the Government should give a detailed consideration to the other items also, to see whether manufactures of other countries should be allowed to be dumped here, to consider what are the key industries of this country which should be maintained and preserved at any cost, and what are the other industries which should in the interests of the nation be encouraged by means of customs tariffs and other methods. Well, when the Industrial Commission sat, there was an almost unanimous consensus of opinion that it was a matter for deep regret that the question of fiscal and tariff policy of the Indian Empire should not have been asked to be considered by that committee. But I fully realise that under the then existing circumstances, when the future policy of the Empire and the Indian Government was not settled, it was difficult to ask the Commission to inquire into the matter. But, now that there is some sort of agreement as to who are to be responsible for the future fiscal policy of the country, I think, Sir, the time has arrived when the Government should take action. Of course the policy will not be for the present dictated by the people alone; the people would be merely advisers; but the people would have a very large and potent voice in shaping the policy. If the Government of India should agree with them, then there is an end of the matter; it is not open to Whitehall to put forward its ideas on the subject to reverse our decision, subject to the Crown's voting power. Therefore, every Indian politician, every Indian public man would try his level best to convert the Government of India to his views and the Government of India would, on the merits of every proposition, decide as to whether preference is to be given as to whether tariff protection should be given and what other methods are suitable. I submit in this connection that none of us need be described as a protectionist or a free-trader. I think it is absolutely impossible for any one to be an absolute all-round free-trader or protectionist I tried sometime ago to go into this question and found that it was absolutely impossible for me at any rate to be either an out-and-out protectionist or free-trader It would be ruinous to the country to put forward any such pretentions The result may be that foreign manufacturers would come here and take the benefit of protection without doing any good whatsoever to the Indians themselves, who would be unprepared to take advantage of any protection which may be given; and the poor labourer and agriculturist would be hard hit and compelled to buy goods at a much higher rate than at present Therefore it is not such an easy matter to say that there should be absolute protection or an absolute free-trade policy for India. We have to be free-traders and protectionists alike, and have to decide each subject on its own merits, and I, therefore, submit that no good will result in characterising the present Indian politician or the future Indian politician as either a protectionist or free-trader and condemn him or approve of him accordingly. I hope, therefore, that this very important matter would not be allowed by the Government to escape their attention. I think the time has come for us to formulate our policy before other countries formulate theirs finally, in order that we may be able to bargain with them on favourable terms. It is with that object that I ask Government to consider as to whether it would not be possible for them to accept this proposition for the appointment of a committee. I do not say that the committee should be composed in the manner suggested in the resolution, and I am prepared, if there is no objection, to ask for the omission of the words 'consisting of an equal number of official and non-official members of this Council' I, therefore, hope that the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes will be able to see his way to give very favourable consideration to the appointment of a commission at the earliest possible moment."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Has the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma moved his amendment?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I beg to move, if no body has any objection, the omission of the words 'consisting of an equal number of official and non-official members of this Council' in the resolution."

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Member will hand in a copy of his amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Sir, I only want to say this that instead of having a committee, why should not the Government itself take practical action after considering the matter in the Executive Council. They should draw up a memorandum of the tariffs and other like matters which India should adopt and circulate it among all the experts in Bengal, Bombay 2-16 P.M.

[Sir Dinshaw Wacha; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

and Madras and other places? The Government adopted that method with regard to the State management of Railways; and I submit that the same procedure would prove the most practical for collecting a mass of information; and in this way eliciting a large volume of expert opinion of merchants, manufacturers and other industrial men. Those opinions will then be brought together into a focus, and the Government might publish the information gathered and the opinions elicited in order to make the public fully acquainted with them. The Government, under such a method, would be in a better position to realise the whole situation than they could do simply by a committee. A committee is after all a minute body consisting of a very limited number of people of experience in matters of trade; while in a problem of this nature we should have as large a volume of genuine expert public opinion as is possible from all the different provinces. Of course, there are different industries in different provinces, and so Government would be in a position in the end to analyse and focus all these opinions for placing them before the public and later on before the legislature. I think that that is the right course to pursue. Mr. Sarma quoted from the report of the Parliamentary Committee which sat on the question last year I have read it, but after all what are such reports? They are tentative reports, and even supposing that the present Coalition Government in England adopted the policy recommended, I am quite sure—indeed I am convinced—that nothing in the way of sound economic development of the future trade of the whole world will result therefrom unless and until some five years hence. In other words until Europe is economically settled. All these problems are intertwined and overlap each other, particularly the problem of exchange which, of course, affects all international trade. Therefore, I say, that whatever a committee or the government may recommend will have no finality and will be of little use. I think all present efforts by way of reports and recommendations will go to the waste-paper basket. The only practical way I consider, and I am convinced of it, is to elicit a large volume of expert opinion, as a preliminary to laying down a sound and broad policy as was the case in the matter of State management of railways. It is a large question of a far-reaching character, affecting the commercial interests of all India, and the Government might well follow the same course. There are a variety of experts in India who can offer most excellent opinions which no committee can get at unless witnesses are called. The procedure I have suggested is the only practical one; and so far neither Mr. Patel's Committee nor Mr. Sarma's Committee will serve the purppse in view."

2-48 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, I beg to support this motion on a short ground In the first place I have my difficulties, like Mr. Patel, in understanding what we have got under this Act in fiscal matters. I think the expression which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Crum, has used probably represents the truth, that it is not the people but the Government of India who have got some fiscal freedom under certain conditions, under the Act. But, then, the question remains that the Government of India is responsible to the Secretary of State and will be under him. Then, what is the change which the Act has made in our position in regard to fiscal matters? That is a point which we do not understand. My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Khaparde thinks that Mr. Patel's motion is what is known as a test case to find out what the position really is. But I look upon it in another light. I think, Sir, it is understood that when the Government of India and the Indian legislature agree in certain matters, in those matters the decision will not be interfered with by the Secretary of State, and therefore, Sir, I think it is necessary that we should find out in what matters our views coincide with the views of the Government of India, and for this purpose I think a Committee might be appointed to go into this matter and make a report, and then it will be seen how far the Government of India are prepared to accept our recommendations, and as regards those matters probably we shall get fiscal freedom.

"On these grounds I support the motion for the appointment of a Committee. As to whether it should be composed of an equal number of officials and non-officials or, as my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, suggests, of experts, this is a matter which does not appear to be difficult of solution, the main point is that a Committee be appointed."

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"Sir, I quite agree that the time is ripe for the exploration of the fiscal question in India, and yesterday I accepted Mr. Crum's amendment to my Resolution and I hoped up to a short time ago that this amendment had satisfied the Hon'ble Mr. Patel and the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy. I hoped that the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma also had agreed. The amendment provided that the Committee should report on 'the best mothods of considering the future fiscal policy in India.' Now Mr. Sarma says 'let us jump to the conclusion that a Committee is the right way.' The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha does not think that a Committee is the right way. Surely the best thing we can do in the circumstances is to follow the amendment which Mr. Crum proposed yesterday, and which I accepted. The Committee to be appointed under the Resolution moved by me yesterday will be largely composed of commercial men, and one Committee at a time is enough. I am afraid I cannot accept either the Resolution or the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's amendment. I am not willing to go beyond the amendment that was proposed to the Resolution yesterday. I am not quite sure that I fully understand what Mr. Patel's object is and what it is that he wishes. From one part of his speech I gathered he wished to clear up what he thought were obscurities in the Report of the Joint Committee on clause 33 of the Government of India Bill. In any case I do not think a Committee of officials and non-officials is the best method of clearing up obscurities in the Report of the Joint Committee. To me the Report does not seem obscure, and read with what Mr. Sarma has quoted, and what Mr. Patel has himself quoted, I think all obscurities are brushed away. It is clear however that on this matter none of us can put an authoritative gloss on the words of the Joint Committee. In another part of his speech he seemed to think that a Committee of this Council would be the proper body to advise on the fiscal policy of India. Now I do not propose to add anything to what Mr. Crum has said and to what Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy has said on the point. I feel sure that a Committee of this Council would not be the best body to go into this matter. There is one little point in the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's speech to which I should like to refer. He complains that my Resolution of yesterday would encourage the belief—I think I have taken down his words correctly—that the fiscal policy of India is dictated from Whitehall. I can hardly believe that this can possibly be the result of my Resolution. The object of the Resolution was to take the members of this Council fully into the confidence of the Government and to ask them to discuss the policy of Imperial Preference. How can that be suggested as a course that would encourage the belief that India's policy was dictated from Whitehall? I have nothing more to say except to correct a statement which Mr. Khaparde made in the course of his speech to-day, and I think that he made the same statement in his speech of yesterday. He said that the exports of India were confined to raw products Now I should like to assure the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde that he is mistaken there. I should like to present to him a small handbook of commercial information relating to India which will show him that Indian exports are not confined to raw materials. I will give a few figures. The export of jute manufactures from India last year amounted to 35 millions sterling; cotton manufactures £9,300,000; tea £11,850,000. These figures are taken from a small handbook which has just been written for the Government of India by Mr. Charles Cotton, who was lately Collector of Customs, Calcutta. I feel sure that the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde will find a great deal of useful information in it and I will send him a copy." 2-50 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Member who just sat down told us that I suggested during my speech that the acceptance of the Resolution on Imperial preference yesterday would create the belief in the minds of the Indian people that the trade policy of India was dictated from Whitehall. I do not wish to say that I never made that statement; the fact is that that is so. Who asked for the consideration of the question of Imperial preference at this time and for the appointment of a Committee of this Council for the purpose? May I know? The Government of India comes forward with a proposal regarding Imperial preference when the Joint Committee has recommended fiscal autonomy for India. We want to know whether the Government of India of their own accord moved the Resolution 2-56 P.M.

on the subject, or whether they were inspired by the Whitehall authorities. My Hon'ble friend, Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy, the other day asked a definite question in regard to the correspondence that passed between the Government of India and the Secretary of State on the subject of Imperial preference. We were told that that was confidential and could not be laid on the Council table. How are we to believe that it was for the good of the people of India that at this juncture Government should bring forward a Resolution for a Committee to consider the question of Imperial preference? How can we believe considering our past experience in the matter of dictation from Whitehall of the trade policy of India that the Resolution is not the result of the correspondence between Whitehall and Simla? The Government of India should at this moment be really considering the question of formulating tariff proposals in the light of the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee. Instead, we have actually appointed a Committee to consider the question of Imperial preference. What further evidence is necessary to show to the people of India that our trade policy is still being influenced by the Authorities at Whitehall? The attitude taken by the Government of India on this Resolution recommending the appointment of a Committee to consider the whole question of tariffs will certainly further that belief and not in any way tend to remove it. It is very unfortunate that the Government of India have taken up this attitude in regard to the Resolution. Mr Khaparde said the Resolution was in the nature of a test case. My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda, did not agree with that view, and the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Commerce and Industry Department said he did not understand what my object was in moving this Resolution. My object is clear. The Joint Committee in their recommendations say 'a satisfactory solution of the question can only be guaranteed by granting liberty to the Government of India to devise such tariff arrangements as seem best fitted to the needs of India as an integral portion of His Majesty's Empire.' Compare these words with my Resolution. I wish the Government of India to appoint a Committee to consider the question of tariff arrangements which seem best fitted to the needs of India as an integral portion of the British Empire. I want these recommendations of the Joint Committee to be acted upon. The question of Imperial Preference should not be considered at this moment, but in view of the recommendations of the Joint Committee, what we should now set about doing is to consider and formulate proposals for the purpose of imposing tariffs under the new powers given to us. I may say at once that Mr Sarma's amendment I accept. I do not say that a Committee of this Council would be better fitted to undertake the task than a Committee of commercial experts. I do not at all suggest that a Committee of this Council would be better fitted for the purpose than a Committee of commercial magnates like my friends the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy and the Hon'ble Mr. Crum. Let them be members of that Committee. Let Government appoint them and some other commercial magnates. I do not for a moment say that a Committee of this Council alone should go into the whole question. What I want really is a Committee of officials and non-officials. Let them sit together and consider these recommendations and find out what tariff would suit the best interests of India. That is the only thing that I want, but I am sorry to find that you accept a resolution in favour of Imperial preference and you oppose a resolution to consider the question of tariffs. I do not think that my Hon'ble friend, Sir Fazulbhoy, would object to the Committee which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma's amendment proposes and which I accept, because his sole objection to my Resolution was that a Committee of this Council would not be a proper body to consider this question. I see no reason why I should not press this Resolution to a division. The Hon'ble Mr. Crum's amendment which was accepted by the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes yesterday does not satisfy the requirements of the case. What does his amendment say? It says that the Committee appointed yesterday should consider what methods should be adopted for the purpose of examining this question. That Committee will sit and consider the question and recommend the appointment of another Committee. What else could they say? They will perhaps go further and say that the new Committee should go round and take evidence in different provinces and then make a report. I say all right, by all means appoint another Committee. I do not want the same Committee to go into the question.

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; The Vice-President.]

But what I cannot understand is this, when the trade statistics are all ready, when one Committee has been entrusted with the work of going into the whole question of Imperial prefernce, why should not the same Committee with the same statistics with such members on that Committee as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Crum, Sir Fazulbhoy and the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha, why should they not at the same time go into the whole question of tariff and make their recommendations? I do not see the slightest objection to that course, but if the course which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma suggests is acceptable to some members of this Council, I have not the slightest objection to adopt it. I trust the Council will accept this Resolution and will not help to further the belief, which exists in the minds of the Indian people, that the trade policy of India is still being dictated from Whitehall."

The Vice-President:—"Inasmuch as the Hon'ble Mr. Patel fairly accepts the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, I will first put the Resolution as amended by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to the Council. The Resolution as so amended will run as follows:—

'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to appoint a Committee to investigate the question of fiscal policy to be adopted hereafter by the Government of India as a result of the recommendations of Lord Selborne's Committee and devise and suggest such tariff arrangements as seem to it best fitted to the needs of India as an integral part of the British Empire'."

[The Vice-President; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.] [20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Vice-President :—"I understand the Hon'ble Member does not desire me to put his original Resolution?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"No, not at all."

RESOLUTION RE AMENDMENT OF THE SECOND SCHEDULE OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1919 IN REGARD TO THE POSITION OF BIHAR AND ORISSA.

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"Sir, I move the following Resolution, namely :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to urge upon the Secretary of State for India the extreme desirability of taking early steps to get the second Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1919 (9 and 10 Geo. 5), so amended, that Bihar and Orissa be removed from the group of provinces in which it is placed in the said Schedule and be included in the group the 'maximum annual salary' of the Governors of which is fixed at one hundred and twenty-eight thousand rupees and that of the members of the Executive Council at sixty-four thousand rupees.'

"Sir, since I gave notice of this motion many of my non-official Indian friends have asked me in tones of deprecation what on earth I mean by bringing up a proposition the object of which apparently is to increase the salaries of officials! They say that my duty as a representative of the taxpayers is to cut down the salaries of officials and make them work, if possible, for nothing. That being so, they ask why I should be anxious to increase the annual salary of the Governor of the Bihar and Orissa by Rs. 28,000 and of the Members of the Executive Council of that Province by Rs. 4,000. This certainly requires an explanation. My answer is that this is but the technical form in which I had to cast my resolution, if I am to convey to the Council what exactly I mean by submitting it. As the matter under consideration in this Resolution is dealt with in the second Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1919, in which it is placed under the list of official salaries, I had to cast my Resolution in that particular form, but the sum and substance of my proposition is, that Bihar and Orissa should have what is popularly known as the Presidency form of government, which has now been conferred upon the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. Viewed in the light of this explanation I hope I shall be able to carry with me the sympathy of this Council, after I have made my submissions. Now the position of Bihar and Orissa in this matter is quite clear, and to be able to appreciate the point involved, we shall have to go back to the history of this institution of Executive Councils and Presidency Government. In 1833, all the British territories in Northern India were popularly known as the Bengal Presidency. When the Charter of the East India Company was renewed in that year by a Parliamentary Statute, it was laid down that the British territories in Northern India having overgrown, the Government were to divide them into two Presidencies, to be called the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal and the Presidency of Agra. The scheme of the Presidency of Agra, however, was not carried out at the time. Two years later another Act was passed by Parliament suspending the operation of the Act of 1833, and modifying it to the extent that a Lieutenant-Governor be appointed for the Presidency of Agra under the name of the North-Western Provinces. The result was that, whereas the North-Western Provinces got a Lieutenant-Governorship, the Presidency of Fort William, which included Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, remained under the direct management and control of the Governor General, he also being the Governor of the Presidency. From time to time the Governor General used to appoint a Deputy Governor, when leading expeditions into the Punjab or travelling about in distant parts of the country in those pre-railway days, but the arrangement was found to be unsatisfactory and naturally led to bad administration. The result was that in 1853, when the Company's Charter again came to be renewed, an Act of Parliament was passed providing that for the Presidency of Fort William, namely, for Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, there might be appointed a Governor, as in the case of Madras and Bombay, but that failing that the Directors might appoint a Lieutenant-Governor to carry on the administration under the Governor General acting as Governor. As a result of this Act Sir Frederick Halliday was appointed as the first Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa in 1854, but the power vested in the Government of appointing a Governor for Bengal, Bihar and Orissa was not exhausted but continued unused till 1912 when, under the King-Emperor's proclamation, Bengal proper was raised to the status of a Presidency Government I have tried to show that under this Act of 1853 not only Bengal proper, but the whole Presidency of Fort William, including Bihar and Orissa also, were promised a Governorship in Council, and that that power was to be used whenever the Governor General ceased to be technically the Governor of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa.

"In 1912, after His Majesty's Proclamation in this very city of Delhi, a notification was issued that the Governor General of India ceased from the date of the notification to be the Governor of the Presidency, and that in his place Lord Carmichael was appointed to be the Governor of Bengal. But my contention is that His Majesty's Ministers did not properly advise His Majesty in requesting him to constitute only Bengal proper as a Presidency and to leave Bihar and Orissa under a Lieutenant-Governor in Council. The law of 1853 contemplated that all these three Provinces, Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, should be raised to the status of Presidency Government, and it was not fair to us, therefore, to leave Bihar and Orissa under a Lieutenant-Governor. However, as perhaps a solatium to us we were given an Executive Council, and the present administration of Bihar and Orissa, therefore, continues to be under a Lieutenant-Governor in Council, that is under an Executive Council. We expected, however, that when the new reforms would come into operation, our claim to a higher status, as a vested interest, would be considered by His Majesty's Government, but I find that according to the second Schedule of the Reform Act, the Province of Bihar and Orissa have been left in the cold shade of neglect and have been grouped administratively with the Punjab. Now, personally, I have a great admiration for the Punjab with which, as the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi will bear me out, I have been intimately connected for the last twenty-five years. But, so far as administration is concerned, my contention is that Bihar and Orissa are entitled to enjoy as a vested right the benefits of a higher system of administration than the Punjab. You, Sir, may remember—I was not in the Council at the time—that, about two years ago, the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi himself moved a Resolution in this Council that the system of administration in the Punjab should be assimilated to that of Bihar and Orissa. This led to a very interesting and memorable debate in which Sir Michael O'Dwyer took a very prominent part; I think you were in the chair at the time, Sir. Well, Mr. Shafi having moved that the system of the Punjab administration might be assimilated to that of Bihar and Orissa, I confess I am a little surprised to find that, in a sense, Bihar and Orissa themselves, far from having been a given higher status, have now been brought down to the level of the Punjab! That, I confess, is a little hard upon them I think, therefore, on these legal, historical and constitutional grounds, that I am justified in my contention that Bihar and Orissa are entitled to be made a Presidency Government. But I do not base my contention solely upon these grounds of law and constitution. I think that, judged by any reasonable standard, the Province is entitled to the Presidency form of government. For one thing, as I have already told the Council, Bihar and Orissa is the only Lieutenant-Governorship in the Indian Empire which at present has got an Executive Council. I am far from grudging Agra and Oudh their good fortune in having been able to secure for themselves a higher system of administration. On the contrary, I am highly gratified, for if it may not be considered improper for me to make a personal reference, I myself moved a Resolution some years back in this Council that the Provinces of Agra and Oudh might be given an Executive Council. That was the beginning of the agitation which has ultimately resulted in the Provinces of Agra and Oudh being given this higher status of a presidency government But the thing works out like this. The United Provinces comprise, as we know, two sub-provinces, the old North-West Provinces, now called the Province of Agra and the Province of Oudh. Now the Province of Oudh (which is represented in this Council so ably by my Hon'ble friend Raja Sir Rampal Singh) was not even a part of British India in either 1833 or in 1854, at the time when Bengal and Bihar and Orissa were promised presidency government. It came into the British Empire in 1856, and yet from the mere accident of its having been amalgamated since with the Province of Agra, although it was never promised a presidency form of government, it has now come to enjoy that higher status. Personally, I am very glad indeed that my fellow-countrymen in Oudh have got the benefits of this higher administrative status, but it does not stand to reason why in spite of their vested right Bihar and Orissa should have been passed over in silence. I think I am justified in making a grievance against the Government of India that in this particular matter they have ignored the just claims of the people of Bihar and Orissa. It might be asked, however, what is the reason that we are so insistent in this matter by pressing the claims of Bihar and Orissa? What does it matter if the Province of Bihar and Orissa should rank only as a second class governorship—for under the new Reform Act the expression 'Lieutenant-Governor' has been practically abolished, and the heads of almost all the Provinces are now to be called Governors. The reply is obvious, as Bihar and Orissa will stand on a footing of inferiority to those provinces which will rank as first-class governorships, namely Bengal, Madras, Bombay, and the United Provinces, which also have now been fortunately placed on the footing of a presidency government. My esteemed friend, the Hon'ble Sir William Marris, will bear with me—I hope I am not betraying any of the secrets of the Committee room—when I say that often in the course of discussions about the Reforms rules and regulations, about distribution of seats, when we have been quarrelling amongst ourselves, we have been told by him: 'Now the United Provinces are on a higher footing than Bihar and Orissa. They are a presidency government. You cannot claim the same privileges as they can now do in the matter of the distribution of seats; they must have higher privileges, more men,' and so on. That shows it makes a world of difference whether a province is placed on the footing of a presidency government and is a first-class province or on an inferior footing as a second-class one. But there is one thing more. The general practice in these presidency governments is that although members of the Indian Civil Service are not debarred—and I am glad they are not—from being Governors, the practice is that statesmen from the British Isles are sent out to be the Governors of the provinces known as presidencies. When there is a member of the Civil Service of exceptional qualifications deserving the position of a Governor he is called to the office; and I believe that my leader, the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha, remembers the administration of Sir Bartle Frere in Bombay. Later, a Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, the late Sir Richard Temple, assumed the Governorship of Bombay. That shows that there is no bar, legal or conventional, to a member of the Indian Civil Service rising to the position of a Governor of a presidency. At the same time, the practice is that the Secretary of State for India, on behalf of His Majesty, sends out from the United Kingdom men who have taken a prominent part in the public affairs, either as members of Parliament or in other walks of life. Now, as this is perhaps the first occasion on which I find myself in the position of saying anything about the Indian Civil Service, I desire to say unhesitatingly that I am one of those who hold the Indian Civil Service in very high regard, indeed, for their great work in this country. I am no detractor of the Indian Civil Service and I do not deny the great work they have done in this country during the last 100 years and more, which has made it possible for us to become a nation and to claim all those privileges which are now ours. But the fact remains that men who work under a system of administration on routine lines—a system which is known popularly as bureaucracy—do not, as a rule, possess that wide outlook on human affairs and that catholicity of temperament which we require in the head of an administration; and it is, therefore, that we have always pressed that the Governors should, as far as possible, be sent out from Britain, as they are generally men of broader outlook and more catholic temperament than are to be found amongst those who work as officials in this country. The great fear of the people of Bihar and Orissa at being placed under a Governor whose pay will be only a lakh of rupees, which is that of the present Lieutenant-Governor, is that the system will be perpetuated of having in Bihar and Orissa Civilian Governors. I hope my suspicions are unfounded and that the gentlemen, who will speak on behalf of the Government, will remove my suspicions. At the same time, even if there was the prospect of Bihar and Orissa having their Governors sent out from England, the fact remains that a Governor even from there on less emoluments will certainly be regarded by the people here as one of an admittedly inferior status. But Bihar and Orissa absolutely decline to accept such an inferior status at the present day. I think they are fully entitled to claim the same administrative status as the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, and I think the Government have been grossly remiss in their duty towards Bihar and Orissa in not removing them from the second group to the first, that of presidency governments. I think, Sir, I have now sufficiently stated the case, and I will not be justified in trespassing further upon the attention of the Council.

"I hope all our principal Provinces, not only Bihar and Orissa but the Punjab, the Central Provinces, Assam and others will ultimately obtain the higher status of presidency governments. I have no doubt that in due course of time this will come about; but I think in the meantime I am entitled to plead for the Province of Bihar and Orissa. The Government should even now, at this last moment, bring this matter to the notice of Mr. Montagu, so that he may be pleased to have the Second Schedule of the Act amended by changing Bihar and Orissa from the second group of Provinces to the first group of Presidencies. With these words, Sir, I commend my Resolution to the Council."

The Hon'ble Raja of Kanika :—"Sir, I have very great pleasure in supporting the Resolution so ably moved by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha. The arguments in support of the Resolution have been so ably placed by my friend before this Council, that I do not desire to deal at any length with them, and I will content myself with one or two observations only. The Province of Bihar and Orissa, Sir, as it is at present constituted, is the most important of the existing Lieutenant-Governorships in India. No other Province under the administration of a Lieutenant-Governor can yet boast of an Executive Council. So that, practically speaking, Bihar and Orissa, though it is the youngest of the Lieutenant-Governorships at present enjoys a much higher status than the Punjab and even the United Provinces. It is difficult, therefore, to understand what reason there can possibly be for putting Bihar and Orissa in the same category with the Punjab, and for assigning to it a status even lower than that of the United Provinces—as the Second Schedule to the Government of India Act does Sir, we in Bihar and Orissa had for years been united with Bengal and during all these years we had the advantage of getting the benefits of one of the most advanced administrations in India. Council will remember that that was one of the reasons why Lord Hardinge's Government in their despatch of the 25th August, 1911, proposed to equip our new Province with a High Court and an Executive Council from the very beginning. It is now rather hard upon us 3-31 P.M.

that we should be compelled to take a back seat among the Provinces of India, and it is rather strange that the Government should now forget the principles which it so strenuously urged in 1911. We desire that Bihar and Orissa should be put on the same level with Bengal and the United Provinces as it would be, not only fair to us, but convenient to the Government as well.

"Sir, I cordially support the Resolution."

3-33 P.M. The Hon'ble Haji Chaudhuri Muhammad Ismail Khan:—"Sir, I consider the Resolution moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sinha very opportune. In the Second Schedule of the new Government of India Act, it has been provided that the Province of Bihar and Orissa will be so constituted as to have a Governor with a maximum annual salary of one lakh of rupees and Members of the Executive Council on sixty thousand rupees a year. In extent of territory, in importance and in possibilities, the Province of Bihar and Orissa stands second to no other Province. And the fact that it has recently been created and carved out of the old and unwieldy Province of Bengal for administrative purposes should not be considered to minimise its importance. Once action is taken in accordance with the provisions of the new Act, it will be neither convenient nor possible to change the settled order of things within a few years. Therefore, my Hon'ble friend has considered it proper to recommend to the Governor General in Council to urge upon the Secretary of State for India the desirability of placing the Province on an improved status from the beginning so that there may be no reason for dissatisfaction among the people and no possibility of inconvenience in the near future."

3-34 P.M. The Hon'ble Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto:—"Sir, I beg to support the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sinha."

3-35 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Marris:—"Sir, provincial patriotism has been a force which in the past has often worked to the good of India; it is a force which, I believe, can be equally trusted to work usefully in the future. Therefore I make no sort of complaint that his patriotism has led the Hon'ble Member so quickly to raise this question, although from another point of view I feel that the issue is really rather one of a domestic character. Whether the sum of another Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 4,000 per month, to be provided by the revenues of Bihar and Orissa, is really better devoted to augmenting the salaries of a few highly placed personages, than it expended in some alternative manner, such as extending primary education or increasing the salaries of revenue subordinates, is a matter which I should have thought primarily concerned not this Council, but the people who are to find the money; and if there were really any strong case for the Hon'ble Member's proposal it would naturally have come both to the Government of India and the Secretary of State (if the Government of India supported it) with much better authority, if it had secured the backing of the Local Government and of the new Reformed Council behind it; for, I think, the Hon'ble Member can hardly contend that the mischief which his motion seeks to remedy is of so grievous and crushing a character that it could not await the coming of the new constitution

"The Hon'ble Member gave us an interesting historical retrospect, but I think the chain of argument which he forged was somewhat as follows:—The United Provinces have acquired a presidential status; Bihar and Orissa owing to its past history and its various claims is equally or better entitled to a presidential status. Those are the two portions of his argument with which I have to deal, and if I can break either, his conclusion fails. Let me state the Government of India's position towards this question of Governors and their claims and status as briefly as I can. The authors of the report on Indian Constitutional Reforms declared that the common designation of Governors, which they proposed to adopt for all Provinces in future, would not imply any equality of status or emoluments, which would continue to be regulated by existing distinctions, which they themselves declared that they found appropriate. In general the Government of India endorsed this conclusion. They proposed to leave the pay of Governors and Members of Council untouched in the presidencies and in the major provinces, and they recommended only augmenting the pay of the new Governors of the Central Provinces and Assam, so as not to leave them any longer behind the level of pay of Members of Council in the presidencies. They saw no reason to level up pay generally; they realised that reforms were in any case costly, and that it was imperative, where possible, to avoid needless expenditure. They observed that elsewhere in the world, in Australia, in the West Indies, and to a remarkable extent in the United States of America, there were Governors living in geographical juxtaposition whose pay varied considerably. They saw no reason why such variation should be undesirable in India.

"The Government of India's view was that the three presidencies were really in a class apart. They had had Governors already for a long time. There was, in the Government of India's judgment, a practical, tangible distinction between a presidency and a province. You may regard the difference in more than one light; you may look at it as the result of history and tradition and recall how the present order of things in India arose from small beginnings when the Governor of each of these three small isolated coastal settlements sat in Council as President, which term gave the name to the territory which he administered; that is a point of view which would appeal to some members of this Council more than to others. You may look at it from another standpoint. I think this point of view is one on which Mr. Banerjea touched in his speech yesterday--that these presidencies are the original metropolitan centres from which in the first place military administration and then civil administration, and then communications, and railways and education, and enlightenment, and political progress—all these things grew, and from the presidencies marched up into the hinterland. That is a memory which I should hope will appeal to every member of this Council, and would persuade him that in these respects the presidencies are unique But if we turn to the other side and look away from the past to the facts of the present day, it is equally clear, and any unbiassed person will acknowledge that the Presidencies stand in a sense by themselves. We see then as great manufacturing and commercial centres, where enormous business is done, where (or in two of them at all events) great ships come and go, where India, which in all other respects is very much an island, sets her feet upon the highways of the world's trade and opens her eyes to the great external world. This is the distinction which every candid member of Council will appreciate and recognize These are the reasons for holding that the presidencies are in a real sense apart.

"I do not of course forget the fact of which the Hon'ble Member has reminded us, and very rightly, that in India in the early thirties there was an idea of creating a fourth presidency, and in fact for two brief years the Governors of Bengal, being also the Governors General in Council, administered the territories of the North-Western Province as Governors of Agra. But, as he told us, that idea was very soon given up in favour of the alternative scheme of Lieutenant-Governors, which was not only cheaper but felt to be more suitable. It seems to have been perceived at that time that the grand manner of Governors of the old type, with their bands and bodyguards and banqueting-rooms, was not appropriate outside the Georgian atmosphere of the three metropolitan cities. Such at all events, whether right or wrong, was the conclusion to which the Government of India came, and I think any fair observer will agree that in history, precedent, and in actual modern facts, they had solid and substantial grounds for their proposal.

"Their proposal, however, was modified by the Joint Committee upon one point of detail in a way that has opened the door for the Hon'ble Member's motion. The Joint Committee on the Government of India Bill have raised the pay of the Governor of the United Provinces to the level of that of the presidency Governors, and now the Hon'ble Member asks the Council to propose the same benefaction for the Governor of Bihar and Orissa. I know that he is not asking for a personal favour for the Governor, but is only thinking of the honour and glory of his province. I do not know what were the reasons which weighed with the Joint Committee; they have not told us, and they can only be matters of conjecture. I think myself that they may have been moved by the eloquent and earnest representations of some of the members of the delegation, who addressed them in England, who may have dwelt on the dignity and glories of the United Provinces. It would have been easy for them to draw an attractive and moving picture of the province with which I have the honour to be connected They may have emphasised its character as the sacred middle land of the Sanskrit world, the birthplace of gods and heroes and religions; upon its famous cities, its noble rivers, its many sacred places, its former seats of sovereignty, its political importance as the stronghold not only of Islam in Northern India, but also of an industrious and virile, if not advanced, peasantry.

"I can imagine that arguments such as these may have been so eloquently addressed to the arbiters of our destinies in England as to lead them partially to overlook the differences that weighed with the Government of India—those differences, to which I have referred, as necessarily existing between the presidencies and any other provinces, between the parent and the derivative, the sea board and the land-locked territory.

"But, says the Hon'ble Member, the Joint Committee may say and do what they like: they may disregard the peculiar character of what has hitherto been known as a presidency. He suggests indeed that the Joint Committee have done what was thought of in the thirties: they have actually made an inland province into a presidency by raising the pay of the Governor. But, Sir, that is not at all the case. Nothing of the sort has been done. A presidency remains a presidency; and the United Provinces remain a province. Section 3 of the Act runs:—

'The presidencies of Fort William in Bengal, Fort St. George, and Bombay, and the provinces, known as the United Provinces, etc.'

"What has happened has been that the pay of the Governor and members of this province of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh has been raised. But it still has a provincial and not a presidency status.

"It is not my concern, however, Sir, to argue that the United Provinces are or are not as Madras or Bombay are; but rather to point out that, whatever opinion is held on that point, Bihar and Orissa cannot claim to stand level with the United Provinces. The Hon'ble Member has driven me to the odious and invidious task of making comparisons. If I do so, it is because they are strictly necessary to my purpose That flame of provincial patriotism that shows in the Hon'ble Member's breast exists also in cold, official, hearts as well, and there is in close proximity to me in Council a sufficiently strong contingent of official representatives of the province of Bihar and Orissa to impose due discretion upon anything I shall say.

"I will at once concede to the Hon'ble Member the one argument in respect of which he has a technical advantage; it is the fact that Bihar and Orissa have for some years been in possession of an Executive Council. The United Provinces nearly got one in 1915, but the benign intentions of Lord Hardinge's Government were rendered nugatory in another place. But is this possession of an Executive Council a real hall-mark? Was it not because of its connection with Bengal that Bihar and Orissa got its Council? Would it, if it stood alone in 1908, have got a Governor in Council either then or indeed at any time since, earlier than the United Provinces? The despatch of 1911, which has been so often referred to, described the Biharis—a little unkindly perhaps—as 'unequally yoked' with the Bengalis. The Hon'ble Member told us in another speech that was a connection at which his people had chafed for 150 years. But it is that uneasy connection alone, their association with metropolitan Calcutta, that the Biharis have to thank for the enjoyment of a more elaborate form of government as compared with the United Provinces. To that extent I trust the Council will discount the Hon'ble Member's attempt to steal a march upon the sister province.

"Now, Sir, if we set aside the fact of the possession of a Council, what other grounds of comparison are there? I suppose that the costliness of a Government must be proportioned to the work which it has to do and the importance and difficulty of its task. That seems a fair proposition. But status and prestige are imponderable things; we cannot resolve them easily into any one or two simple constituent parts. At the same time, we shall probably be led to a sound conclusion if we look round to the various concrete constituents that can be measured. The United Provinces, in the first place, is one and a quarter the size of Bihar and has a population one and one-third as big. Its expenditure is twice as big, and its revenue more than twice. Moreover, the work to be done can be practically gauged from the staff. Bihar has three civil Secretaries: the United Provinces has four. The United Provinces has 48 districts, and Bihar has 29. The United Provinces has ten divisions as compared with five. Its superior administrative service is twice as big: its provincial service 50 per cent. bigger. It has six times as many towns (if we include quite small ones) and twice as many municipalities and eighteen times as many cantonments. It has four times the number of European and Anglo-Indian inhabitants. It has seven cities over a lakh as compared with one, and five cities over 1½ lakhs compared with none. If we turn to another side of progress and advance, we find that it has nineteen colleges as compared with seven, and 179 high schools as compared with 118. It has between three and four times the number of factories. So much for the more amiable aspect of things.

"I regret, Sir, to add that the United Provinces' prominence is not wholly of a virtuous nature. It returns twice as much crime as the comparatively blameless province to which the Hon'ble Member belongs. Well, Sir, I have given the Council a few facts readily ascertainable. I might have gone into much more detail if it had been necessary, but I trust that these will suffice to carry conviction. The case for the Government is very simple. We want to avoid unnecessary expense. We do not admit for one moment the argument that the figure representing the Governor's pay connotes or affects in any way the question of recruitment of the Governors of the future. I may say, Sir, that the Government of India at present have no knowledge whatever of His Majesty's intentions, as far as I know, regarding such appointments, and I believe that the question of Rs. 2,000 and odd a month cannot weigh one way or the other in considering the question of the selection of future Governors. The Hon'ble gentleman has argued that the status of Bihar and Orissa should be made equal to the status of a presidency like the United Provinces, but, in the first place, the United Provinces are not a presidency, and secondly, the Government of India do not think that the conditions of Bihar and Orissa are comparable to those of the United Provinces. Therefore, they are constrained to regard this proposal as premature, expensive and unnecessary; and they cannot, therefore, invite the Council to support the Resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, the very fact that the Hon'ble Sir William Marris has had to attempt a prolonged and laboured refutation of my arguments—invoking he, a pious Christian, all my Hindu Gods, the holy rivers, the sacred trees, the beautiful mountains and God knows what besides—shows that he has really got a very weak case. He enumerated for my edification a large number of facts showing that the United Provinces deserve a higher form of administration than Bihar and Orissa. I am sure I had not betrayed in my opening speech the least jealousy of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, and therefore all that elaborate argument was, if I may say so, beside the point. The patent fact is, that whatever else the United Provinces may or may not have in the way of ten Commissionerships and forty-eight districts or so many schools and Colleges and things of that kind, 3-53 P.M.

the Hon'ble Sir William Marris is himself here from the United Provinces and naturally puts the case of his province as high as he can. That is quite understandable. But, I submit, that invidious comparison is not a fair way of dealing with the proposition which I have laid before the Council. Again, there may be 48 districts in the United Provinces, but the districts may be smaller in area than those of Bihar and Orissa. Their population may be less or may be more. These are, therefore, no criteria at all in considering a proposition like the one I have placed before the Council. If I too entered upon a historical sketch of the glories of Bihar, I think I could go on till the small hours of the morning, but my Hon'ble friend, Sir William Marris, has undoubtedly read the Early History of India by Vincent Smith, establishing that of all the provinces in India Bihar is the one where the political history of India really began, and if he will re-read Sir Edward Gait's Census Reports, he will find that it is Bihar which was for many centuries the most historic and the most important part of India But I never mentioned a word about these matters in my opening speech, since I maintain that my case is much stronger on the merits than by placing it on historical considerations. We are discussing the question whether there was any practical justification for keeping Bihar and Orissa in the status of a province under a glorified Lieutenant-Governor, and I must confess that the Hon'ble Sir William Marris has not at all, by his invidious comparisons, succeeded in convincing me to modify my convictions on which I brought forward this Resolution. The only serious point which he has urged before the Council is by inviting our attention to section 3 of the Government of India Act to show that the United Provinces have not been granted a Presidency Government technically, because in clause (2) of section 3 of the Act it is laid down that the United Provinces will also be regarded like the Punjab, Bihar and Orissa, the Central Provinces and Assam, as a province. I quite appreciate that. I had that in my mind. But he will concede, I hope, that although technically Agra and Oudh may continue to be called a province and not a Presidency, yet to all intents and purposes they are a presidency; and if I may be permitted to say something here, everyday in the Reform Committee my friend the Hon'ble Sir William Marris himself says to me: "Oh, you cannot place Bihar and Orissa on the same level as the United Provinces which have a Presidency Government . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris:—"I do not think I have said so."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"That is how I have understood him to say each time. It seems to me very hard that when I urge that the conditions in Bihar and Orissa are in all respects similar to those of the United Provinces, it should be said 'Oh, Bihar is a mere province,' but when it suits his purposes, he says that Agra and Oudh are a presidency!

"Sir, I am gratified to learn that at present there is no distinct indication as to what His Majesty's Government will do in the matter of recruitment of Governors in Bihar and Orissa, and I hope that if this discussion to-day will lead to no other result, it will at least do this, that when the papers reach His Majesty's Secretary of State, he will appreciate our difficulties in Bihar and Orissa and he will encourage our desire that we should also have the benefit of having from England Governors like the other presidencies. But when the pay of the Bihar Governor is raised to that of the Governors of Madras, Bengal and Bombay; there will be a greater chance of Bihar and Orissa getting out from England men who are in public life, and the status of the province will naturally be improved. I think that the Hon'ble Sir William Marris, in spite of delivering a conciliatory speech—I quite appreciate the spirit of it but not its substance—has not succeeded in convincing me. I, therefore, feel that I should ask that the votes of this Council should be recorded in this particular matter.'

The motion was put and declared negatived.

[20TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; The Vice-President.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"I want a division, Sir."

The Vice-President:—"Does the Hon'ble Member wish to press for a division?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"I think, Sir, this is an important matter, and I would like to know how I stand in this matter on a division being taken."

The Council divided as follows:—

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Monday, the 23rd February, 1920.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C.S.I., K.C., Vice-President, presiding, and 61 Members, of whom 54 were Additional Members.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

1. " (a) Have the postal clerks of the town and island of Bombay been appealing to the Director General for a revision of their pay and, if so, for how long? Revision of pay of postal clerks of Bombay.

(b) Is the scheme promised by the Director General in his memorandum No. 2510, dated the 28th April 1919, likely to take effect in the near future?

(c) Do Government propose to introduce a time-scale of pay in the Post Offices of the town and island of Bombay on a plan similar to that in the Accountant General's Office, Bombay?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

" (a) Yes, constantly.

(b) The scheme has just been sanctioned by the Secretary of State, with effect from the 25th January, 1920.

(c) The question of the introduction of a suitable time-scale of pay is under the Director-General's consideration."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

2. " (a) Are Government aware that the notification imposing restrictions upon the free import of dye-stuffs into India is regarded by the public ...ot wrong in principle and a deliberate infringement of the policy of fair trad...ecta-

(b) Has it created a monopoly in favour of the English dye-manu... of the and trader at the expense and to the detriment of the Indian ...ernment consumer?"

[Sir Geor[redacted]; Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris.] [23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

"The Government of India are aware that the restrictions on the importations of dye-stuffs into India have been the subject of unfavourable criticism in the Press, and they have received objections and representations in regard to them from certain individuals and commercial bodies. It is not a fact however that these restrictions create a monopoly of the nature mentioned by the Hon'ble Member, licenses for the import of dye-stuffs from foreign countries being freely granted when it is impossible to obtain the required dyes from the United Kingdom or when such dyes are unobtainable at a reasonable price. As a matter of fact considerable quantities of dye-stuffs are at present being imported under license from foreign countries. I may add for the Hon'ble Member's information, however, that the question of the retention of these restrictions is now being further considered by the Government of India."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Fiscal autonomy.

3. "(a) Will Government state the extent to which and the conditions on which, the various self-governing Dominions of the Empire enjoy fiscal autonomy, and how far and in what particulars it differs from that recommended for India by Lord Selborne's Committee ?

(b) Are the Government aware that the recommendations of the Committee are construed by several public men in India to mean that with regard to fiscal matters India shall have the same right of regulating her policy as all other Dominions of His Majesty ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) So far as the Government of India are aware the legislatures of the self-governing Dominions are at liberty to arrange their tariffs as they please, subject however to the right of the Governor General of each Dominion to assent to or withhold consent from Bills or to reserve them for His Majesty's pleasure, and the Crown can disallow within a specified period any Bill assented to by the Governor General.

The Hon'ble Member can judge for himself the difference, if any, between the position of the self-governing Dominions as stated above and that recommended for India in the report of Lord Selborne's Committee.

(b) The Government of India are willing to accept the Hon'ble Member's assertion that the views of certain public men in India regarding the recommendations of the Committee are as stated by him."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Findings of Lord Selborne's Committee and framing of rules under the new Act.

4. "Is it open to the Government of India in framing rules under the Government of India Act to re-open any question settled by Lord Selborne's Committee and to disturb its findings ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"As the Hon'ble Member is aware the general rule-making power under the Government of India Act, 1919, is contained in section 44 of that Act, and all rules made thereunder must come before Parliament.

The Government of India regard the recommendations of the Committee as an authoritative indication of the views which are likely to be taken by Parliament, and will therefore naturally attach the greatest possible weight to their recommendations."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Grants to institutions for the blind, deaf and dumb.

5. "Will Government lay on the table a statement showing the amount of grant by each of the Local Governments and Administrations during each of the last five years to institutions for the instruction of the blind, the deaf and the dumb ?"

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Shafi; Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Sir William Marris.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied :—

"The information desired by the Hon'ble Member is not available in the Government of India. It is being obtained from Local Governments and Administrations and will be laid on the table in due course."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Indigenous systems of medicine.

6. "Will Government state the result of the investigation which they undertook in accordance with the Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mir Asad Ali on the question of the possibility of placing the ancient and indigenous system of medicines on a scientific basis and of adding to their usefulness?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent repled :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to the answer given to the question put by the Hon'ble Rai Sahib Seth Nathmal on the 23rd September 1919."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

The Indian Civil Service and the Reforms.

7. "(a) Are there any, and, if so, how many members of the Indian Civil Service, whose doubts as to the changes to be made under the new Act are so deep-rooted that they feel they cannot usefully endeavour to take part in them?

(b) On what pension are they to be allowed to retire?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"(a) No such case has yet been brought to the notice of the Government of India.

(b) This part of the question does therefore not arise."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Composition of the Executive Council of the Governor General.

8. "(a) Do Government propose to give effect to the recommendation of Lord Selborne's Committee that not less than three Members of the Governor General's Executive Council should be Indians and, if so, when?

(b) Is it a fact that according to the recommendation of the Committee a fourth Indian Member could be appointed, provided he has definite legal qualifications?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The appointment of members of the Governor General's Executive Council rests with His Majesty and not with the Government of India.

(b) I will read to the Council the terms of the Joint Committee's recommendation. They advised —

> 'that one member of the Council should have definite legal qualifications, but that those qualifications may be gained in India as well as in the United Kingdom; and that not less than three members of the Council should be Indians.'

The Government of India understand that the intention of the first part of this recommendation was to open the door for the appointment of certain members of the legal profession who had received their training in this country: an intention to which section 28 (2) of the Act gives effect. They do not understand that the Joint Committee had any intention of arousing expectation that four Indian members would be appointed to the Council of the Governor General. Had this been the Committee's intention the Government of India believe that it would have been stated explicitly."

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir Thomas Holland; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Sir George Barnes.] [23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" May I put a supplementary question, Sir ? Has the attention of Government been drawn to Lord Selborne's speech in the House of Lords to the effect that there could be appointed four Indian Members on the Executive Council ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris :—" I must ask for notice of that question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

Recruitment of chemists for the proposed all-India Chemical Services.

9. " (a) What qualifications, if any, have been laid down for the recruitment of chemists into the proposed all-India Chemical Services ?

(b) Have inquiries been made as to how many Indians with sufficient qualifications would be forthcoming ? If no such inquiries have been made, do Government propose to institute them before getting recruits from other countries ?

(c) In this connection do not Government propose to consider the advisability of holding a competitive examination for junior men, both Indian and European, before the appointments are made ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

"The attention of the Hon'ble Member is invited to the Resolution of the Government of India in the Munitions Board No. M.-440, dated the 26th November, 1919, in which it is notified that a Committee has been appointed to inquire and advise Government regarding the desirability of creating an all-India Chemical Service, and, in the event of the Committee approving the principle of such a service, to devise terms of recruitment, employment and organisation.

The report of the Committee will be ready next month. Until that report is received, and Government has had an opportunity of considering its recommendations, it would be premature to institute the inquiries, or independently to investigate the proposa's suggested by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked :—

Increase of pay of postal employees in Bihar and Orissa.

10. " (a) Have Government received any petitions or memorials from the employees of the Postal department, specially those serving in Bihar and Orissa, praying for an increase in their emoluments ?

(b) Are Government aware that considerable dissatisfaction exists among the said employees by reason of the present high rates in the necessaries of life and their not having got any appreciable increase in their pay in recent years ?

(c) Is it not a fact that improvements have been recently effected in the pay and gradation of the Telegraph employees, and that nevertheless a Committee has again been appointed to consider their grievances further ?

(d) If so, do Government propose to take similar measures with regard to the grievances of the Postal employees ? If not, will Government be pleased to explain the reasons for this seeming differentiation ?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

" (a) Yes.

(b) and (d) Yes, but a general revision of the pay of postal clerks up to the grade of Rs. 100 has just been sanctioned, and the question of revising the pay of men in the higher grades is receiving the Director General's consideration.

(c) Yes."

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Sir William Vincent; Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked :—

11. "Have Government taken any steps to get the vacancies filled which have been caused in the Punjab High Court by the death of Sir Henry Rattigan and in the Patna High Court by the death of Mr. Justice Atkinson? If so, when are the announcements of the names of their successors likely to be made?" Filling of the vacancies in the Punjab and Patna High Courts.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part a press communiqué will, as usual, be issued as soon as the appointments are made by His Majesty under section 101 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked :—

12. "(a) Do Government propose to proceed with the Bill which was introduced into this Council by Sir Reginald Craddock to amend and consolidate the Code of Criminal Procedure? Amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(b) If so, do Government propose to refer it for consideration and report to a committee composed from amongst the members of the present Council with instructions that they may suggest amendments with a view to assimilate and unify the procedure in trials by removing from the Code any distinctions subsisting at present on the ground of race or nationality? If not, why not?"

"(a) In view of the amount of business connected with the introduction of the reforms, which will come before the present Council, Government do not consider that it will be possible to proceed with the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, which was first introduced in March 1914 and later re-introduced in a modified form in September 1917.

(b) The Bill is an amending Bill and does not deal with the subject suggested by the Hon'ble Member. It is open to any Member of Council to introduce a separate amending Bill on this subject, and Government are prepared to give their careful consideration to any such Bill that may be introduced, but they do not think that the present would be an opportune time to raise this question, which is bound to give rise to very serious controversy."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked :—

13. "(a) Will Government be pleased to mention the names of the various services, Imperial or Provincial, which have already received the benefit of the recommendations of the last Royal Commission on the Indian Public Services in the matter of their pay, pension or any other kind of emolument, or in respect of which orders have been passed to that effect? Recommendations of the Royal Commission with regard to pay and pension for various Services.

(b) What are the remaining services, Imperial or Provincial, which have still to be dealt with?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the reason or reasons, if any, justifying preference having been given to the claims of those referred to in part (a) of this question?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"In order to save the time of Council I lay on the table a *statement which gives a complete answer to parts (a), (b) and (c) of the question."

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis asked :—

14. "Have Government received an influentially signed memorial on the subject of preservation of cattle? If so, what action do they propose to take upon it?" Preservation of cattle.

[Sir Claude Hill; Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis; Mr. Shafi; Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer; Mr. W. M. Hailey; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; The Vice-President.] [23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"Yes. The question raised in the memorial, which has just been received, is engaging the attention of the Government of India."

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis asked :—

Creation of Local Government Boards in India.

15. "Will Government lay on the table a copy of the Report of the Committee which sat in London last spring on the question of the creation of Local Government Boards in India?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied :—

"The Report of the Committee appointed to study the working of the English system of Local Self-Government, together with a report* by the Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Banerjee on the same subject, is laid on the table."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer asked :—

Compulsory elementary education.

16. "Do the Government of India propose to consider the desirability of making special financial contributions to the Provincial Governments so as to enable the latter to assist Municipalities and Local Bodies in carrying out schemes of compulsory elementary education at an early date?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied :—

"Beginning with 1911-12, the Government of India have assisted Local Governments by recurring and non-recurring grants, which have up to the end of 1918-19 totalled over 2¾ crores in the expansion and improvement of elementary education. With the new classification of revenue and expenditure contemplated by the Reforms scheme, the provinces will be equipped with substantially larger resources than they at present enjoy for the improvement and expansion of elementary education and other branches of provincial administration. The views of the Government of India regarding the future financing of elementary education were explained in their letter No. 750, dated the 2nd September 1918, which was published at the time. A copy† of that letter is laid on the table."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer asked :—

Improvement of salaries of public servants.

17. "In how many cases have public servants made representations to the authorities concerned for an improvement in their salaries during the last six months and how have these been disposed of?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

"The precise information asked for cannot be supplied, as such representations are not generally made to the Government of India direct. The salaries of the lower-paid public servants have been temporarily improved in all provinces by the grant of war allowances on the recommendation of Local Governments. It is understood that Local Governments have now under their consideration schemes for a permanent revision of the salaries of their subordinate establishments."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"May I put Dr. Sapru's questions on his behalf, Sir?"

The Vice-President :—"I am afraid the Hon'ble Member can put his own questions only."

RESOLUTION RE EXTENSION AND IMPROVEMENT OF MUHAMMADAN EDUCATION.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer :— 11-15 A.M.
"Sir, I beg to move the resolution, which stands in my name. It runs thus :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to inquire and report as to the effect given in different provinces during the past six years to the suggestions and recommendations made by the Government of India to the Provincial Governments regarding the extension and improvement of Muhammadan education.'

"My resolution, it will be seen, is a very simple one. I have to request the Government of India to make detailed inquiries about and bring together, in a combined form the measures taken by Provincial Governments with respect to the promotion and improvement of Muhammadan education in their own Provinces, on the lines suggested to them by the Government so long ago as 1913. And I may perhaps be referred in this connection to the Annual Report on Indian Education, and to the reports on educational progress issued every year by the Provincial Governments. It may also be stated that education is a matter primarily in the hands of the Governments of the Provinces, and that they are responsible for it. Those Governments are, therefore, the proper bodies, it will be contended, who ought to be approached, and that a discussion of the question ought to be raised in the Provincial Legislative Councils, especially in view of the fact that in the near future we are going to have a large measure of decentralization. Sir, I venture to urge that the inquiry I am asking for cannot be reasonably resisted on grounds like those I have mentioned. Whatever measure of provincial decentralization in the administration and control of education, the forthcoming constitutional changes may bring about, the Government of India will not be going out of its way to institute an inquiry as to what progress has been so far achieved in the different Provinces in the matter of Muhammadan Education along the lines they themselves suggested. Not only this, Sir, but in a way, the Government of India, to my mind, should regard it as its duty to find out to what extent its wishes have been carried out, and to see that they are carried out before the responsibility regarding educational policy is wholly or largely transferred to the Provincial Governments. Conditions with respect to questions, like the Muhammadan education, and the educational progress of the Moslem Community, will, indeed, vary from province to province, and the action to be taken in the provinces must be adjusted to their particular requirements. But there are certain principles of policy which apply equally to all parts of the country, and it is necessary for the Central Government to see that those principles are adhered to in the provinces. Apart from this general presumption that may be raised, in regard to the progress of Muhammadan education, I have to draw attention to the important consideration that the inquiry I am suggesting relates to the recommendations made by the Government of India years ago and, therefore, to measures which should have been carried out by Provincial Governments, by this time, in uniformity with them. In the Bombay Presidency, for instance, the Government there appointed a Committee, to go into the question of the condition of Muhammadan education, and to recommend the direction in which development was to be effected. A few of the recommendations of the Committee have been given effect to, and others yet await approval and execution. Economy enforced by War was a ground for this slowness of progress, but that argument no longer holds. The Committee of Inquiry, I am asking for, will consider the schemes formulated by Provincial Governments, for giving effect to the suggestions of the Government of India, and find out, how far, they have been carried out. It may be that want of funds may still be pleaded by Provincial Governments, as a reason of their inability, to do the needful, and the financial aspect of the question will have to be considered. The Government of India may have to help Provincial Governments, if the latter's plea of financial difficulties is right. In any case, it is needful for us to know exactly how matters stand; and the inquiry to be fully useful, must be comprehensive, and not merely provincial. The Government of India communicated its wishes, in connection with the advancement of Muhammadan education, because it felt that the subject was one of national importance, and desired generous and prompt attention. That importance, I submit, the subject has by no means lost. And I am anxious, Sir, that the suggestions conveyed in my Resolution should be taken by this Council in the light of the urgency of the question, and the obligation which rests upon the Government of India, to see its own recommendations carried out. The Committee of Inquiry will collect valuable information, which will prove helpful to us in knowing what ground has been already covered, and how much work still remains to be done. In the light of this information alone, it will be possible for Government to decide what measures to take to attain the object it has now all along in view.

"With these words, I move the Resolution."

11-22 A.M. The Hon'ble Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto:—"Sir, I have great pleasure in supporting the resolution moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Jaffer. Speaking on behalf of Sind, Sir, the education of the Muhammadans who form about 80 per cent. of the population there has been very sadly neglected. It is true, Sir, that the Local Government is doing something in the direction of the extension and improvement of Muhammadan education and a special committee was appointed for Sind to investigate the question, but it is to be regretted that full effect has not been given to the recommendations of that Committee. The sums which Government are spending at present in the cause of Muhammadan education are quite inadequate to meet the requirements of the Muhammadan community who form the bulk of the population in Sind. Sir, the subject is a very important one and demands a very sympathetic treatment at the hands of Government. After what has fallen from my Hon'ble friend Mr. Jaffer, I feel that he has made out a strong case for an inquiry into the whole question of Muhammadan education, and I hope that the Hon'ble the Education Member will be good enough to accept this very modest resolution. With these few observations I support the motion before the Council."

11-24 A.M. The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri:—"Sir, I consider it my pleasant duty to support the resolution moved by my esteemed friend the Hon'ble Mr. Haroon Jaffer. About six years ago, the Government of India issued a circular letter to all the Provincial Governments, emphasising the need of providing reasonable facilities for education of the Mussalmans and indicating the direction in which inquiry and special action would, they thought, be useful. In accordance with this direction, the Government of Bengal—and I understand the Governments of other Provinces too—appointed a Committee, the most representative that ever was constituted, to consider the problem of the backwardness of the Muhammadan community in the matter of education, and to recommend necessary measures to be adopted by the Government for the educational advancement of the Muslim community. The terms of reference were comprehensive enough to include almost every branch and stage of education, and the Committee set about their task with an earnestness, commensurate with the paramount importance of the problem they were asked to investigate. After hard, patient labour of over six months, they submitted their report, which formed the subject of a resolution issued by the Government of Bengal, on the 3rd August 1916. The recommendations of the Committee received, I must gratefully acknowledge, the most sympathetic consideration from the Government of Bengal, and a large number of these were immediately given effect to. Only those recommendations which involved a heavy expenditure—which, of course, could not be provided for during the period of war—were kept in abeyance, with the assurance that they would be undertaken as soon as the financial conditions would permit. The recommendations that concerned the Calcutta University were duly addressed to the University authorities. But will the Hon'ble Members believe me, when I unfold to them the story, how the recommendations of such a representative body consisting of almost every Muhammadan educationist of repute in Bengal, were treated by the authorities of the University. Sir, consistently with the principle that in the 'sacred temple of learning' there is no room for the consideration of sectarian grievances, the unbiassed, the impartial body of pure educationists did not consider it worth their while even to condescend to favour the Mussalmans with a reply. Repeated reminders, Sir, could not elicit even the ordinary courtesy of a formal acknowledgment. This deplorable state of affairs was due solely to the very poor representation of the Mussalmans in the different bodies of the University. To the same cause may be ascribed the persistently unjust treatment of the Mussalmans in the University, which have been briefly described in Chapter VI of the illuminating volumes of the report of the Calcutta University Commission. The pariah of a Moslem member was never admitted into the syndicate of the 'Sacred temple of learning', the governing body of 23 colleges were unpolluted by the contact of the Muslims, and out of 1,065 members of the collegiate staff only 37 subordinate appointments—barring, of course, the teachers of Oriental Languages—were held by the Mussalmans. A very influential deputation, consisting of almost all the recognised Muslim leaders of Calcutta, that waited upon the Calcutta University Commission, very tersely summarises the situation thus—' It is a common complaint that Muhammadans get no chance of paid post at the disposal of the Calcutta University. Out of 70 lecturers in the Law College, not even one is a Muhammadan, though qualified Muhammadans to fill such posts are not wanting. . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"I wish to rise to a point of order. The Resolution relates to suggestions and recommendations made by the Government of India to the Provincial Governments regarding the extension and improvement of Muhammadan education. I doubt whether the organisation and appointment of the staff of the Calcutta University would come within the scope of this Resolution."

The Vice-President:—"I think the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri is a little meticulous. The point is at all events very near the Resolution; I do not think the Council would desire that it should be excluded."

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri:—'The position of the Muhammadans in respect of Post-graduate Studies, University Examinations and University offices is hardly better. Only two of the University lecturers are Muhammadans and out of 895 examiners for the different University examinations held last year, only 9 were Muhammadans, besides 44 examiners of Arabic, Persian and Urdu, and there is not a single Muhammadan in any of the offices of the Calcutta University.' No wonder, Sir, that the Mussalmans are fighting with such grim earnestness and determination for separate communal representation, no wonder, Sir, that they instinctively doubt the bonâ fides of every gentleman who opposes it, no wonder that the Sadler Commission found it imperative to recommend in an united voice the adoption of the principle of separate communal representation. . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"May I know, Sir, whether it is open to a member to make a general statement of that kind reflecting upon the bonâ fides of the Hon'ble Members of this Council? Whether that is a fair debate? I want a ruling from you on that point, Sir."

[The Vice-President; Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri; Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy; Khan Bahadur Mir Asad Ali.] [23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Vice-President:—"If the Hon'ble Member asks for a ruling, I can only say that it is open to the Hon'ble Member to make the statement he has made, but it is obviously open to the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea who will no doubt follow him to deny the facts upon which the statement is made. I cannot say that it is not relevant to the Resolution before the Council The Hon'ble Member, I am sure, does not desire to make any remarks offensive to his fellow members of the Council."

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri:—"Then, Sir, I leave that question there. I support the Resolution because I am sure that the appointment of the proposed Committee would serve to unearth many incidents and circumstances that have been impeding the educational progress of the Muhammadans. But, Sir, I am in hearty sympathy with the Resolution, and I feel that the bitter, perception of the keen sense of wrong and injustice, under which our community is labouring, more or less in every province, has impelled my friend to make this demand for the Committee of Inquiry. It is quite possible that many Provincial Governments might have considered the question as sympathetically as was done by the Government of Bengal and the Government of Sir James (now Lord) Meston; and so I think that a request for a statement from the Government of India should more appropriately have preceded the demand for a Committee of Inquiry. But I do not think this technical objection will be pleaded by the Government of India, if a case for inquiry is really made out. I quite realise the very natural reluctance of the Government of India to interfere in the details of Provincial Administration., especially at a time when the principle of 'decentralisation' and 'Provincial autonomy' is the fashionable doctrine of the day, but still I am inclined to think, Sir, that the responsibility of the Government of India for the educational progress of this important community justifies a step which would perhaps be inadvisable and inexpedient under ordinary circumstances. Sir, the conditions of Muhammadan education, specially in the primary and secondary stage, are almost identical in every province; and the experiments that were successful in one province may well be initiated in other provinces too; and the Committee can serve the useful purpose of drawing attention to such experiments which may with advantage be adopted everywhere."

11-33 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"Sir, I am in hearty accord with the opinions just expressed by my Hon'ble friend the mover of this resolution. I was one of the members of the Committee which was appointed in Bombay, and some of the minor recommendations involving a small outlay were carried out. But, owing to the war, some others, like the establishment of High Schools, etc., were postponed on account of heavy expenditure. I entirely support the resolution. I think, however, if the Hon'ble Member in charge of Education, who has devoted nearly all his life in the cause of advancement of Muhammadan education had given the Hon'ble Mover the information asked for, supposing the materials were ready with him, then there would have been no necessity for moving this resolution at all. If the materials were not collected, I would surely have asked the Government to do so, because it is most essential that we should have this information as the subject of education is going to be decentralized in the provinces, and as the Muhammadan community, as my Hon'ble friend Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri said, is working under great disadvantages. It is for the advancement of India that a community like the Muhammadans, which is so backward in education, should receive every encouragement from the Government of India."

11-35 A.M. The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mir Asad Ali:—"Sir, as far as I know, in my own presidency the suggestions and recommendations of the Government of India have not been fully carried out. Last November when

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Khan Bahadur Mir Asad Ali; Haji Chaudhri Muhammad Ismail Khan; Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan.]

I had the honour to preside over the Muhammadan Educational Conference held in the Bombay Presidency, I had the opportunity to know that the suggestions made by the Government of India were not all given effect to in the Bombay Presidency too and my Hon'ble friend Nawab Ali Chaudhri has also told us that all of them have not been carried out by the Bengal Government either to the satisfaction of the Muhammadans there. Therefore, I feel that the Government of India should further take steps to ascertain from the various Local Governments as to what the various Committees appointed by the Local Governments have been doing in the matter of the extension and improvement of Muhammadan education. Though I differ from the form in which the Hon'ble Mover has worded the resolution, yet I deeply sympathise with the object of his resolution. With these words, I beg to suggest to the Government of India to take more pains to see that their recommendations are fully carried out by the Local Governments in the various provinces, and I would also suggest to my friend not to press the resolution in this Council".

The Hon'ble Haji Chaudhri Muhammad Ismail Khan:— "Sir, I welcome the proposal made in this Council by my Hon'ble friend the mover of this resolution. It was the late Mr. Gokhale who said that the great problem before the country was the problem of education. He spoke of the necessity of giving the people the true sort of education and said:—'The increased efficiency of the individual in higher general level of intelligence, the stiffening of the moral backbone of large sections of the community, none of these things can come without such education.' The world is progressing and it is said that now-a-days 'the torch of light is lit for all, and passes on from hand to hand.' Still it is unfortunate that official figures show how small an impression has hitherto been made on the enormous mass of Indian ignorance. This is not the time to enter into the causes which have hampered the progress of education in India, and I will not attempt to apportion their responsibility between the Government and the people. But the fact that in India the percentage of literacy is unusually low must be regretted by all of us. What is more, Sir, in the matter of education the Muhammadans are even more backward than the Hindus. It is, of course, a significant sign of the times that of late the spread of education among the Muhammadans has been brisk, and, in some cases, even more brisk than among our Hindu brethren. Still the backwardness of the Muhammadans is a great handicap to them in the race of life. Some time back the Indian Education Commission remarked 'Apart from the social and historical conditions of the Muhammadan community of India, there are causes of a strictly educational character which heavily weigh it in the race of life.' Sir John Strachey quoted this remark and added—'It must not be assumed that the Muhammadans are always less alive to the value of education than Hindus.' But the question of Muhammadan education has its own peculiar difficulties and should be looked at from a different standpoint. I am glad that this has been admitted by the Government of India and they have, from time to time, made suggestions and recommendations to the Provincial Governments regarding the extension and improvement of Muhammadan education. It is high time that an inquiry was made into the effect given to these suggestions and recommendations by the Provincial Governments and necessary steps taken in the matter. I would suggest that my friend the mover will ask the Committee to submit their report before the Delhi Session of the Legislative Council comes to a close." 11-37 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan:—"Sir, I feel that it is unfair to say anything about this resolution before we know what the Government have actually done in this matter. But whatever Government may have done in promoting education among Muhammadans, I feel that something more remains to be done, because it is well known that in every province the Muhammadans are very backward in education, and whatever additional 11-40 A.M. measures are introduced in the cause of the Muhammadan education they will be welcomed by that community in all parts of the country."

11-41 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi:—"Sir, in his resolution the Hon'ble Mr. Haroon Jaffer recommends the appointment of a committee of officials and non-officials to inquire and report as to the effect given in different Provinces during the past six years to the suggestions and recommendations embodied in the Government of India Resolution to which my Hon'ble friend has referred. In deciding upon my own attitude with regard to this resolution, I was mainly influenced by two considerations. The first of these two considerations was that, during my experience of something like eleven or twelve years in the two Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils, I have found that the appointment of committees, generally speaking, results in postponing action which may be desirable, and, in the second place, I was influenced by a consideration personal to the Hon'ble Mover of this resolution and some other Hon'ble Members . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May I rise to a point of order? Is the Hon'ble Member referring to his own personal attitude or the attitude of the Government?"

The Vice-President:—"As I understand the Hon'ble Member, he is so far referring to his own personal attitude."

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi:—"That is so. When I give expression to the opinion entertained by the Government of India I will say so. Then the second consideration which influenced me was this. Among the non-official members of the Committee, which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Haroon Jaffer wants to be appointed, it is obvious that he and some of the other speakers who have addressed the Council this morning would in all probability be included, and I do not want the Hon'ble Members to tour all over India inquiring into the effects of the Government of India Resolution in the various Provinces just at this period when the elections are approaching, and in consequence the result would be that the field would be left to their opponents in the various Provinces, who could under those circumstances nurse the various constituencies to the ultimate loss of the Reformed Councils. I, therefore, instituted the inquiries which my learned friend wants to be made through this Committee myself immediately after receipt of the notice of this resolution, and I am now going to present to this Council the result of this inquiry, thus obviating the necessity of the appointment of any committee for the purpose which my Hon'ble friend has in view.

"Sir, Hon'ble Members will remember that the Government of India suggested to the Local Governments and Administrations the advisability of convening local committees to consider the question on the lines indicated in that Circular letter. The Governments of Madras, the Punjab and Burma and the Administrations of the Central Provinces, North-West Frontier Province and Coorg did not consider it necessary to appoint committees for the purpose, while the Governments of Bombay, Bengal, the United Provinces and Bihar and Orissa and the Chief Commissioner of Assam did convene local committees. Subsequently, the Governments of Bombay, Bengal and Bihar and Orissa issued resolutions dealing with the recommendations of their respective committees. Effect has already been given to some of the recommendations of these committees, but some of the schemes suggested were held up due to financial stringency caused by the war.

"Sir, to deal, first, with primary education. The measures for improvement suggested were that Muktabs should be encouraged to adopt the secular course, that the teaching of Urdu should be provided and that special text-books should be prepared for semi-secular Muktabs. The provision of Muhammadan hostels and the appointment of Muhammadan teachers and inspectors and a reasonable number of Muhammadan committees and governing bodies of institutions were also mentioned among other matters requiring attention. The achievements of the various Provinces may be summed up as follows :—

Bengal.—A Muhammadan Advisory Committee considered the whole question and over half a lakh was given as increased grant to Muktabs. In addition to an Assistant Director of Public Instruction for Muhammadan education, who was already in existence, five special inspectors for Muslim education were appointed.

Bombay—A Muhammadan Advisory Committee considered the whole question. Satisfactory development has been made among the Mulla schools of Sind. A grant of one lakh recurring was made to carry out improvements in Sind, mainly for a scheme for granting scholarships, for doubling the grants to Mulla schools and for making provision for an inspecting staff, etc. (A special Muhammadan Deputy Inspector was appointed.) In 1918—19, the Government of Bombay sanctioned an additional grant of Rs. 27,000 for distribution among primary schools in Sind and created a second post of Mulla Deputy Inspector. Recently, further grants to these schools have been made and more are contemplated. . . .

The Hon'ble Khan Bhadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer :— "What about the Presidency proper ?"

The Vice-President :—"Order, order."

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi : —United Provinces.—A Special Advisory Committee has carefully considered the question of Muhammadan education. Muktabs are popular and a special curriculum has been framed for them. A special Inspector of Arabic Madrassas has been appointed, as well as a Special Muhammadan Inspector for Muhammadan schools.

Assam.—A Muhammadan committee was appointed to make recommendations and an attempt has been made to convert indigenous Muhammadan schools with a secular course into secular schools with an Islamic course as more likely to fit pupils for employment.

"Thus, it will appear that Muktabs have been specially encouraged in Bengal, United Provinces and Assam, and Muhammadan teachers and inspectors have been appointed in Bengal, Bombay and Madras and the United Provinces. Burma and Bihar and Orissa also appointed special Muhammadan Inspectors.

"Coming now to secondary and collegiate education. The measures for improvement then suggested were the improvement of existing institutions like the Calcutta Madrassa, the Islamia College, Lahore, and the Islamia schools; the establishment of separate Muhammadan institutions and, when this was not possible, the addition to the staff of teachers for the benefit of Muhammadan students; the maintenance of hostels for Muhammadans under private management with religious teaching; the appointment of a reasonable number of Muhammadans to the committees of Government institutions, and the provision of Muhammadan teachers and inspectors.

"The following are the chief items of progress under this head :—

In the United Provinces, Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, has made considerable progress towards expansion of its educational activities. In the Punjab, the Islamia College, Lahore, has been assisted with an Imperial grant of Rs. 30,000. In the North-West Frontier Province, a college has been established at Peshawar, and Government has given grants of Rs. 50,000 recurring, and Rs. 3,37,280 non-recurring, towards its establishment and maintenance. In Madras, the number of secondary schools has risen from four to six. In Bombay, there are four Madrassas, the most prominent of which is the Sind Madrassa at Karachi. In Bengal, a good deal has been done by reserving 25 per cent. of vacancies in all Government and aided colleges, by providing special scholarships, by undertaking entire responsibility for the support of the Madrassas at Dacca, Chittagong, Hooghly and Rajshahi, by insisting on having a Muslim element on the staff of every school, by providing facilities in connection with professional colleges and by ear-marking grants for the improvement of reformed Madrassas. Islamia intermediate classes at the Dacca Madrassa have also been established.

"Turning to Hostels. Extra accommodation has been provided in many places, as Muslim parents attach considerable importance to supervision and religious exercises and instruction. In Bengal, the Baker Hostel attached to the Calcutta Madrassa has been extended and a new Hostel named the Carmichael Hostel has been opened for Muslim students. In Assam, the number of Muslim Hostels has been doubled. There have been expansions in Hostels attached to colleges at Lahore and Peshawar.

"In the matter of scholarships and free studentships, fair progress has been made in some Provinces in the way of enabling the poorer sections of the Muhammadan community to bear the expenses of education by the grant of special scholarships and free exemptions. Madras, Bombay and Bengal have done useful work in this direction. In the Punjab, Bihar and Orissa, Central Provinces, and Assam, fresh scholarships have also been instituted.

"So far as training of teachers is concerned, in Madras, the number of special Training Schools for Muslims rose from four to six. In Bombay, Bengal and Bihar and Orissa, the number of Training Schools are one, six and twelve, respectively. The normal school for Muslims at Amraoti in the Central Provinces has not flourished, and the training class at Khandwa had to be closed.

Special Inspectors.—Various Provinces have appointed special Deputy Inspectors or Sub-Assistant Inspectors or special Maulvis to supervise Muhammadan institutions.

Girls' Schools.—Some progress has been made in some Provinces by the establishment of new Purdah Girls' Schools and the improvement of old schools. But much still remains to be done.

Special grants for Muhammadan education.—The Government of India, in pursuance of the policy laid down in their circular letter of 1913, gave during 1912 and 1913 allotments to the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province which have permitted grants to be made to the Islamia College, Peshawar, of over three lakhs non-recurring and Rs. 50,000 recurring. On the strength of the replies received from Local Governments, the Government of India also allotted Rs. 10,000 recurring in the Central Provinces and Rs. 1,500 recurring in Coorg for purposes of Muhammadan education. The Madras Government made considerable demands for scholarships for Muhammadans and additional Muhammadan inspecting staff. The Government of India allotted Rs. 30,000 recurring during 1913-14 for these purposes, which sum was over half the recurring grant asked for. They also allotted a grant of Rs. 26,000 during the financial year 1914-15 for the improvement of the Islamia College, Lahore, which was raised to Rs. 30,000 in future years.

"Hon'ble Members desirous of obtaining more detailed information may refer to the various publications of which I am prepared to give them a list should they require it.

"It will be seen from this brief statement of what has been already done that, as suggested by the Government of India, the various Local Governments have reached certain definite conclusions regarding the special needs of Muhammadans and have formulated schemes for carrying them out. Action has been taken along certain lines, but several schemes still remain dormant owing to lack of funds.

"The Imperial grants for the special education of Muhammadans have not only been highly welcomed, but have yielded speedy and most beneficial results, and the circular letter of 1913, it will thus be seen, has already produced good effects.

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Shafi; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.]

"The Government of India have no reason to think that Local Governments will not continue to take, as they have done in the past, steps to promote educational advancement amongst Indian Mussalmans, who, by reason of their comparative backwardness in education, are deserving of special encouragement and help. I trust it will satisfy the Hon'ble Mover and other Hon'ble Members who have taken part in this morning's debate, if I assure them that the points specifically raised by them in their speeches will have my careful attention and if, after inquiry, the Government of India consider suitable action necessary, that action will be taken. The Resolution, as framed, is one which the Government of India are unable to accept, as in their judgment the proposal embodied therein will serve no useful purpose."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea :—"Sir, I must congratulate the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Department of Education on the statement which he has just read out. It is a splendid record of useful and valuable work done for the benefit of the Muhammadan community and for the promotion of education among the members of that community. I hope and trust it will have the effect of dispelling the hallucinations of my Hon'ble friend to my right Nawab Nawab Ali Chaudhuri. He seems to think that claims of Muhammadans to employment in the Education Department or to facilities being given to Muhammadan young men for education are being systematically neglected. Nothing of the sort, so far as one can judge from the report that has just been read out. Speaking as a Hindu, I will say this that we have the deepest sympathy with Muhammadan aspirations for education, and that we do not grudge them the legitimate measure of employment in the educational service of the country consistent with the efficiency of that department. That is the attitude of the Hindu community with regard to Muhammdans in the matter of education." 11-56 A.M.

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri :—"Sir, may I offer a personal explanation? I have not suggested that the Government of Bengal has not taken notice of the grievances of the Muhammadans. This much I will say, however, that we have not been favoured by the Calcutta University in looking after our grievances." 11-57 A.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"Sir, if there is no impropriety or audacity in a non-Moslem like me participating in a debate on a question of Muhammadan education, I would like to say one word. I would at the outset. Sir, say that I am in the deepest sympathy with the anxiety of my Hon'ble friend the Mover of this Resolution and other Hon'ble Moslem members of this Council about Moslem education, but it seems to me, after having heard the very lucid and very full statement of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi, that there is no room for the appointment of a Committee to inquire about the matter. At the same time, Sir, I am inclined to think that some modification of the Resolution might satisfy my Hon'ble friend the Educational Member as well as the Mover of this Resolution. What my Hon'ble friend the Mover of the Resolution has at heart evidently is to know the real position in which the matter now stands, and, I think, this can be done without interposing the necessity of a Committee like the one he proposes. I think, Sir, if the Government of India were to make further inquiry of the Local Governments to see what effect has been given to their recommendations and the results obtained and what further efforts should be made in this direction, that might satisfy my Hon'ble friend the Mover's desire, and I think that may not be unacceptable to the Hon'ble Member for Education. If the Council will permit me, I would make a suggestion that some amendment might be made on these lines in the Resolution. 11-58 A.M.

"Before I sit down, Sir, I wish to say one word with regard to the ill-timed attack of my Hon'ble friend Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhuri against the Calcutta University I think we know clearly that my Hon'ble friend is suffering from a chronic distemper, a feeling of hostility against the Calcutta University. He persists in assuming that it is a Hindu body and forgets that it is no more Hindu than the Government of Madras is Hindu. It is under the domination of a large number of highly paid English educational officers and European educationists of the town of Calcutta in the persons of the Director of Public Instruction and Principals of high grade colleges.

"I do not see why my Hon'ble friend should assume that there is a feeling of hostility against the Muslim community among the Hindu members of the University. On an ex parte statement like that of a partisan I do not think I need defend the Calcutta University; that body can take care of itself. But let me mention one or two points in this connection. In the first place, my Hon'ble friend complains that there is no Muslim Member on the Syndicate I do not know that that is correct. I remember, Sir, last year, at an election I was going to propose the name of a Muslim gentleman, in Calcutta; but he withdrew and asked me not to propose his name. I believe there are still some Muhammadan gentlemen on the Syndicate of the University. But the University makes a rule, I think,—it may be unwise from the Hon'ble Member's point of view—that only educationists and persons having high academic distinctions ought to be in a body like the Syndicate, and I think they are following this policy; and if they erred, I think they erred in good company, for I think my Hon'ble friend Mir Asad Ali Khan said that the practice of Madras was also the same as that of Bengal in this matter. With these words, Sir, I would ask the leave of the Council to move the following amendment:—

'That for the words 'a committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to inquire . . . the following be substituted :—

'That he be pleased to inquire from Provincial Governments what further effect can be given, etc., etc.'

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Member must hand in a copy of his amendment; if any member objects he cannot move it."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:— "May I know what the amendment is?"

The Vice-President:—"Certainly. The Hon'ble Mr. Chanda will give the Hon'ble Member a copy.

"I think I ought to point out to the Council that this practice which is now rapidly growing up of Hon'ble Members proposing amendments to resolutions at a very late stage causes a great deal of inconvenience to the Council. I would suggest that as a result of some happy thought occurring at the end of a debate we often have to wait while an Hon'ble Member's amendment is put into form."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I am sorry, Sir, this amendment struck me at the last moment."

The Vice-President:—"No doubt, another happy thought!"

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:— "I accept the amendment of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda. I want to know whether Government do likewise."

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Member must continue his reply; the Member in charge will be able to make any final observations he may think necessary."

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer; Mr. Shafi; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy; The Vice-President.]

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:—"I have accepted the amendment. After I know whether the Government accepts it or not, I will make a final reply."

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi:—"On behalf of Government I accept the resolution as amended."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:—"Sir, I am highly thankful to the Member in charge for accepting my resolution."

The following resolution was put and adopted—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he be pleased to inquire from Provincial Governments what further effect can be given to the suggestions and recommendations made by the Government of India to the Provincial Governments regarding the extension and improvement of Muhammadan education.'

RESOLUTION RE INDIANS IN BRITISH AFRICA.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Sir, the Resolution which I have the honour to move runs as follows:— 12-10 P. M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to obtain the permission of His Majesty's Government to empower the Hon'ble Sir Benjamin Robertson to study the status and condition of Indians settled in British Africa and to instruct him to report to the Government of India the measures necessary to check the anti-Indian agitation in those regions, and to place the said Indian settlers in a position of equality with the white settlers there.'

This Resolution is rather long but really it is not so. The facts to which it relates are admitted, and there is no likelihood of there being any dispute about them. The first point is, whether there is something in the condition of the settlers that requires to be looked into. That question will, I believe, be answered in the affirmative. His Excellency in his speech opening this Session said:—

'Since we met last September, our anxieties regarding the future of our Indian fellow-subjects in South Africa have increased rather than diminished. As you have read in the paper, a recent decision of the Transvaal Provincial Court endangers rights which we hoped had been secured beyond dispute by the Act of last summer. I would, however, renew most earnestly my plea for calmness. In a few weeks, probably South Africa will be in the throes of a general election. It will only injure those whom we desire to help, if agitation here forces the Indian question to the front as an election issue'.

"Meanwhile fresh difficulties are arising in the British East Africa Protectorate. I believe the condition of the Indians living in East Africa requires to be looked into; that is not a matter that can be disputed. We want to put forward the view of the Government of India and His Excellency's reference of 30th January last . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"May I ask if the question raised is that of the whole of British Africa?"

The Vice-President:—"The question raised in the Resolution is British Africa."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"British East Africa is not a self-governing Dominion, and the position of the Government of India is, and always will be, that there is no justification in a Crown Colony or Protectorate for assigning to British Indians a status in any way inferior to that of any other class of His Majesty's subjects. This is what I mean. This is practically the same thing. The Resolution says 'to place the said Indian settlers in a position of equality with the white settlers there.' The question of settlers became prominent last year and before I left England there was a rumour that a commission was to be appointed and an Indian gentleman was likely to be appointed a member of the Commission. The rumours may have been right or wrong. It may be, as was alleged, that the Indian gentleman declined to serve on the Commission. Whatever may be the case, that Commission has now been appointed and in the 'Mahratta' of the 15th February there is a passage about the personnel of the Commission. It says 'Mr. Hofmeyer represents the Municipalities that want to deprive the Indians of their trading and property rights and Mr. Baxter represents the trading and commercial interests which do not want Indian competition.' These gentlemen with Judge Landé form the Commission of inquiry there. The Judge being a member of the Bar with training on the Bench we have good reason to believe that he will bring his judicially trained mind to bear on the questions before him. But the other two gentlemen, I am sorry to say, have a reputation of being, or at any rate it is thought, they are antagonistic. That is what we read, that they are antagonistic to the interests of Indians in Africa. Now, I ask that Sir Benjamin Robertson may be given power to make inquiries for himself in respect of the status and condition of the Indians there, and make recommendations about these matters. There are two matters; first, there is the anti-Indian agitation set on foot, through whom it is difficult to conjecture at this distance, but to judge by what has occurred I believe there is a body who desire to turn these Indians out of Africa, or, at any rate, so to restrict their numbers that their influence will not be felt in public affairs. And the next is, that this anti-Indian agitation should be checked and rendered ineffectual. My object in asking the Government of India to give powers to Sir Benjamin Robertson is to enable him to propose remedies as to how this anti-Indian agitation will be controlled and checked, if possible nullified. Then, again, I ask that Sir Benjamin Robertson may propose some measures which will have the effect of giving relief to the Indian settlers and of putting them on the basis of equality with other settlers in that part of the world. I know the Government of India has no jurisdiction in Africa, and I know it has been said by His Excellency that British East Africa is not a self-governing Dominion. Even if the Government of India has not direct authority in Africa, at any rate, we have got some means by which we can put pressure on East Africa and South Africa and I invoke this by means of this Resolution. We may put our case before the British Government and hope the British Government will insist on certain privileges and certain rights being conceded to Indian settlers.

"In the absence of any Indian representative on the Commission I believe that Sir Benjamin Robertson, who has already been appointed, is a well qualified gentleman to represent our case. He has served long in India and, I believe, he is in the confidence of the Government of India, or else he would not have been appointed. From the little I have seen of him I believe he is in sympathy with our aspirations and desires to see Indians on an equality with other subjects. That being so, in the circumstances, it is not unreasonable to ask the Government of India to request him to make inquiries on his own account; he will represent our case, fight our battle as far as he can before the Commission, and I am sure that he will come to conclusions of his own. I should like the Government of India to get the benefit of his conclusions. So I commend the Resolution which I have placed before the Government. I trust my request is not unreasonable. With these words, I place the Resolution before the Council for acceptance."

12-13 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"Sir, I myself think that it is a very large order that the Hon'ble Sir Benjamin Robertson should be asked to go round the whole of Africa including Soudan and all other places and report to the Government of India. Of course the case of East Africa is quite different. That question is now in the forefront. The Government of India have also received petitions from the Indian merchants who have settled in East Africa. The Indians were the first people who settled down in East Africa and commenced trading. Then the Britishers came in, and settled down in the highlands of Nairobi and other places; and there is great friction between the Indians and Britishers. Therefore, it is most essential that the Government of India should be properly informed of the exact conditions there. Therefore, Sir, if you will just allow me to move an amendment, I would propose instead of 'British Africa,' it should be 'British East Africa' . . .

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"I could not quite catch what the Hon'ble Member said regarding his amendment."

The Vice-President:—"I understand the amendment of the Hon'ble Member is to insert the word 'East' between 'British' and 'Africa.'"

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"And to instruct him to report to the Government of India about the condition there."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Would that exclude inquiry into the South African question?"

The Vice-President:—"Apparently it would."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"In that case I do not see my way to accept it."

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"Sir, I have only got two difficulties with regard to the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde. First, it seems to me that the words in the latter part of the resolution 'measures necessary to check' imply that the Government of India have got power over the Governments either of East Africa or of the Union of South Africa. If he would allow those words to be taken out and let the resolution run 'and instruct him to report to the Government of India and suggest remedies,' then I can accept his resolution. That seems to me to cover the whole ground, and, I think, my friend the mover will be satisfied with it. That is the first difficulty that I have with regard to this resolution. 12-24 P.M.

"The next difficulty is that we have already done everything that the resolution asks. I think that what we have done with regard to South Africa is really common knowledge because it has been published in all the newspapers. With regard to East Africa, I think I had better tell him and the members of this Council exactly what steps we have taken in the matter. I have got here a précis of the telegrams which have passed between the Secretary of State and the Government of India. Last December we telegraphed to the Secretary of State that we should like to send the Hon'ble Sir Benjamin Robertson to East Africa as well as to South Africa, and in January, in reply, we received a telegram from the Secretary of State stating that the Colonial Office consider that in the absence of the Governor of East Africa, General Northey, who is, as a matter of fact, at present in London, and pending the discussion between Lord Milner and the Governor of East Africa in London, a formal conference between the authorities in British East Africa and Sir Benjamin Robertson would be premature. But we have been told, and this is the important thing, that there is no objection to Indian questions being discussed between them informally. So the discussions will go on concurrently. Sir Benjamin Robertson on his way back from South Africa will go to East Africa, and will see all the leading officials there and any leading members of the Indian community, and will discuss the position with them and will make a report on the whole position to the Government of India. That is one discussion; meanwhile another discussion will take place in London at which General Northey, Lord Milner and Mr. Montagu will be present, and we can rely, I am sure, that our interests will be very safe in the hands of Mr. Montagu. The Secretary of State has got all the facts before him, and I am sure that Hon'ble Members of this Council will realise we have taken every step that we can in the matter. We have put all the facts before the Secretary of State and we have sent Sir Benjamin Robertson out to make a report on the spot in East Africa. We have not, I may add, been content with that alone. As Sir Benjamin Robertson was going to East Africa, and as there were difficulties, I am sorry to say, with the Indian community in Uganda also, we have instructed Sir Benjamin Robertson to proceed from East Africa to Uganda. It is only one day's journey, and there also he will make inquiries, carry on discussion with officials and with Indians, and make a report to the Government of India. I hope, Sir, that this statement will be satisfactory to the Hon'ble member and to this Council."

2-28 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Sir, I cannot see my way to accept the amendment of my Hon'ble friend Sir Fazulbhoy omitting the words South Africa from the Resolution. As to the other suggestion, it is merely a matter of words, and I have no objection to accept it. The Hon'ble Member for Commerce suggests the words 'to suggest remedies' and I say 'measures'. I think that does not make much difference so far as I can see. So I shall accept that. I believe there is nothing more."

The Vice-President:—"I think it would probably be to the convenience of the Council if I suggest what really emerges from this rather tangled skein, and that is that the resolution should run as follows:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to obtain the permission of His Majesty's Government to empower the Hon'ble Sir Benjamin Robertson to study the status and condition of Indians settled in South Africa and in British East Africa, and to instruct him to report to the Government of India and to suggest remedies.'

"That appears to be acceptable to the mover, and I think, probably to Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy and to the Member in charge. If any Member of the Council will move that as an amendment, I shall be happy to put it to the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"I move that as an amendment."

The Vice-President:—"I do not think it is necessary for me to read the resolution again or the amendment."

The amended resolution was put and adopted.

RESOLUTION RE RETRENCHMENT BOARDS.

12-30 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, pending the presentation of the Financial Statement, I beg to withdraw the resolution* which stands in my name. I may mention that I have the approval of the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey in this."

The Vice-President:—The resolution is not moved.

11. By the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to constitute Retrenchment Boards with a view to concert measures for the reduction of Civil and Military expenditure to pre-war standards consistent with the increased need due to circumstances such as the rise in prices.'

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; The Vice-President; Mr. V. J. Patel; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

POINT OF ORDER.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" May I point out, Sir, that the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's resolution and the next one which stands in the name of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel cover nearly the same ground, and I think it would be better to have both taken together." 12-31 P. M.

The Vice-President :—" It is a matter for the Hon'ble Members. I do not know whether the Hon'ble Mr. Patel would like his resolution taken with the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" I have no objection unless Mr. Sarma objects."

The Vice-President :—" We cannot take them as one resolution, but there will be one discussion on the two resolutions."

RESOLUTION RE FINANCIAL INDEPENDENCE OF CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I beg to move the resolution which stands against my name, namely :— 12-34 P. M.

'That this Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should recommend that no financial contribution is necessary or should be taken from the Provinces in any scheme of financial decentralisation that may be intioduced.'

" This is an extremely important resolution having a great bearing upon the success of the Reform scheme, and I therefore need not apologise for asking the indulgence of the Council in introducing it. The question was investigated before the reforms were formulated by Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford, taking as the basis the budget figures of 1917-18, and it was found that the Imperial revenue and Imperial expenditure on the basis which they then proposed would not balance each other, and that a contribution of thirteen crores and odd had to be taken from the Provincial revenues. Therefore, the proposals were made on that basis. We have had about three years since then to understand the financial position of India, and the question arises as to whether really, taking the Imperial revenue and expenditure as they would be under the scheme as propounded, there would be any necessity whatsoever for any contribution from the Provinces to the Imperial exchequer. In my humble judgment, I think absolutely no such contribution would be needed. It will be found, I think, on analysis and examination that the sources of revenue which have been reserved to the Government of India are extremely elastic and important. The growth of revenue every year is very large, and it will be found that there would be no real deficit in a normal year, and, on the other hand, it may be that the Government of India would be able to finance some schemes of the Provincial Governments from their surplus funds. Even apart from the question whether Imperial revenue and expenditure would balance one another, I would submit, Sir, that it is worthy of consideration whether in any sound scheme of provincial decentralisation it would not be worthwhile to take a little risk and look to Imperial revenue alone for meeting Imperial expenditure. Inasmuch as on the second point discussion is unnecessary on the figures as they stand, I shall not weary the Council at the present stage with that. There was a good deal of controversy raised as to whether particular provinces were not asked to contribute more than others, and whether there was not injustice done and so on. But all these questions are only remotely relevant to the present issue. The whole question is, whether there would be an Imperial deficit and how it is to be met. Colonel Wedgewood raised this question in the House of Commons when the Reforms Bill was passing through it, and in the course of that discussion he said :—

'We provide for contributions, and what I object to is that contributions should be claimed from the Provincial Governments for the Central Government in India. The Central Government already has large sources of revenue. It has the Income-tax, which is now a considerable tax in India; it has the Salt Tax, it has the Railway Revenue, and as soon as this Act is passed it will have a large number of Import Duties, and, therefore, we have got for the Central Government a large and an increasing revenue, and I wish to enter my protest against the demand that is made that all the eight Provinces should also contribute their quota to the Central Government. I am afraid, and I know many Indians are afraid too, that if these contributions are stereotyped at their present amounts, the Central Government will have, so to speak, a perpetual mortgage on the revenues of the Provinces, while, as a matter of fact, the Central Government has within its own fiscal ambit an ample revenue for all the Central needs.'

" And then he also foreshadowed extravagance and waste. Ultimately the question resolved itself into one of facts and figures, and Mr. Montagu said :—

'I would really not like to commit myself to a view as to the taxable capacity of India. That is a subject I would wish to leave to the Government of India to decide, but, whatever the facts, they could not be decided in a day or two.'

" This answer was given in reply to a question by Colonel Wedgewood :—

'Will the Right Hon'ble Gentleman address himself to the argument that those contributions are not necessary, in view of the fact that the Indian Government itself could raise its own revenue without any necessary contributions whatever?'

" So Mr. Montagu is of opinion that an inquiry would have to be instituted and the question finally decided as a result of that inquiry. I hope the Government of India has instituted that inquiry, or will institute the inquiry, and will find that, as a matter of fact, there would be no contribution necessary, and it is to enable the Council to arrive at a judgment that I have brought forward this resolution.

" I will first take the figures of 1917-18, 1918-19 and 1919-20 as a basis and proceed to show that, as far as I can see, subject to correction, there would not be any deficit in Imperial revenue. Taking the figures for 1917-18 I think, Sir, the revenue would be approximately between 63 and 64 million pounds. I take here the rate of 1*s*. 4*d*—and the expenditure would be below 60 million pounds. And in this year 1917-18 we have two abnormal features, namely, that the political expenditure was £2 million odd, which is an extremely large figure, and the military expenditure was £30·7 millions, or 46 crores of rupees, as against a comparatively low figure for the preceding years. I may invite the attention of Hon'ble Members to the fact that the military expenditure before the war was considerably less than what it happens to be now. In 1913-14, it was only 19·8 millions, in 1914-15, it was 20·4 millions, in 1915-16, it was 22·2, and in 1916-17, it was 24·9. Then there was a big jump upwards and it became 30 millions and odd in 1917-18 and the revenues and expenditure balanced one another and there would have been, I think, a little surplus on that basis during that year. In 1918-19, I see that the income would be 72 millions and the expenditure would be about 85 millions, that is there would have been a deficit of 13 millions. But why is that so? It is because of the military expenditure during the war and certain expenditure which we undertook that the total amounted to 43 millions. There was an excess of 13 over the 1917-18 figure and that is the deficit you see there. Even if you take the military expenditure at 30 millions, there would not have been any deficit at all. In the budget provision for 1919-20, you may take it that the revenue would be about £71 millions and odd and the expenditure about £80 millions, or a deficit of £9 millions. Why is that so? Because the military expenditure was 41·4 or 11 millions more than the figures for 1917-18 and much more than the previous pre-war figures. And here we undertook about £8 millions and odd, the cost of the troops operating outside India. Of course against this has to be set off the excess profits duty of about 6 millions. But even then there would have been a surplus and not a deficit on the revenues of that year with a normal military expenditure, if you take the railway revenue at its proper figure. Therefore we find the experience of 1917-18, 1918-19 and 1919-20 verifying this that in a normal year, as the figures stand, there would be absolutely no deficit, and there would be no need for any contribution from the provinces to the Imperial exchequer.

"Then, let us see as to whether these resources are not extremely elastic, and whether we cannot in the ordinary course of things expect a very much larger increase in the various resources. I shall take up Customs first. Hon'ble Members will find that there has been a growth of Custom revenue from April to January of the current year of 244 lakhs notwithstanding the fact that less rice has been exported, and there has been a deficit of 76 lakhs of rupees over the previous year's figures in rice alone. The amount under Skins duty would have been much larger if the Raw Skins Export tax had been imposed a little earlier. Another circumstance which is worthy of note is that the quantities of materials sent out of India since the war have been much less than during the pre-war period on account of lack of shipping, the extremely unsettled state of Europe and various other causes. We shall, however, be able in the immediate future to look to a normal course of trade when the quantities will be the same and larger with increased production. We need not expect any very considerable fall in the values of these articles which alone have been able to keep up our Custom revenue, having regard to the fact that the currencies of almost every country are bloated. Apart from speculation, we find that we have got in this year about 244 lakhs in ten months already, and I submit, Sir, that if we analyse the figures of the values and quantities we have every reason to be optimistic in this matter. Hon'ble Members will find that in the case of raw jute it was 768,000 tons in 1913-14 and but a half of that, 398,000 in 1818-19; in the case of rice not in the husk it was 48 and 40 million cwt., in the case of raw skins and hides nearly half, namely, 1,632,000 as against 891,000. In the case of sugar also the figures are 17·9 as against 10·5. Cotton—that is important, we find that against 3,158 million yards imported in 1913-14 the quantity imported during 1918-19 was only about 1,100 million or nearly a third. But, on account of high prices, the values were nearly the same, 6 crores against 6. We do not look to any immediate fall in the price of cloth and, therefore, with the increase in the imported quantities of cotton cloth, an enormous revenue should be expected from the cotton trade. As regards metals, it is the same 1 million and odd tons as against 181,000 or a little over one-fifth or nearly one-sixth. So, if you carry on the analysis, you will find that under almost every head the quantities have fallen considerably and it was only the increased values that kept up our Customs duties. Therefore, I am justified in saying that, even if there be any general modification in the Tariff, we can expect a large increase in our Custom revenue.

"With regard to railways, Sir, I may be permitted to say a word. During the current year we provided out of revenue for about Rs. 9¾ for repairs and reduced the revenue account. These extraordinary repairs do not occur every year and the revenue is bound to go up as soon as we get an increased rolling-stock, because it is a patent fact that the railways are not equal to the merchandise that is offering itself for transport, and under that also our revenue is bound to increase. Even with the limited quantity we see an increase of two crores of rupees in the figures between last year and this year during the last ten months. So, we may look to an increase of revenue under railways every year, and that also in a largely increasing proportion. There is a new factor that has assisted and will assist us considerably, and that is the saving in exchange. If at 1*s.* 4*d.* we had to remit 36 crores of rupees, at two shillings we shall have to remit only 24, and at 2*s.* 8*d.* or at 2*s.* 10*d.* we shall have to remit very much less. Therefore, the saving under that head to the Government ranges between £8 and £12 millions. Again you have about 3 to 4 crores increase in Railway revenue in addition to the 9¾ crores we put in last year. We have an increase also under Income-tax; there are so many new Companies starting and the wealth of a certain section of the community is increasing.

"I do not think I need add anything more in saying that the Imperial Revenues are extremely elastic; one comparison will, I think, convince Hon'ble Members more than anything else that the picture I am presenting is not overdrawn. Hon'ble Members will find that the provincial revenue allotted to the provinces under the new scheme would be about 36·7 millions in 1913-14 before the war. The amount would be 43 or an increase of 7 in 1919-20, that is about 18 to 20 per cent. increase, whereas under the head of Imperial, under Opium, Salt, Stamps, Income-tax, Tributes, Commercial Services and Exchange, you will find that the income has increased from 20·6 million pounds to 41·8 million, that is the Imperial Revenue has doubled itself in six years, i.e., from 1913-14 to 1918-19. I submit, therefore, that it is unfair of the Government of India with such a large increase to ask the provinces again to contribute to them. And we know clearly that although the provinces may not be ready with their schemes to-morrow to meet any large increase in their own revenues, I am certain that the schemes which were worked out some time ago under education and sanitation would require almost every pie of the provincial revenues. I think Sir C. Sankaran Nair, when he was Education Member, gave us a picture of what the provinces would require towards expenditure under primary education alone, some crores of rupees if you are to make education compulsory and free. Well, I need hardly allude to those figures in detail because those figures will, I think, never be reached even if no contributions are levied from the provinces in favour of the Imperial Exchequer. Therefore, there is no use in telling us that the Local Governments would be unable to digest any large increase in their revenues. May I say, Sir, that, even assuming for argument's sake, that it can be shown that in a particular year the Imperial resources fall a little short, there is absolutely no difficulty whatsoever about money being taken from the provinces by way of loan. It is only a suggestion that I make, and, I think, it is unnecessary to make that suggestion either. The real trouble seems to my mind to be this: that we have a large amount of floating debt which will have to be cleared; we will have to incur a large amount of expenditure on railways in order to keep them efficient and in order to add to them; and we have had last year and this year the Afghan and frontier wars on our hands and they drained the Government largely of their surplus money and possibly involved them in debt. The question is one of policy. Are you going to meet these extraordinary charges from current revenue and from the future revenues of India, during the next three or four years, or are you going to provide for their payment from capital with a large sinking fund, so that the whole amount may be liquidated in a longer or shorter time according as policy may dictate? That is the real question. We have, it is true, incurred a certain amount of loss in our securities in the Paper Currency Reserve. Are you going to meet that out of revenue? These are extraordinary losses, and are you going to employ this revenue to meet these extraordinary losses? Of course, if the Government say that all these extraordinary losses must not only in the present year, but for some years to come, be met from revenue, then surely they will have a case for saying that the provinces should contribute. But may I submit, Sir, that on a normal budget basis, if the revenues are not underestimated and the expenditure not grossly exaggerated, with a rupee at two shillings and even more at present, it would be absolutely unnecessary to ask for a single pie of contribution from the provinces? I was rather discursive in speaking on the budget figures of 1919-20. I sum up the figures so that you may be in a position to see if the basis is correct, as to whether the conclusion can be other than what I have stated it to be. If you have a two-shilling basis you save at least 8 crores of rupees in exchange; if you add to that 10 crores of rupees provided for extraordinary charges under repairs which were intended to be incurred last year and provide for a normal growth of revenue, and if your customs revenue is growing at about 2 crores a year, then under these three heads alone you have 20 crores, let alone the income-tax and other things. Of course, when you remove the excess profits tax, there will be a decrease in the revenue, but there will be decrease on the expenditure side as well. I do not think we need worry ourselves about income-tax and other heads of revenue just at the present moment. These three heads alone will give you 20 crores of rupees, and there would be a diminution from 41 million pound to, let us say, 25 to 30 million pound. The pre-war figure was only 19 million pound; before 1916-17, it was only 24 million pound. It ran up to 30 million pound in that year and there cannot, therefore, be any doubt that our military figure must be reduced by more than 11 to 16 million pound. It may be said that we have not made any provision for increases in the salaries of officials. Even assuming, Sir, that about 2 crores of rupees or 1·4 millions roughly are the direct charges, even assuming that their salaries are increased by 20 per cent., the total does not amount to more than 50 lakhs, putting it at its highest. I think, therefore, there is enough margin under these heads to cover any increased expenditure for the industrial department that may be started and for the increased charges under salaries and pensions that may be provided for for people serving the Government of India. Then there would necessarily be a re-adjustment, so that several charges which come under the Government of India now would be debited really to the provinces because the officials in the Government of India cadre do serve in the provinces, and there would be a re-adjustment of the balances in that way. Therefore we can afford to look to a saving under that head from the Imperial budget, while at the same time there would be such an enormous growth in revenue as to cover all possible increases in expenditure, foreseeable as well as unforseeable. I submit, therefore, Sir, on a fair estimate of the revenue and expenditure, there would be no necessity whatsoever to ask the provinces to contribute any money to the Imperial Exchequer. There is another point and that is this. Our tariffs are very low (I am not asking that they should be increased) from the revenue point of view as against the tariffs obtaining in England or in the United States of America and other countries; and commercial men have gone so far as to say that even a 20 per cent. tariff would be only a revenue tariff and not a protectionist tariff; and it has been found that the 15 per cent. that we imposed upon raw hides and skins was really not a protectionist tariff but only a revenue duty. Therefore I submit, Sir, that we have provision and margin in our import duties alone. I think also, Sir, that our liquors do not pay the same as in England. People in India get their liquor at a very much cheaper rate than they are able to obtain it in England. I, therefore, think that we have got another enormous source of increase in the liquor traffic.

"I need not analyse the position further. I have said enough, I hope, to convince Hon'ble Members that the resolution I have moved is not an unreasonable one, but, on the other hand, extremely reasonable, and that the dictates of good government demand that the provinces should be relieved of this burden. The new ministers will be faced with immense responsibilities. I do not think that the Government would seriously contemplate associating in the mind of the people reforms with increased taxation. I know that for any real good to be done we shall have to teach the people that they would have to tax themselves if any good is to come; but I trust that in the beginning an attempt will be made, as far as possible, to prevent any such associations springing up in the minds of the people; and if you can do so reasonably—and with correct data before us—I think we can do so. It must be the duty of all of us in the Government of India to enable the Provincial Governments to start with normal balances, if possible, with some surplus in their hands, so that they may make the reforms popular and a success."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution which stands in my name :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the terms of reference to the Provincial Financial Relations Committee under the Chairmanship of Lord Meston should empower the Committee to examine the question whether the Central Government could not be financially independent of the provinces and self-supporting without the help of any provincial contributions.'

"Sir, in the first place, I wish to explain how this resolution stands in reference to the Resolution which has been moved by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma Mr. Sarma has pleaded that no contribution whatever is necessary from the provinces; he has tried to prove by facts and figures that the Imperial revenues are sufficient or, at any rate, can be made sufficient to meet the Imperial needs. The Resolution that I move wants the Government of India to go into the question and see whether what Mr. Sarma's Resolution recommends can really be done. My Resolution really is an alternative to the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. So far as the merits of Mr. Sarma's Resolution are concerned, I am entirely in agreement. I endorse every argument which he has advanced in support of his Resolution. I am one of those who believe that the Imperial Government can be made financially independent and should not need any contribution from Local Governments. But if that question cannot be decided on the spot, my resolution suggests an alternative, namely, that Lord Meston's Committee should go into the question and see if the Government of India could not be made financially independent and self-supporting without any provincial contributions. The reason why I suggest that Lord Meston's Committee should go into this question is this; the Meston Committee is already entrusted with the work of examining the question of provincial contributions necessary under the new régime for the Government of India. Now as the Council is aware, before the Meston Committee was appointed, the question was raised by Colonel Wedgwood in the House of Commons when the Government of India Bill was under consideration, whether the Imperial Government should not be financially independent of the provinces. He in fact maintained that that could be done, and he pointed out the difficulties of the present system. He also stated how under provincial contributions the tendency of the Government of India would be towards extravagance. It is in the interest both of the Government of India and of Local Governments, I submit, that they should be independent of each other in this respect. This is what Colonel Wedgwood said.

'There are two main arguments for the amendment. The first is that the Government of India has resources of its own which must be increased as the years go on. The import duties alone are an enormous increasing asset in India. Beyond that they have not any sort of death or succession or transfer duties, and all those when they come will be Central taxes which will amply recompense the Government of India for any loss due to succession of the contribution from the Provinces, and therefore I move this merely as indicating that in the next step when we give really responsible government to the provinces at the same time the grants from the Provinces to the Central Government shall cease and the Central Government become self-supporting. Anything less will lead to bitterness in the provinces and extravagance at Delhi. There is nothing which makes people so susceptible to extravagance as unlimited resources, and if we have a clear indication that these provincial contributions ought to cease, and that the taxation from the provinces, the land-revenue and all the other local taxes are to be for local and not for central purposes then you will have a prospect not only of the harmonious working of this Act, but of a real step forward in Indian rule and a genuine federal Government of India in which the Provinces will be financially independent of the Central Government, and the Central Government financially independent of the Provinces."

"In reply to this plea, Mr. Montagu, the Secretary of State for India, talked about the appointment of the Provincial Financial Relations Committee and Lord Meston as its Chairman and so on. Colonel Wedgwood thereupon at once drew the attention of the Secretary of State to the actual question raised by him and said 'will the the Right Hon'ble gentleman address himself to the argument that these contributions are not necessary in view of the fact that the Indian Government itself could raise its own revenue without any necessary contributions whatever.' To this query of Colonel Wedgwood's Mr. Montagu replied 'I would really not like to commit myself to a view as to the taxable capacity of India. That is a subject I would wish to leave to the Government of India to decide, but whatever the fact they could not be decided in a day or two.' Now since that statement has been made by Mr. Montagu I do not know whether the Government of India have made the inquiry suggested by Mr. Montagu. If they have found as a matter of fact that contributions are not necessary, then by all means I am quite prepared to withdraw my resolution, but if no inquiry has so far been made, I suggest that that inquiry should be put to the Committee which is about to go into the question of the provincial contributions. When I gave notice of my resolution, I did not know the personnel of the Committee under the Chairmanship of Lord Meston, nor did I know what the terms of the reference were I now find that in the terms of reference this particular question to which Mr. Montagu referred has not been included. I want the Meston Committee to go into the question as to whether it is not possible to make the Government of India financially independent of the provinces. As Colonel Wedgwood has stated it is absolutely necessary that the provinces must be free to spend their resources in any way they like, and that they must be financially independent of the Government of India. As Mr. Sarma has pointed out the new situation that has arisen under the constitutional reforms is a very serious one so far as financial matters are concerned. There are chances of friction on many matters between the Minister and the rest of the Government; there are chances of differences between the Minister and Legislative Council, there are chances of disagreement between the elected members of the Legislative Councils and their constituents and all this for insufficiency of funds. It would be much better, therefore, if we could devise some means by which Provincial Governments could be made financially independent. Under the new régime you will not have to make any grants in the matter of Sanitation or Education; the huge grants which are being made year by year by the Government of India under these heads will not be made in future because these subjects will, I understand, be Transferred Subjects The Provincial Governments will have to undertake large schemes of Sanitation and compulsory education and they will require very large revenues for the purpose. Therefore, I trust, that if this question is not disposed of as suggested by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma, it should at any rate be explored as suggested by my resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey:—"Sir, if I rise to answer the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and the Hon'ble Mr. Patel at once, it is because I feel that probably most members of the Council sympathise with them in principle. Every non-official of this Council represents here to some extent at all events, the interests of his province; and it goes without saying that in the interests of their provinces they would naturally prefer that no contributions should be paid to the Central Government. That is true, I suppose, of everybody without distinction. Certain of the provinces under the scheme outlined in the Joint Report would be surplus provinces and would pay contributions. Certain would be deficit provinces, but the interests of the deficit provinces are really the same, because they know that the first thing which a surplus province which has to pay a contribution would demand is that the deficit province should raise extra taxation in order that aggregate contribution of the surplus provinces may be reduced. 1-15 P.M.

"Well, Sir, my object is to state the case to the Council exactly as it stands now, and when I have done so, I think that perhaps the Hon'ble Movers of both the resolutions will admit that we have gone some way to meet their case. In the first place, the proposal to levy contributions from the provinces must not be banned as an improper or unconstitutional idea. I can remember well what the late Mr. Gokhale said on this question, and if there are some members here who think perhaps that Mr. Gokhale did not go far enough in his political conceptions, there are others, I am sure, who will join with me in feeling that Mr Gokhale on financial matters showed statesmanship and foresight. It will interest the Council to hear what he said on this particular question of contributions in March 1911. He said :—

'What I propose, my Lord, is that instead of receiving its whole income from growing revenues, the Government of India should receive large fixed contributions from Provincial Governments, say up to about one-third or one-fourth of its revenues, the other two-thirds or three-fourths being derived from growing resources. I think in this matter it is desirable to examine the practice of other countries, and there are three countries which can supply some sort of guidance to us on this subject – Switzerland, Germany and America Switzerland, however, is a very small country, and I will therefore leave it out of consideration. The example which, I think, we should follow in this matter is that supplied by Germany. America is too advanced for us, because the federal finance of America is entirely separate from State finance, and it will be a long long time before we reach that stage if we ever reach it at all. But in Germany, my Lord, while the Empire has its own independent revenues, and the component States gave theirs, the component States also make large contributions to the Exchequer of the Empire In fact, nearly one-fourth of the revenue of the Empire is at present derived from fixed contributions from the component States and about three-fourths is derived from independent sources, such as Customs and Excise and Stamps. Now, I think, this is the direction in which we have to seek a solution of our problem. The Government of India should have about one-third or one-fourth of its revenue derived from fixed contributions made by the Provincial Governments.'

And if Hon'ble Members would care to turn at any time to the evidence given by Mr Gokhale before the Decentralization Commission, they will find that he outlined a scheme very like that which we are now about to adopt in regard to the separation of Central from provincial finance. It has in fact a very close analogy in detail. So that, as I say, there is nothing inherently wrong in the idea of taking contributions from the provinces. The question probably is rather one of degree or, perhaps, as the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma would say, it is purely a matter of calculation whether they should be taken at all. Now the burden of proving that no contributions are necessary must, I think, lie on those who support the provincial case. It is quite clear that the Central Government must finance itself; it must finance the army, and however much we may try to reduce the personnel, or whatever hopes we may have from such expedients as the League of Nations, such armies as we maintain are not going to be as cheap in the future as they were in the past. The Central Government must keep up its central institutions, Agricultural, Research, Bacteriological and so forth; it must maintain the services of a purely imperial nature, such as the Survey of India and Geological Survey; it must maintain the political service; it must provide for expenditure on the Frontier. I have only instanced a few of these requirements, but it is sufficient to indicate their nature without detailing them all.

"Now it is possible—I will not say that it is certain—that so from being able to reduce those requirements in the future, they may have to be extended. I think there will be a call on the Central Government to finance more research institutions, to extend possibly its purely Imperial services such as the Geological Service; to extend its operations in half a dozen similar ways with which I need not trouble the Council now. Industrial development alone will be a very expensive item in the future programme, and as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Shafi reminds me, if any such extension takes place, it will not be pure selfishness on the part of the Central Government, since the provinces of course share in their benefits of the central institutions and services. Now what have we done ourselves in regard to this question of financing the Central Government and of apportioning the burden on the provinces? When the Joint Report was drawn up, it was calculated that the imperial deficit, that is to say, the amount which the Imperial Government would require in order to supplement its own resources, would come to about 13½ crores. That was the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. This would have left the provinces taken in the aggregate, and following the distribution of finance that will be adopted under the Reform Scheme, with 2½ crores more than they enjoy at present. Last September we invited representatives from the various provinces to a conference at Simla, and the question of the provincial liability in regard to their own expenditure was gone into with great thoroughness, and in great detail As the result of that, we then decided to take the Imperial deficit on the system of divided finance at 11½ crores, and that was as low as we could get it at the time But we ourselves have recognised very clearly the force of the objections against taking large contributions from the provinces. We have no desire to attempt to start the reformed Councils on their career under a species of financial cloud, or to cramp the new Ministers with a feeling of financial impotence. We have therefore on our part done our best to reconsider the position in the light of such factors as that alluded to by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, such as the gain in exchange and so forth, and have made a proposition which will have the effect of materially reducing the deficit as anticipated in September last. I am not going to give that figure to the Council now, because it depends on a series of calculations which will more fittingly find a place in my Financial Statement on the 1st of March. But I am quite sure of this that, when I make that statement, Hon'ble Members who are interested in this question will find that if we have not shown a complete capacity to meet all their objections, we have, at all events, shown a good-will in that direction. I am sorry that I should have to say to my Hon'ble friends 'wait and see,' but after all it is only a week they have to wait before I am able to make that announcement.

"Now having explained the state of the case to the Council, I have, I think, only to make a few remarks on what, first of all, Mr. Sarma has said on the subject. I have tried to prove that we have so much practical sympathy with the case put forward by him that my remarks on the subject need not be of any very great length. But I am obliged to comment on the figures which he presented to the Council to prove the fact that the Government of India, after all, had a very large surplus at its disposal. Now Mr. Sarma, in taking those figures, took the figures of the budget as a whole He did not, I think, separate off the figures, as they must be separated off now, according to the administrative division of subjects, by which the Imperial Government will take the benefit of the revenues connected with subjects which it administers itself, and the Local Government will take the benefit of the revenues from those subjects which are purely provincial. So that his figures, if he will allow me to say so, are really of not much use in discussion, because they are not based on the proper system of distribution. All our discussions, for instance, that we have held with the provinces, have been on the basis of distributed revenues . . .

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Subject to correction, I may make an explanation I have tried to arrive at the figures on the new basis and what I have mentioned was on that basis There may be a mistake here and there. The figures are here and I am ready to give them. I have attempted to do that; whether I have succeeded or not is a different matter."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey:—"Sir, Mr. Sarma's figures do not coincide with ours. There will shortly be an opportunity, I think, of explaining the figures more fully to Mr. Sarma. When I have made my Financial Statement, I shall be very glad indeed to go into the figures and show him exactly how they do stand. There is nothing whatever to conceal in the case; the Council can be assured of that. In regard to the figures of 1919-20, there again I am afraid I must say to him, you must wait for our revised budget on the 1st of March. I cannot say now; and it would be wrong for me to say now, how far his anticipations as regards the growing heads of Railways and Customs, and perhaps of Income Tax, can be safely accepted.

"Now with regard to the other question to which he referred, namely, the method of meeting our expenditure, of a special nature, such as what is known as India's further contribution, and also the method of meeting the expenditure on the present Afghan and Waziristan operations, he made a strong recommendation to us that the proper way of meeting that expenditure was to fund it, to charge it against capital. Well, ultimately there is no way of meeting any kind of unproductive expenditure except by meeting it out of revenuê. In the present, we are of course financing the Afghan war by temporary loans, Treasury Bills and so forth, and it stands to reason that, as soon as we can raise a permanent loan, we shall do so and to the fullest extent possible. But we already have many capital obligations against our loans, and the market for loans is not unlimited; any aid that Mr. Sarma or anybody else can give us in pushing our loans will be very welcome to us indeed. But even when we have raised our permanent loan, we could not fund unproductive expenditure until we had first met the liabilities for meeting productive capital expenditure. Mr. Patel's proposition is an alternative to Mr. Sarma's, that is to say, that, while accepting Mr. Sarma's principle and believing that we can meet all our future obligations without calling on the provinces in any way, he would have that question investigated by Lord Meston's Committee. I have informed the Council of a conference which we held in September, and the discussion at that conference will afford very valuable material for Lord Meston's Committee in allocating any contributions which may have to be made. The exact question which Mr Patel has put forward, namely, the extent to which Imperial finances can be arranged on such a basis that no contributions shall be required, that question was not, as he correctly says, explicitly included in the terms of reference to Lord Meston's Committee, and I will explain why. The major obligations, the major liabilities occur of course in connection with large items, such as the Army, and the revenue charges of railways. There are other cases, such as the expenditure on our central institutions. Now we feel, and I daresay if they had been asked, Lord Meston's Committee itself would have felt, that in the time at their disposal, and constituted as they were, it would not be possible for them to say that you shall spend so much on the Army, you shall spend only so much on the railways, and you shall spend only so much on your central institutions, because when you say that you have also got to lay down what the strength of the Army is to be, what our policy is to be in regard to army organization (a question which is as a matter of fact being considered by another Commission), or what is to be the nature and character of more central institutions. In fact you cannot lay down financial limits for expenditure unless you can also lay down administrative policy. For that reason it was difficult, if it was not impossible, to confide that particular task in those terms to Lord Meston's Committee. But we have asked Lord Meston's Committee to examine the budget of the present year and of previous years, and to say how far they think our calculations of the deficiency are correct. They are peculiarly fitted to undertake that task. Nobody, I think, would gainsay the fact that we have in them a perfectly impartial and highly expert Committee, and we shall follow their advice as far as we can whenever they give it to us on that subject. If they say—'You have not given sufficient credit to Customs, you have not taken into account sufficiently the fact that Railways is a growing head; the anticipations that you have formed regarding military expenditure cannot possibly be borne out by what you have spent in the past,' and so forth, then we shall give the best consideration possible to their advice, and we shall try still further to reduce the deficiency which we have anticipated. With that Sir, I think I must leave the case. I have tried to meet the arguments of my Hon'ble friends as far as possible. I think I have demonstrated that we have shown all the good-will we can in reducing the anticipated deficit. I have promised to make a definite announcement on the latter subject on the 1st of March next. I regret that Government is not able to accept the resolutions in the precise forms in which they stand and for the reasons which I have given."

[23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. W. M. Hailey; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Raja Sir Rampal Singh.]

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, I entirely associate myself with the case that has been made out by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. His very cogent and well-reasoned arguments are all based on facts and figures taken from our bluebooks and various Financial Statements, and I do not see why my Hon'ble friend Mr. Hailey does not see his way to accept it. It is our case—we have been crying ourselves hoarse—that the Government of India is very greedy; its greed is daily increasing and is at once the result and cause of the huge surpluses artificially created by underestimating the revenue and overestimating the expenditure. This is our complaint. Colonel Wedgwood, when speaking in the House of Commons on the Government of India Bill, struck a true note when he said 'that your extravagance is the result of your being able to command unlimited funds.' This ought to be put an end to. All our difficulties are due to that. I believe, Sir, that this move to Delhi was also the result of that. The Hon'ble Mr. Hailey quoted our late lamented leader Mr. Gokhale and said that Mr. Gokhale on the analogy of the States of the now defunct German Empire was of opinion that our provinces ought to contribute one-third of the revenues to the Central Exchequer. I have two observations to make on that In the first place, Sir, the conditions of India to-day are not the same as those which obtained in the time of Mr. Gokhale. We have no right to assume that; had he been alive to-day, he would have adhered to his opinion in the altered conditions of India. Did he take note of the fact that Education and Sanitation would no longer have to be provided for by the Government of India but be financed by the provinces. If you insist on your taking a share of the provincial revenues, I wonder how the Minister of Bengal, that is to be for instance, will be able to find funds for carrying out the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission. In my province, even as matters stand, all projects of education have had to be shelved sine die for want of funds by a resolution of the Chief Commissioner. Then, in the second place, Sir, by demanding a share of the revenues of the provinces you are really treating them as if they were so many Feudatory States who must pay tribute to the Central Government, whether or not you require any money. The Hon'ble Mr. Hailey spoke of the Army expenditure, and money needed for Central Institutes. All that is admitted, but what is there to show that this cannot be met by the normal growth of your revenue, the revenue from all-India subjects like Exchange, Customs, Railways. 2-48 P.M.

"I therefore, think, Sir, that the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has made out a very good case for your accepting this Resolution; but in case you find that you cannot do so, I submit there cannot be any reason for not accepting the alternative proposal of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel.

"With these remarks, Sir, I support both these Resolutions."

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh:—"Mr. President, as a layman, I am sorry to say, I have not been able fully to appreciate the contentions of the Hon'ble the Finance Member. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has very ably established the justice of the principle enunciated in his Resolution. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has not refuted the facts and figures that were quoted by him. 2-52 P.M.

"Sir, if the present financial resources of the Government of India are not sufficient to meet the charges, he ought to have stated it very plainly and refuted the figures that were quoted by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. If they are sufficient to meet those charges, I think it is not justice to exact a tribute from the provinces. The Hon'ble the Finance Member has said that there are some deficit provinces and some surplus provinces. I am afraid he intends to allow the injustice which has been done to the provinces up to this time to be perpetuated even after the reforms have been introduced. I take exception to such a procedure. I am of opinion that if the question should be fully investigated and, as far as possible, the Government of India should become self-supporting If that be not possible, there are certain taxable items which have been reserved for the Government of India and the Government of India should have recourse to them.

"I therefore, support the Resolution of the Hon'ble Mr Sarma and, in the alternative, the Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel."

2-55 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" Sir, I do not pretend to be able to go into the fine points of financial debate, but it appears to me that one point is very clear, and that is what the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma made out from the figures which he compiled, that the Central Government carries on and can carry on its work without calling upon the provinces to contribute anything. In the alternative the Hon'ble Mr. Patel proposed that the matter should at least be inquired into, and this appears to me to be a very reasonable request If the Hon'ble the Finance Member thinks that the figures given by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma are not quite correct, then all that Mr. Patel wants is that the matter be gone into, and I do not see what objection there can be to this being done. It is very likely, and perhaps probable, that what the Hon'ble the Finance Minister has stated may come out true, but it is also equally likely that it may not be so and that Lord Meston and his colleagues may not agree, in which case the provinces stand to gain and the administration gains in simplicity.

"The position will perhaps be explained on the 1st March. But then there will be no time to move any resolutions on the subject. Probably next month there may be no dates set apart for discussing resolutions; so that in that case the matter will come to the September Session; probably by that time Lord Meston would have made his report and these things might have been accepted and there will be nothing left to be done by a resolution. So, I submit, that this request for an inquiry is most reasonable, more especially as at present we have been referred to a conference that took place at Simla; but that was a case of a senior partner laying down the law for sub-partners. I should like that the matter should come before an independent body who will not be, so to say, the predominant partners in the matter, but will look at the whole thing from a fair and equitable point of view. I support the proposal more especially because Lord Meston has been in charge of the administration of a province for a long time and he has experienced the difficulties and will probably be able to give an illuminating opinion on this subject. So I support the proposition of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and, in the alternative, the proposition of Mr. Patel."

2-58 P.M. The Hon'ble Sardar Sundar Singh Majithia :—" Sir, if I rise on this occasion to say a few words on the resolution which has been proposed by my Hon'ble Friend, Mr. Sarma, and the one which has been proposed by Mr. Patel I only want to point out on behalf of my province the inequalities of the contributions which we have to make to the Central Government to keep that Government going, so to speak. My friend, Mr. Sarma, has tried to show by figures that the Central Government could carry on their administration without any of these contributions from the provinces. I quite admit on the other hand that the needs of the Army, which is an expanding army and which has, I believe, to expand for some time, are very great. We have to keep up the army in view of the menace that we are having in the North-West Frontier Province and also that of the Bolshevicks which was so clearly set out in the opening speech of His Excellency the Viceroy on the 30th January last. No Government can afford to lose sight of that situation, and must provide for that Moreover, the salaries in the Army are very low and we shall have to increase these.

"But, on the other hand, the inequalities that I find in the contributions, set out in the Joint Committee's Report, are very glaring. I find that Madras has to pay 428 lakhs, the United Provinces has to pay 327 lakhs, the Punjab has to pay 218 lakhs, and Burma has to pay 140 lakhs; while Bombay pays only 88 lakhs, and Bengal, one of the foremost provinces and in which my Hon'ble friend Mr. S. N. Banerjea is always saying that there are certain claims of that province which have to be considered, pays only 69 lakhs. This inequality in contribution acts most prejudicially on the resources of the provinces from whom more money is taken than from the provinces which pay less. I feel, Sir, that the taking of this large amount from these provinces is very prejudicial to the rate at which those provinces can make any progress in the various spheres of their activities. We have been handicapped a good deal in my province owing to this. It will be remembered that the Punjab paid a crore of rupees to the Government from its surplus balances which might have come in very handy for the many improvements which we wanted in the Province. If Government could see their way to doing away with these contributions, then they would be removing the bitterness that is being felt in different provinces. It is, however, a question whether one could possibly make two ends meet, and I hope that the Finance Department is not so denuded of its resources in that way that it will not be able to meet the situation. I think it is necessary to leave the provinces to make up headway in the different matters that they require, and they can only do so if they had all their resources at their command.

"With these words I support the motions which have been proposed by Mr. Sarma and by Mr. Patel."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"Sir, I should have preferred if the discussion of this matter could have been postponed after the publication of the budget, because then we should have been in a position to know the figures and to go upon them. Mr. Sarma has with his usual ability brought forward a large number of figures in support of the position which he takes up. The Hon'ble the Finance Member challenged that position; he says that these figures proceed upon one basis, but they should proceed upon a wholly different basis, the basis of divided revenues. Therefore, in coming at an independent judgment between these conflicting views, we are at the present moment without the necessary materials. If we had the figures before us we should have been in a better position to judge whether we should accept Mr. Sarma's views or those of the Finance Minister. I do not know whether even now it may not be possible to postpone the consideration of this matter until the budget figures have been published. I feel that with those figures before us we should be proceeding upon stable and certain ground. Without them I at any rate feel very nebulous about the matter. 2-1 P.M.

"Sir, there are two propositions which we are considering, one is a definite recommendation that the provinces should be relieved from all contributions to the Imperial Exchequer on the ground that the Imperial revenues are sufficient for all Imperial purposes. Mr. Patel's resolution, although Mr. Patel professes advanced views, is somewhat more moderate than that of Mr. Sarma; he does not exactly accept Mr. Sarma's proposition, but he proceeds somewhat cautiously to say that this should be an intimation to the Meston Committee. I think that is the position which he takes up, and I for one feel a partiality for this latter position because myself being a moderate in politics I prefer moderate views, and it seems to me that it is a sounder position to take up in the absence of definite facts to go upon.

"Sir, a great deal has been said about Mr. Gokhale's suggestions with regard to the scheme of financial decentralisation. My Hon'ble friend, the

[Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Sir Dinshaw Wacha.] [23RD FEBRUARY, 1920.]

Finance Minister, has quoted from a speech which Mr. Gokhale delivered in this Council in 1911. Well, Sir, the views which were put forward by Mr. Gokhale were very much earlier than 1911. Let me remind the Council that in 1889 (I think it was) a Finance Commission was appointed over which Sir Charles Elliot presided; amongst members of that Commission were Mr. Justice Ranade, Mr. Justice Cunningham, and one or two other names that I forget at present. They recommended the very scheme which Mr. Gokhale accepted and then let me add that in 1897—that was before 1911—four Indian gentlemen, including my friend, Sir Dinshaw Wacha, Mr. Gokhale, Mr. G. Subramania Iyer and myself went as witnesses before the Welby Commission and we put forward the same view; and there was a reason for it; but as has been very properly observed by my friend, Mr. Chanda, if Mr. Gokhale were now living, probably he would profess more advanced views than those that are embodied in his speech of 1911. What we were contending against at that time was the unsettled state of the quinquennial settlements and the inequitable distribution of the doles which was left to the caprice and whim of the financial authorities. You remember what Sir A Mackenzie said about these quinquennial settlements. He said that we were like a sheep thrown upon its back shorne of its wool and then let loose. Well, what happened in consequence of those quinquennial settlements and the unsettled, unsystematic and whimsical way in which they were carried out? What happened was that towards the end of the quinquennial period the Provincial Governments entered upon large expenditure in order to swallow the balances that were left to their credit. All this had to be avoided, and therefore the Finance Commission of 1889—I am not quite sure about the date, but, I think, it was 1889—the Indian witnesses before the Welby Commission of 1897, and Mr. Gokhale in 1911 all urged that the doles and the quinquennial settlements should cease and that fixed contributions should be taken from the provinces to meet the expenses of the Imperial Government.

"That is the history of this matter. It seems to me that it would be a great advantage if it were possible just when the Reforms Scheme was about to come into operation to relieve the Provincial Governments altogether of all contributions to the Imperial Exchequer. Because it must be clear that if the new experiment were to be handicapped with the burden of new taxation, that would operate very seriously to create a prejudice against the Reform Act. I am quite sure we are all interested, the Government and popular representatives, are all interested in providing against a contingency of that kind. We ought to be able, if possible, to start this great experiment with public opinion behind us, and public opinion will be against us if the public feel that they have to bear additional taxation in consequence of the Reform Scheme. Therefore, I take it that the Government and the popular representatives truly stand upon the same platform in this matter, and that we are all interested in avoiding taxation. It seems to me that, if Mr. Sarma's Resolution could be accepted, it would be a means of avoiding taxation. It is impossible for me to say if it could be accepted or not. If we cannot accept Mr. Sarma's Resolution, at any rate, we might accept that put forward by Mr. Patel. We can lose nothing, Government stands to gain by making a recommendation on this point for the consideration of the Meston Committee The public will learn that the Government is anxious to avoid taxation, if possible, and that they have made this suggestion to the Meston Committee. It seems to me that this is a bit of political strategy which my Hon'ble friend the Finance Minister might adopt. This fact would go far to ease the situation. The position that I take up with regard to this matter is this, that I cannot vote for Mr. Sarma's Resolution without more definite information; I vote for Mr. Patel's as an alternative. It seems to be a moderate and reasonable one and one which Government may well accept."

3-10 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—"Sir, I fully agree with the historical retrospect which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea has given in reference to the Decentralization Scheme and the different stages it has gone through since 1889, 1897 and 1911. His reason again for urging that it would be far better that Mr. Patel's amendment should be passed has also my support. I think nothing would be lost at this stage by referring the matter to the Meston Committee. We are entering on a new era altogether of responsible self-government, and if that self-government is to be made a real success, then I say that that success will greatly depend upon the finances of the new Government; that is to say, the manner in which both the Imperial Government and the Provincial Governments which are now to be autonomous, steer their barque of finance. The Imperial and Provincial Governments must steer their barques and admininister their respective finances with a view to the accomplishment of the greatest good possible. It was John Bright who said on an important occasion during the passing of the India Bill of 1858: 'Tell me what is the condition of the finances of the Government and I will tell you what is the character of that Government.' I think that was really a good and sound maxim That is the maxim which at this stage we should adopt if the several new responsible Governments are to enter upon the achievement of a successful campaign during the next ten years. It is necessary that they should start with a policy of sound finance If they are not made to start with such a policy what will happen? As Mr. Banerjea has said Provincial Governments may find themselves in a difficult position at the very outset to make both ends meet. If they have not sufficient funds and if something has to be provided as a contribution to the Imperial Exchequer, they will be obliged to raise the needed funds by means of local taxation. That step would create a prejudice and a feeling of hostility on the part of the people. I think in this matter sound enlightened public opinion should be associated with both the Imperial Government and the Provincial Governments. It is in the interest of all concerned that in a matter of this kind we should all move together in co-operation with each other. I consider therefore that in view of what I have just urged that after all Mr. Patel's amendment would prove useful. I admit that perhaps the budget which the Hon'ble the Finance Minister will place before us on the 1st of March may present a different state of things, and possibly Mr. Sarma's views may have to be modified a good deal. Still, I do not consider that the situation will be completely alleviated by what the budget may reveal for the reason that we shall be in a transitional stage. I do not know whether during the next five years and more Indian Finances, Imperial and Provincial, will be on a settled basis and whether they will be worked smoothly. There will be many changes, changes in financial and economic conditions both in and out of India These will greatly affect our trade and will have a far-reaching influence upon our finances. Then other domestic changes are certain to take place during the next five or ten years in reference to the new responsible government. We do not know how that Government will carry on its work Very much will depend upon the way in which it handles it's finances. You may depend on it that the next five years will be a period of an unsettled or constantly changing or disturbing character. Before the Imperial and Provincial finances arrive at a settlement, it is very necessary that we should move slowly and cautiously and proceed on a firm basis of finance. Without a sound policy of finance at the very outset, it will be a serious matter for the Imperial Government to work smoothly with the Provincial Governments. I, therefore, appeal to the Hon'ble the Finance Minister that in view of the unanimous opinions of the non-official members who have already spoken on this very important subject for which I consider Mr Sarma has earned our grateful thanks, he would act wisely and well by referring the whole matter to the Meston Committee The Meston Committee will no doubt make itself acquainted with the criticisms that have already been offered in this Council. By the light of those criticisms they will be able to consider and recommend how the finances should be arranged in future, where Reserved and Transferred Subjects are respectively to be dealt with. With these few words I fully support Mr. Patel's amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, the Hon'ble the Finance Member's speech gives me some hope that he will rise to the occasion and try to discard the extremely rigid traditions of the Imperial Department in getting all it can from the Provinces. He promises to go into the question again, and I hope that, as the result of that examination, it will be found that really no contribution is necessary from the provinces.

"Now, Sir, allusion has been made to the tenability of the general position that there is nothing wrong in principle or policy in the provinces being asked to contribute to the general exchequer. I have myself not said that that position is untenable under any circumstances, because there are States in which that is the present practice. But I take it, Sir, that what the Reform Committee has recommended is that there should be ordinarily a complete divorce between the Imperial Exchequer and the Provincial Exchequer and that these contributions should be only during the transitional stage and for a limited period. Therefore, what Mr. Gokhale thought might have been a useful guide in the past but has no bearing upon the position which the reforms postulate for our guidance in the future. Again what Mr Gokhale was trying to do was to get some growing heads of revenue for the provinces with a definite contribution if need be to the Imperial Exchequer. We find that so far as some of the States which have been referred to are concerned, my position is supported by their example. In America, we find that the whole of the Imperial federal exchequer is practically met from the customs revenue, and on more than one occasion they had so much surplus that they could distribute it amongst the various States. With regard to Germany, however, may I point out, Sir, that the items of the heads of revenue of the Imperial Government do not comprise so many as the future Indian Government would command? I do not find for instance Income-tax as one of the subjects there. Therefore, I do not think the example of Germany would be of much use here, because we find that the Indian Government has taken much more for the Federal Government than Germany has chosen to provide However, I think that is a mere question for academic discussion, because even what the Government of India proposes is only a provisional arrangement during a temporary period. The real solution of the problem would therefore depend upon whether the financial position of the past three years justify us in hoping that the Imperial revenue and exchequer would balance one another I put a question to the Government requesting information as to what the figures would be on this new basis. I hope they have worked out the figures. If they have worked out those figures, it might not be difficult for them to place those figures before the Council to show in what respects my figures are wrong Hon'ble Members will see that there can be no difficulty about disclosing these figures in so far as 1917-18 and 1918-19 are concerned because no questions of taxation would turn upon them and these relate to closed transactions. It is only in respect of the revised figures for 1919-20 there may be some difficulty if any new taxation is proposed, or if any new schemes are proposed, but I do not think that there can be any difficulty whatsoever about the figures of 1917-18, the accounts of 1918-19 and the budget figures of 1919-20 as under the new scheme being placed before us for discussion. I submit, Sir, that here and there there may be a few insignificant differences, but the general position that I have advanced on the basis of the figures that I have mentioned is substantially correct and may be accepted by the Council as such. If those figures afford any criterion, my position is substantially correct and no reliance need be placed upon general calculations as to whether customs revenue can grow, whether income-tax revenue can expand, whether railways can bring in more money.

"Now allusion has been made to the military expenditure. I grant that there would be an increase in military expenditure as compared with the pre-war period. We shall have, on the one hand, to make allowance for increased salaries and pensions and, on the other hand, to deduct war expenditure. That is the reason why I made provision for the new army expenditure as ranging between 25 and 30 million pounds. Before the war it was only about 19 millions, and therefore the revised expenditure need not exceed another six more millions,—I went so far as to take the 1917-18 figure and putting it at 30 for the purposes of discussion; even taking it at 30, my submission is that there would be absolutely no need whatever for any contribution on the basis of the figures for 1917-18, 1918-19 and 1919-20.

"Then with regard to the customs revenue, I have pointed out that from the quantities of exports during the past five years we have every legitimate ground for hoping a considerable expansion therein and assuming for argument's sake that a million or a half a million is found to be a deficit in any year here is a growing source to which we can confidently look to meet the deficit. I therefore submit, Sir, that the question of army expenditure has been amply provided for in my estimates.

"Then comes the question of industrial expansion and so on. Industry is to be a provincial department, and what the Government is going to do is simply to have a central technical department to help the provinces, and there may be increase of expenditure on salaries of a purely all-India department of Government services. For those I have made provision of about 50 lakhs of rupees taking the growth of revenue as about 20 per cent. of the current expenditure. Therefore, there is not a single item of future normal growth that I have not taken into account, and even assuming that you have to put in one or two millions more for unforeseen expenditure, I submit that the exchange which at any rate is going to bring in at least 8 to 12 crores of rupees for some years to come, is an ample safeguard for the extra money that may be wanted. I, therefore, hope that whatever may be the result of the debate here in the matter of accepting my Resolution, the Government of India will try their level best to sift the figures and not to under-estimate the revenue as has been done for so many years past. This is a heritage of long-standing, and I feel sure with the freshness of outlook which the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey and the Hon'ble Mr. Cook can bring to bear on these matters, there will be a new departure in estimating the revenue and expenditure correctly. After all I have not asked that the provinces should under no circumstances be asked to make a contribution. There is already the safeguard that under exceptional circumstances the Government of India reserve to themselves the liberty to ask for contributions. I, therefore, submit, Sir, that this resolution can be safely accepted by the Government.

"Now with regard to what took place between the representatives of the Provincial Governments at the Conference at Simla, of course we have not been behind the scenes, but the provincial representatives could not have had a voice in estimating imperial revenue. I take it that the attitude of the Government is this. 'We are the persons who are the judges of our future requirements and budget possibilities; we shall determine the administrative policy; we will say that the army would require so much, that we shall abolish such and such exports. Therefore, we alone, the Government of India alone, are in a position to lay down the policy, and the rest is a mere question of accounting for which I suppose nobody is wanted. Even Lord Meston's Committee can do little.'

"But I submit that in this matter the Government of India must have already come to some definite conclusions as to what the highest military expenditure ought to be, what the possibilities are about customs and other revenue, and that they can give the necessary instructions; and then I suppose Lord Meston's Committee can work out whether there has been underestimating anywhere, whether the customs revenue can be really put at a higher figure than a cautious Finance Minister is disposed to put and can suggest suitable modifications And within limits, Sir, I think there is every possibility of Government being assisted by Lord Meston's Committee. After all you must remember that the Government of India are interested parties, however disinterestedly they may act on account of the high traditions of the past and the present, and it would inspire confidence if a third party, absolutely unconnected with the provinces and the Government of India, would look into these matters and decide what contribution, if any, is required from the provinces."

-37 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I do not think it is necessary for me to speak at any great length in reply in view of the fact that almost all the non-official members of this Council have supported the demand made in my Resolution. As the Council will see, the demand is a very moderate one. I should very much like the Government to accept the position which my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma has taken up, but realising that it is absolutely hopeless to persuade Government to go the whole hog with Mr. Sarma, I have brought forward this moderate resolution in an alternative form. Let us analyse the argument of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Hailey. He objects to my Resolution on the ground that the Government of India have already made an inquiry into the matter and they could not see their way to support my Resolution. Well, Sir, the question is whether the Imperial Government stand in need of any provincial contributions or not, and my Resolution says the Government of India is a party concerned in any inquiry and therefore let them not be the judge in their own case. All we want is that an independent inquiry should be made into the matter so that the case, both for the provinces and the Imperial Government, would be examined by that Committee and an impartial decision be arrived at. That is the whole thing. All I want is that the Government of India should not be the judge in their own case. I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything more."

1-39 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey:—"Sir, I at all events have no cause to complain at the course of this debate, for I think that there is only one Hon'ble Member who found it necessary to charge us with being grasping, with under-calculating our revenues in order to get a surplus, pictured the Central Government in fact as a kind of Gorgon, grasping and insatiable. Well, I can assure him that if that picture ever was a true one—and I am not qualified to say anything about that—it is certainly not the case now. Nor has it been the case within my recollection. The growing power, the growing independence of the Local Governments, would afford a sufficient guarantee that we should be entirely unable to take up such a position were we to desire to do so now. The general course of the debate, Sir, I think I may say, was in support of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's resolution rather than in support of that of Mr. Sarma. There was, I recognise it, a very general feeling among the non-official members of this Council, that we should do well to place our case before the Meston Committee, if not as a mere point of equity, at all events, as the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea put it, as a point of tactics. We should, he suggested, strengthen our own hands if we did so. Now perhaps I did not make it sufficiently clear (if so, it was my own fault) that we had asked Lord Meston's Committee to go into the forecast budget figures of the present year, which we have placed before them, and also to go into the budget figures of previous years, and to give us their advice on the question whether we have or we have not taken a proper figure for the Central Government's deficit. We have asked them to go into these figures as thoroughly as possible. They cross-examined the Hon'ble Mr. Cook nearly a whole morning on the subject. We have given them all the information we have on that subject; we have placed at their disposal an officer conversant with all our financial operations and figures in the past in order to give them any fresh information which they may require. We have kept nothing back from them; we have no desire to keep anything back from them; we want to put all the cards on the table on this particular question. And as I said this morning, whatever advice they give us on the subject of the exact figure which we should take for the Imperial deficit in this year and in the coming years, we shall endeavour to accept. That we should go further, that we should say to them, 'you must tell us exactly what our Army is to cost us in future and what our other Imperial services are to cost in the future, how much we should provide for our railways,' that we should go further and do that is not, I think, a feasible proposition. For one thing it would be a work that would take many months to complete, and we have not all the time in the world at our disposal for this question. The next point is this, that we have a Commission out from Home which is dealing with one, perhaps the most important, of those questions, the organization of the Army. The third point is, that I do not think that if we were to charge Lord Meston's Committee with a work of that magnitude and gravity that the Indian public at large would accept that Committee as in itself sufficient. They would undoubtedly demand that there should be a much wider representation, and possibly representatives from the provinces, on it. It would no longer be a small expert Committee; we should have to appoint a Royal Commission something in the nature of the Public Services Commission, or one of the great commissions which sat on Indian expenditure in the past It is for this reason that I say that we could not contemplate that, with the time at our disposal, an inquiry of such extent should be undertaken by Lord Meston's Committee. But let me repeat again that we have asked them to give us their advice based on the whole of the budget figures. We have asked them in fact to give us exactly, as far as I can see, very much the kind of advice which the Hon'ble Members who have spoken on the subject this afternoon have desired that they should give us.

"The Hon'ble Sardar Sundar Singh and the Hon'ble Sir Rampal Singh discussed the question, in an attitude which I hoped to see avoided this afternoon. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and the Hon'ble Mr. Patel discussed it on general lines, on the principle of contribution and the net aggregate amount of contribution. I hoped that we should avoid discussion on the inequalities of contribution as between provinces, because it is not one that we can profitably take up here at all. All that we can attempt to do at present, is to fix by the best method possible the total amount which we must take to supplement our deficit, leaving to Lord Meston's Committee the question of dividing that in the best way possible over the various provinces. They themselves will devise the proportions in which it is to be divided, whether on the principle of population, or of wealth, whether in consideration of previous settlements, or on some other basis. It is inevitable that, whatever system of contribution is adopted, there will be some provinces which must feel aggrieved. A surplus province must feel aggrieved as against a deficit province. That is inevitable. But we hope that the thoroughness of the inquiry which Lord Meston's Committee is making, and the impartial constitution of that Committee, will take away some of that sense of grievance. At all events we can do no more in that matter than we have done already.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma asked that we should lay fuller figures before the Council as to the manner in which the finances of the Central Government and the Provincial Governments will appear after the division has been made. I would refer the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and those Members of Council who desire more information on the subject to a statement which was appended to the third despatch on Constitutional Reforms which gives such a division in regard to the years actual figures of 1918 and 1919. Mr. Sarma has asked that we ourselves should supply the figures for the previous year 1917-18 and also for the current year. I shall be very glad to do so. The statement showing a distribution of the figures of the current year's revised budget will be supplied after the 1st of March; and I hope that, if Hon'ble Members still feel doubts on this subject, they will take the opportunity of resuming the discussion on it in the course of the general discussion on the Budget."

[Referred to in answer to question No. 15.]

Report of the Committee appointed at the instance of the Government of India to study the system of Local Government in England.

We, the Committee appointed to study the working of the English system of Local Self-Government, beg to submit the following report.

2. We held a preliminary meeting on the 20th June to settle our procedure with the help of Sir F. Sly, K.C.S.I., Mr. L. J. Kershaw, C.S.I., C.I.E., of the India Office and Mr. J. G. Gibbon, C.B.E., of the Local Government Board. During the week from the 1st to the 6th July we attended the various departments of the Ministry of Health (formerly Local Government Board) and received information with regard to Public Health Administration from Mr. F. J. Willis with regard to audit matters from Messrs. Turner and Wilkinson, with regard to Housing from Mr. J. A. E. Dickinson, with regard local Taxation and Finance from Messrs. C. Knight and J. Gibbon and with regard to Public Works from Messrs. A. J. A. Ball, E. S. Fawcett and E. H. Rhodes. The arrangements for our tours were carried out by Mr. A. J. Cole. On the 7th, we went to Birmingham and for the next three days enquired into the municipal administration of that city ; and again met on the 28th and 29th at the office of the Urban District Council of Wood Green. In the interval Messrs. Graham, Allen, Clarke and Lumsden visited the country Council of Herts and Essex, the borough of Lichfield, the Rural District Councils of Atcham and Chelmsford, and Urban District Council of Ilford, and Messrs. Turner, Sim, Sifton and Lindsay visited the County Councils of Worcestershire and Gloucestershire, the Urban District Councils of Barry and Ilfracombe, and the Rural District Councils of Warmley and Bradfield. On the 30th the whole committee was received by Sir H. Orange, Sir E. Phipps and other officers of the Board of Education, and on the 29th and 31st July and the 1st August, we held meetings in a room kindly placed at our disposal at the Ministry of Health, to consider our report. Owing to the pressure of his other engagements Mr. Bannerjea was, unfortunately, unable to take part in the tours of the Committee, except for a brief visit to Birmingham, or to be present at some of the meetings at the Ministry of Health.

3. We wish to begin by emphasizing the fact that the appellation 'Local Government Board,' as applied to the controlling authority in England, is entirely misleading. There was nominally, in the past, a board including several ministers of State, but this has never in the course of its existence met or transacted any business as a board. In practice, the Local Government Board has been a department of Government working under a single minister who exercised all its powers. The fiction has now been swept away, the Local Government Board having been abolished by the Act of 1919, constituting the Ministry of Health. To set up a board or committee with powers of control or as an intermediary between the local bodies and a Government department would thus in no sense be in accordance with English practice and, in our opinion, would certainly lead to friction, both with the Government department and with the local bodies and to delays; and no advantage can be gained by merely copying an appellation which has never borne any real relation to the facts and has now been abandoned in England. It may be found useful for the minister in charge to consult on occasion, as he thinks fit, committees appointed with reference to particular questions; but effective control must be in the hands of the minister himself and we are opposed to the establishment of anything in the nature of a standing committee with a right to be consulted collectively on all questions or even on all questions of a particular class.

In the administration of his department the minister will have the benefit of the experience of the permanent officials working directly under him, and we would suggest the enlargement and strengthening of the expert inspecting staff, now available; while for information as to the manner in which local bodies are performing their ordinary duties, he will have the observations and reports of the district officers who come into daily contact with them.

4. Our enquiries have shown us that the control exercised over local bodies in England by the central authority and in many directions by intermediate authorities is very much more strict than it would appear to be the intention of the Government of India (as exhibited in the Resolution of the 16th May 1918) to retain in India.

Apart from the very great influence exercised by public opinion, the working of the minor local bodies is controlled in a diversity of ways, into details of which it does not seem necessary to enter here.

Ultimate control is, however, in the hand of the Government department, whether it be called the Local Government Board or a Ministry. All bye-laws need its sanction, it is continually issuing circulars and instructions and it has very great powers, under the Public Health and other Acts, of declaring a local body in default in regard to the services it should perform, and of ensuring their performance either by the defaulting body, by some other body or by its own officers. The board has seldom had to use these powers, but their existence has added great weight to the advice and admonitions of responsible officers whether of the local bodies or of the board. It has a staff of competent auditors who examine carefully the accounts of all local authorities except some borough councils: and it has inspectors to enquire into engineering, sanitary and other administrative questions. They do not, except with reference to certain recently instituted special services, engage in systematic or periodical inspection, but are available to hold enquiries into any question, whether of default or otherwise, with regard to which investigation is prescribed by law or is considered necessary by the central authority. As stated above, serious default by a local authority is rare; if it does occur, it can seldom escape the notice of a superior authority. If it is not brought to light by the auditors, there are sure to be representations either in the press or directly to the Government department or some intermediate authority; and with regard to sanitary matters, the central authority can rely on information from the medical officers of health, many of whom, though paid partly or wholly by the local authorities, are not removable by their councils and are in a position of independence. Even where, as in the case of many boroughs, the medical officer is entirely subject to the Council, the County Medical Officer has powers of inspection and, if he cannot get defects remedied by his own influence, can set the machinery of the department in motion.

5. Although it is nowhere prescribed by law that the plans and estimates for works undertaken by local authorities shall undergo any outside scrutiny, in practice hardly any original work is executed without such scrutiny and the sanction of the central authority. It is against the accepted principle that works of permanent utility should be paid for from revenue or that more should be raised from the rates from year to year than is necessary to maintain the services; and all new works are paid for by loans. No local authority may raise a loan without the sanction of the central authority and when application is made for sanction to raise a loan, detailed plans and estimates of the projected work must be submitted. These plans and estimates are closely examined and criticized by the sections of the department concerned and a very thorough public enquiry is generally held by one of the inspectors of the Local Government Board It is not uncommon for sanction to be delayed till the authority applying has amended its estimates so as to meet the views of the Local Government Board and the board's control and check of all plans and estimates is thus very complete; there is every opportunity of obtaining local opinion as to the desirability of the work.

The power to sanction or withhold sanction for a loan is occasionally used as a lever to compel a local authority to carry out its duties in connection with matters other than that for which the loan is needed.

We consider that the principle that the cost of works of more or less permanent utility should not be paid from revenue is sound, that there should be an extension in India of the use of loans and that where the revenues of the future are mortgaged for a work, the plans and estimates should only be sanctioned after a careful scrutiny by an ouside authority. If this opinion is accepted, some modification appears necessary of the proposals set forth in paragraph 15 of the Resolution of the Government of India of 16th May 1918.

Equally careful scrutiny is of course required of plans and estimates for works to be executed with the aid of grants from Government; but in England it is not the custom to give free grants of public money for local works. Certain stereotyped payments are made from the Exchequer to local authorities and no special supervision is exercised over the expenditure of these. Otherwise grants are made only for purposes which are regarded as of a national or semi-national nature. For instance, the Road Board occasionally makes large contributions to aid an authority in raising the standard of a road which can be classed as "national" and the State pays half the cost of the treatment and prevention of tuberculosis and of the salary of health visitors in connection with Maternity and Child Welfare schemes; but no free grant is made towards the cost of a water supply or drainage system for a particular locality. The locality is expected to pay the whole cost for itself out of a loan, for the repayment of which, with interests, provision is made out of the rates.

6. In educational matters, the control of the central department is even more close and complete than that of the Local Government Board over the activities of local bodies. It rests less, however, on a legal basis than on the facts that a very large proportion of the expense of elementary education is paid from the Exchequer and that no one is willing to contemplate the possibility of the curtailment of the existing opportunities of education or to risk the loss of the subsidies by which alone even the present standard can be maintained. The inspecting staff of the Ministry is chosen with the greatest care, not only with reference to the academic distinction of its members and their general capacity, but also with reference to their powers or moral suasion and care is taken not to antagonise local bodies unnecessarily; but it is recognised that the advice and persuasion of the inspector represent the views of a well-co-ordinated department which is able to enforce them in the last resort; and an instance of enforcement which has been quoted to us was one in which the London County Council was fined £10,000 for failure to maintain a proper standard of education.

7. Public opinion is enough, however, in most cases to keep local authorities up to the mark, and it is in this respect that we find the conditions in England to differ most widely from those in India. Both directly and through organizations such as Rate-payers' Associations, it exercises a continuous pressure on any authority with a tendency to transgress and checks both collective councils and individual members; and any extravagance or neglect on the part of a local body immediately raises criticism which may lead to complaints to the central or some intermediate authority and ensures that no individual who disregards the wishes or interests of his constituents shall retain his position. Over the greater part of India public opinion is not an active force in local politics. Some distinction must be drawn, of course, between different Provinces and between municipal towns in which attempts are sometimes made by sections of the public to give expression to their views and rural areas in which distances are great and communications inferior, and there are few people with education enough to enable them to set forth their needs; but in both there is lacking the powerful stimulus to the evolution of public opinion which is afforded in England by the settling of the rates by each local authority every year. The assessment is entirely on real property; the rates range from 5s. to 15s. in the £1. There is, theoretically, no limit to what may be levied by these authorities for the purpose of the services they are bound to carry out. The rate-payer is concerned not only in seeing that the rates are not excessive but also that the public receives proper value for the money it pays; and until the connection between taxes and services can be thoroughly brought home to him, it is not probable that the Indian rate-payer will take the same interest in the personality and proceedings of his local council as is shown every day in England. For this reason we think that, at least in municipalities, the existing limitations on the powers of the councils to vary their rates should be reconsidered at once and as far as possible removed, though we recognize that in some parts of the country it may not be possible at present to give the councils the freedom enjoyed in England. For district boards it may be necessary, owing to the general conditions of taxation, to lay down a maximum, but, if so, we are of opinion that the boards should have unrestricted power to vary the rates within the prescribed limits

Our recommendations are with reference to popularly elected bodies and we think that this freedom from control in the matter of taxation should, where circumstances permit, be accompanied by a stricter enforcement than heretofore of the responsibility of the councils to maintain their essential services at a proper standard.

8. In our visits to various local authorities we have been much impressed by the keenness and energy displayed both by the members of the councils and committees and by the officials in their employ. The efficiency of the councils must be attributed largely to the system of working through committees to which the councils delegate, where possible, all their powers under the various Acts they administer. The chairmen of these committees are in a most responsible position and devote much time and trouble to their work. The results come before the councils in the form of reports at their periodical meetings and may on occasion be criticized but are seldom interferred with. The officials are carefully selected and usually adequately paid and both deserve and obtain the confidence of their employers. Even in England however it has been found that, in order that the best results may be obtained, some measures must be taken to protect the higher officials, and to lessen their dependence on their councils, and to make them in a sense the agents of the central authority. Under the Local Government Act of 1888, the Clerk of the Peace in each county became the Clerk of the County Council, and though the County Council pays him, it cannot appoint or dismiss him or fix his salary The appointment and salary are determined, subject to the approval of the Home Secretary, by a Standing Joint Committee composed partly of members of the County Council and partly of the County Justices and he holds office 'during good behaviour.' A county medical officer of health cannot be removed from office without the approval of the Local Government Board ; nor can the medical officer or inspector of nuisances in the employ of any other local authority if any part of his salary is paid out of money voted by Parliament ; and the promotion of security of tenure is one of the objects with which in all urban and rural districts and some boroughs one-half of the salary of these officers is paid from funds supplied from the Exchequer to the County Councils. It is hoped to obtain security of tenure for the surveyors employed by local authorities under the Ways and Communications Bill now before Parliament, and it may be said that the tendency is to secure the same privilege for all officers who have responsible duties to perform ; and for the purpose of still further improving their position, the introduction of superannuation schemes towards which the State will contribute is under discussion. It stands to reason that insecurity will tend to prevent the best men entering the employment of local bodies or giving them their best services ; and we are of opinion that under the new conditions which will prevail in India any fresh legislation on Local Self-Government should provide specifically for control over the appointment, removal and salaries of the principal officials of the local bodies. If necessary this control may be based on the payment by Government of a part of their salaries in view of the probability that many of them may be required to undertake work for Government.

9. We consider that the position of the auditors who deal with the accounts of local bodies in India needs stengthening, and, with the employment of auditors of really good standing and capacity, we would like to see introduced the English practice under which the public has the opportunity of being present and raising objections to items in the accounts and responsibility can be enforced by means of surcharges, allowances and disallowances. As things are, waste or misapplication of funds is seldom brought into prominence, or comes to light so long after it has occurred, that it is difficult to fix responsibility and almost impossible to penalize a guilty party. We think that the auditors should have full authority to surcharge on individuals or bodies and that they should be given the duty of recovering all surcharges and disallowances in a court of summary jurisdiction if the parties affected do not immediately take the prescribed steps to obtain remission. In England it is very seldom necessary actually to recover surcharges since the mistakes found are generally not to be ascribed to dishonesty or gross negligence, but it may be noted that an auditor has power even to surcharge an authority or officer in the rare event of neglect to collect the rates.

10. Before concluding our report we wish to place on record our sense of obligation to the various officers of the Ministries of Health and Education and of the local bodies who have assisted us in our enquiries. They have met us everywhere with the greatest courtesy and attention and all have given time and trouble ungrudgingly to enable us to obtain the information we wanted.

LONDON;
1st August, 1919.

Report to the Government of Bengal by the Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea on the working of the English system of Local Self-Government.

I have signed the Collective Report of my colleagues. By the terms of our reference each member of the Committee is required "to advise his own Local Government as to the desirability of adopting any feature of the English System in provincial legislation". This note is intended to meet this particular point in the reference. It applies to Bengal, though I think in view of the close relationship between the different systems of Local Self-Government throughout India, all deriving their basal principles from Lord Ripon's Resolutions of 1881 and 1882, my observations will have a general and more extended application, subject of course to varying local conditions.

2. My first suggestion is the creation of a Local Government Board for Bengal, and I see no reason why a similar institution should not be established in all the provinces where the conditions are not dissimilar. With the introduction of responsible Government, the institution of Local Self-Government will enter upon a new phase. The Montagu-Chelmsford Scheme recommends (paragraph 188) that "there should be as far as possible complete popular control in local bodies and the largest independence for them of outside control". This two fold object would be secured by making the local bodies wholly elective in their personnel and constitution as under the English system, by relieving them largely of the restrictions to which they are subjected in regard to the details of administration which indeed has been done in a considerable measure in Bengal, and by placing them under the supervision and control of a Local Government Board as in England. The English system of having aldermen on municipal boards may be considered and perhaps tried. This will help to do away with the system of Government nominations and yet secure the services of persons of distinction who may not care to contest elections and of men belonging to small minorities who may have no chance of success in open elections. The proposals for the creation of a Local Government Board has been under the consideration of the Government ever since the inception of the institutions of Local Self-Government. It was considered for Bengal in 1882 and was negatived by the Secretary of State. Lord Morley referred to it in his despatch of the 27th November 1908 observing that it should be considered "how far in each province it would be desirable to create a department dealing exclusively with these local bodies, guiding and instructing them, correcting abuses in a form analogous to the operations of the Local Government Boards in this country." The question came up for consideration before the Decentralization Commission in 1909 and was rejected by them though the late Mr. R. C. Dutt, the only Indian Member of the Commission was in favour of it. Indian opinion, whenever it has had an opportunity of expressing itself, supported the idea of a Local Government Board. A Resolution was moved in the Imperial Legislative Council in 1914, recommending the creation of Local Government Boards. It was largely supported by the non-official Indian members, but the Government did not see their way to accept the recommendation. The views of the Government of India, however, like those of all progressive Governments have now undergone a change; and in their Resolution, dated the 16th May 1918, they "suggest for the consideration of the Provincial Governments the constitution of a central body which should co-ordinate the experience of the local bodies and provide improved control and guidance by entertaining further inspecting establisments if necessary". The Resolution goes on to add: "Such a central body should be in direct touch with the Government and might fitly be presided over by a member of the Executive Council. It should further be considered whether in place of a formal board there might not be a standing committee for local and municipal affairs in direct contact with the Government to be largely drawn from elected members of the Legislative Council.

3. The Government of India recognize the need ofc o-ordinating the work of the local bodies. In Bengal, and I presume it is the case in other parts of India, the local bodies are supervised by the Magistrate of the District and the Commissioner of the Division where there is one. The result is that the degree and the quality of the supervision differ in different places. There is no guarantee of the continuity of a definite policy or of the steady growth of sanitary and other improvements. I have been informed of works of sanitary improvement started by one Magistrate which were suspended by his successor on his transfer to another district. If there was a central supervising authority, such a contingency would be impossible. Under existing conditions the efforts of local bodies are often dissipated Acting in their individual spheres and as isolated units without a central co-ordinating authority they often lack method, initiative, expert knowledge and organized effort which at times as in the case of drainage and water works must extend beyond their immediate local jurisdictions: Local Government in the conditions which are now about to be established in India must play an increasingly important part in the administration of the country. It will deal with sanitation which, in Bengal, is the most vital problem and also very largely with the sphere of education. Expert knowledge and guidance will be needed. Obviously the District Officers, and I mean no reflection upon them, are not as a rule experts in these matters; and if even they were, the demand upon their time and attention are so multifarious in connection with the general administration of their districts that it would be impossible for them to do justice to them. The Government of India indeed express the view in the Resolution to which I have referred that "the powers of Collectors and Commissioners should be maintained" in connection with local affairs. I submit that, if there is to be a central authority, the interposition of intermediary authorities would not only be unnecessary but would complicate the working of the machinery and cause avoidable delay. It should be open to the central authority to invoke the assistance of the Collectors and the Commissioner for information and report, but neither the District Officer nor the Commissioner of the Division should have a recognized or statutory place in the new machinery of Local Government.

4. It will be seen from the extract which I have quoted that the Government of India suggest for the consideration of the Local Governments the formation of a Local Government Board. It should, in the opinion of the Government be "a formal board or a standing committee for local and municipal affairs in direct contact with the Government and to be largely drawn from elected members of the Legislative Council." The views of the Secretary of State are somewhat different, though both these high authorities are agreed that there should be a Local Government Board for instruction and guidance. The Secretary of State says in his despatch of the 29th November 1918 :—

> "Such powers as are possessed and in practice frequently exercised by the Local Government Board in England seem to be a necessary part of a well administered system of self-government in local areas, and I do not consider that the place of such a permanent department can effectively be taken by a standing committee of the Legislature. A body such as you contemplate would, I doubt not, prove very helpful to the Local Government and would be analogous to the advisory committee that are often established in this country by ministers of departments for the purpose of reference and consultation. That such committees cannot exercise the continuous control and guidance that is required and are merely ancillary to the permanent establishment of trained officials and experts who form the department and who discharge the duties of supervision and control which by law or statutory rules are assigned to the central authority. The expert inspecting establishment which you suggest might eventually be entertained by the standing committee, would according to the English practice form a permanent department under the minister, and would report to him and act under his instructions. It would be for him to decide the cases in which and the manner in which he would take the advise of the standing committee. I make these remarks because the English practice is the outcome of long experience and, in my opinion, maintains a necessary distinction between the duties of the permanent executive staff, the individual responsibility of the minister and the functions of an advisory committee."

5. The principles laid down in the concluding passage of the despatch I have noted, will, I venture to think, commend themselves to Indian public opinion. There should be the undivided responsibility of the minister, and no institution should be created calculated in any way to minimize or to reduce it; and it is equally clear that he should be aided by an inspecting and supervising staff who would be subordinate to him but whose responsibility to him in their own spheres must be equally clear and well-defined. In this connection I may perhaps add that it would be expedient to provincialize municipal and district board service in its higher branches above a certain pay. In England, the Local Government Board means the minister, and he is not assisted by a board on standing committee, unless he chooses to call one to his aid for any special purpose. As the experiment of a popular minister controlling a great department could be altogether new, and it is possible that he may not have personal experience of the working of local boards, I would recommend the formation of a standing committee purely advisory in its scope and functions to assist him, the committee consisting of not more than three or four members to be selected by the minister himself from amongst the elected members of the Legislative Council. Such a body, if properly chosen, would place him (and he would have the strongest motive to make a wise selection) in possession of first-hand knowledge and experience and at the same time his responsbility would remain unaffected as he would be under no obligation to follow their advice. The committee may be further strengthened by two additional members, one representing the municipalities and the other the district boards of the province chosen by them. The initiative would remain with the minister, his sense of responsibility would be unimpaired; his schemes of improvement would be bold yet tempered with caution, the result of helpful and well informed advice, and yet he would be firm in their execution. After a time such an advisory committee may not be needed, but it seems to me to be a desirable safeguard at the start. The existence of such a committee need not interfere with his calling to his aid such other expert advice as he may think necessary.

6. The Local Government Board in England is vested with large powers of control and supervision. But it is not to be understood that it is autocratic in the exercise of its powers. Persuasion rather than compulsion is the chief weapon in its armoury, and persuasion having behind it substantial authority which may at any moment be called into operation is usually found to be effective. Public opinion plays a prominent part in the working of the entire machinery of Local Self-Government in England; and I feel that with the transfer of the departments to popular control with a minister responsible to the Legislature and with a sense of growing power in the electorate, popular opinion will within a reasonable distance of time become a powerful and inspiring factor in determining the administration of our system of Local Self-Government. I have no fears as to the autocracy of a Local Government Board. For the board will mean the popular minister responsible to the Legislature and amenable to its control and in the last resort to that of the electorate.

7. The efficiency of an administration, local or provincial, largely depends upon its funds and much of the usefulness of local bodies and of their capacity to cope with their legitimate work will be determined by the measure of their financial resources. Lord Morley, in his despatch of the 27th November 1908, to which I have already referred, says in regard to this aspect of the question that funds have not existed for an efficient executive staff. The friends of Local Self-Government in India from Mr. Gokhale downwards have all deplored the inadequacy of the resources available to the local bodies. In England the local bodies possess unrestricted powers of taxation, of which considerable use is made. But it is idle to think of local bodies in India emulating the local authorities in England in this respect. With our growing wants and the pressure of public opinion to meet them the rate of local taxation will rise; but even then a large margin of local wants will have to be supplied from resources other than local. In England substantial grants are made by the State to local authorities for what are called semi-national services, such as primary education tuberculosis, child-welfare, housing, etc. Here is an extract from an essay by Captain C. M. Lloyd on constitutional problems which appears in the Local Government Series, No. 1, page 40:—

> "But modern economic changes and the development of public opinion have led in the last few years to a rapid growth of the grants-in-aid, especially on the national or 'semi-national' services. By the year 1916, the total subventions from the national exchequer to the local authorities in England and Wales (which, in 1870, was under £2,000,000 and in 1900 about £10,000,000) amounted to £23,160,815. And the sum, of course, has continued and will continue to rise with the recent extension of the principle in the sphere of public health (e.g., grants-in-aid of clinics, maternity services, treatment of tuberculosis and venereal disease), and the large subsidies promised in respect of housing in the near future. The bulk of these subventions, it is important to notice, do not pass through the local Taxation Account, but are "monies voted annually by Parliament," and these represent a re-action against the Goschen system, and a return to the old plea of direct grants. Of the £23,160,815 mentioned above only about eight and a half millions come from the local Taxation Account, and the proportion of the direct grants is steadily increasing."

The above demonstrates the growing tendency of Parliament to make grants to the local bodies out of State funds in aid of semi-national services. The volume of these grants has steadily grown from year to year. Waterworks, drainage, primary education, anti-malarial measures, and such as may be adopted for the prevention of eradication of cholera and plague and others which might be named, should be regarded as semi-national services in the English sense. I strongly recommend that the Government should follow the English example in this respect and assist the local bodies with their subsidies. Something has been done in this respect by making over to local bodies the proceeds of the Public Works Cess; but the policy is one that in view of our growing local wants is capable of considerable expansion. In the Provincial Budget a fixed allotment should be provided for subsidies to local bodies and also provision should be made for loans to be advanced to them

8. There is only another matter to which I desire to refer in this Report. In England, primary and even secondary education are controlled by the local authorities, subject to the supervision and control of an education board presided over by a minister responsible to Parliament. The local authorities may appoint the teachers, lay down the curricula and generally control the administration of details, but they must follow the policy and the programme laid down by the board. In Bengal, primary and in some cases even secondary schools are maintained by grants made from the local funds; but the local bodies have little or no control over them. They are managed by school committees controlled by the Government Department. This is in violation of the elementary principle that, where there is financial contribution, it must be accompanied by administrative control. But what is more important from the practical point of view is that the control of the local bodies conversant with local conditions and inspired by local patriotism would add to the efficiency of these schools and in the end promote the general interests of education. This is the case in England, as I have been told by high authority, and there is no reason why the same result should not follow in India from the operation of similar conditions. Next to religion, education is our most sacred concern; and nothing would afford a more powerful impetus to the development of local public spirit than this new sphere of public duty; and the awakened public life of the locality would re-act upon the entire range of local concerns and exercise a bracing influence over them all. Increased expenditure would be cheerfully acquiesced in and local resources would gladly respond to the new local demands. Increased power would foster responsibility and stimulate the spirit of sacrifice to meet it. English rate-payers are wealthy, but the readiness and spontaneity of their local efforts have their roots in the consciousness of the possession of power and responsibility. I recommend the adoption of the English system, subject to variations dependent upon differences in local conditions. The recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission for the creation of a board to control secondary education need not interfere with the suggestion which I have made. The board will be in the position of the Education Board in England, and subject to the general control which it may exercise and the policy which it may lay down the details of administration in connection with the secondary schools may be left to the local bodies. If, indeed, it should be deemed inexpedient to start a new experiment in secondary education such as is recommended by the University Commission with a large measure of power vested in local bodies unused to educational problems of this character and magnitude, the school classes below the high schools may be made over to the control of the local bodies.

9. I consider it desirable to adopt the above features in the system of Local Self-Government in Bengal, and as I was the only Indian member of the Committee I may, perhaps, be permitted to suggest that their applicability to the other provinces of India should also be considered.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Tuesday, the 24th February, 1920.

PRESENT :

The Hon'ble SIR CLAUDE HILL, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., presiding, and 60 Members, of whom 53 were Additional Members.

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA IN LONDON.

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—"Sir, I beg to move the Resolution which stands in my name and runs as follows :— 11-3 A.M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that early steps be taken for the creation of the appointment of High Commissioner for India in London and his office, and that full consideration be given to the claims of Indians to appointments created in this connection.'

"This is a matter which I venture to hope will not provoke much controversy and that possibly the Government will be pleased to accept it. In September 1918, my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde moved a Resolution in this Council for the appointment of an Agent General for India in London whose business it would be to deal with stores, look after Indian students and similar things. As Hon'ble Members may be aware the functions of the Secretary of State are two-fold. In one capacity he deals with political and administrative questions, and in another capacity he has agency work for the Government of India to do. My Hon'ble friend's idea was to separate the two functions and to make over the Agent's work to a representative somewhat on the lines of the Colonial Agents General. The Colonial Secretary of State, for instance, has no concern with similar work in England. My Hon'ble friend, Sir George Barnes, did not see his way to accept it and it was lost. Although the Government of India threw cold water on the subject, our friends did not lose courage and the matter was taken up in England. There were two Indian witnesses before Lord Crew's Committee, both of them come from what is known as the Moderate camp. I freely confess that I do not appreciate the distinction. I really do not realise what the term connotes. One of the witnesses, Mr. K. C. Roy, in his evidence strongly pressed this matter on the notice of the Committee. The Committee

'We are satisfied that the time has come for a demarcation between the agency work of the India Office and its political and administrative functions, and that the step would commend itself to all classes of opinion in India as marking a stage towards full dominion status. Accordingly, we recommend that preliminary action should be taken with a view to the transfer of all agency work to a High Commissioner for India or some similar Indian Governmental representative in London. We suggest that, in the first instance, communications should be entered into with the Government of India with the object of transferring to the direct control of that Government, the Stores Department and also the Accountant-General's Department (subject to any necessary reservations, including the retention of work connected with higher finance), and that the Government of India should at the same time be invited to make suggestions for the transfer to their control of any other agency business, such as that transacted by the Indian Students' Department.'

The Council will see thus that the Committee adopted most of the suggestions that my friend Mr. Khaparde put forward. I cannot help feeling, Sir, that the Government of India, through a lack of perspective, missed the initiation of the scheme which might have been theirs. However, the matter is now placed beyond the stage of discussion, debate and deliberation, for not only has the Joint Parliamentary Committee made similar recommendations, but the matter has now found a place in the statute. In section 35 of the Government of India Act it is laid down :—'His Majesty may by Order in Council make provision for the appointment of a High Commissioner for India in the United Kingdom and for his pay, powers, duties and conditions of employment'. Therefore, what we are now concerned with is, when the Government of India is going to give effect to that enactment, or is it merely to remain a pious wish; we are concerned with when and how this department is to be set up. I submit that this is a matter in which the Government of India must follow the practice of the Dominions. It is well known that they have a representative who is called the Agent General in London and is drawn from a class of persons born and bred in the Dominions. I suggest similarly that this appointment should go to a qualified Indian who has won the confidence of his countrymen, and who will be able to fulfil the post with distinction to himself, with credit to the Empire and benefit to India. That is my submission and not only that, but I submit that in the making of all appointments in this connection, consideration should be given to the claims of Indians; we must try to make this office a really effective Indian organisation, run for India by Indians. With these words I commend the Resolution to this Council."

11-10 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—"Sir, it is a matter of great satisfaction to me that the resolution which I moved in the Simla Session of 1918 has gone through the usual stages. First is the stage of ridicule, next is the stage of argument, and the last is the stage of acceptance; and this resolution of mine has gone through all these three stages. When I first proposed it, one of the Hon'ble Members, a friend of mine, could not understand what I meant then, and he thought that I was making a joke or something of that kind. That was the first stage. Then came the argumentation stage, in England and the last stage has now been reached regarding the formation of the India Office establishment about which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda, just read a passage. So it is accepted now that a High Commissioner will be appointed. I proposed the name of High Commissioner in 1918, but I thought then, as I think now, that the designation of Resident Minister would be a better one, because the term of Agent General was not then much in favour. However, I am entirely in sympathy with the Resolution moved by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda, particularly with that part of it where it says that full consideration be given to the claims of Indians to appointments created in this connection. My friend has confined his remarks merely to the person who would be chosen to become the High Commissioner in London. My idea goes still further than that. I say that not only the High Commissioner should be a duly qualified Indian, but his establishment should also be Indian.

In the same speech which I made in Simla, I said that many ministerial officers are going to be appointed in the India Office, but most of them have not seen India at all and probably they would find difficulty in dealing with the subjects. So I propose that it should be made a condition precedent for employment in the India Office that those people who would be appointed in the India Office should spend a part of their time in the Secretariat here, and I also said, which I repeat to-day, that the people in the Secretariat here should get promotions and they should be sent to the India Office. I also said then, and I still say it, that I personally like that a large number of Indians should go to England, and a large number of English people should come to India so that an additional link between the two nations may be established, or to speak in the modern language, the two democracies of India and England may be brought together and made to understand each other. At any rate such a course would facilitate their coming to a common understanding. So I heartily support this proposition, and I would heartily recommend that the posts of High Commissioners and their establishment should be largely Indian, if not exclusively Indian. They should be as largely Indian as you can possibly make it. With these remarks I support the Resolution, and I hope that Government will see their way to accept this recommendation."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I do not know whether it is really to the advantage of India to have a High Commissioner for India in London at this stage of our development. I say, I have my own doubts about the usefulness of the post, because, I believe, that so long as the High Commissioner is to be controlled by the Government of India, which is not controllable by the people of India, I doubt very much whether the High Commissioner will reflect and represent the opinions of the country at large. I quite see that there is a necessity for a High Commissioner in London from India, but the question is, whether he will serve any useful purpose and will really represent the views of the people at large, and I have my own doubts on this point. However, it is a settled fact that we are going to have a High Commissioner. The question has been settled in the Government of India Bill itself, and what my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda wants now is that the Governor General in Council should take early steps for the creation of the appointment of a High Commissioner for India in London. That is one thing that he wants, and the second thing that he wants is that full consideration should be given to the claims of Indians to appointments created in this connection. Well, as regards the first point, it may be mentioned that although the Government of India Bill has passed into an Act, the Act has not come into force yet. It requires yet a notification by the Governor General in Council. So long as there is no notification the Act or any part of it does not come into force at all, and if I understand my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda rightly, he wants that the Government should now issue a notification in regard to that particular provision of the Act. Perhaps the Council will remember that when the Government of India Bill was discussed in the House of Commons, Colonel Yate moved an amendment that the Bill should not come into force until the rules were all settled and passed by Parliament. To that the reply was that there were certain sections in the Bill which could come into force at once, and for which there was no necessity for waiting for the rules. I think it was Major Ormsby Gore who made a pointed reference to this particular provision in the Bill I read a few lines from his speech. He said :— 11-14 A.M.

'I think the Hon'ble member opposite is under a misapprehension as to what the effect of this amendment will be. The effect, as I read it, is that no part of this Bill can be put into force until all the franchise rules and things of that kind have received the affirmative assent of this House. That seems to me quite unreasonable. It is quite impossible for the new local legislatures or the proposed Ministries to come into force until these Rules have been approved by this House. But there are things in the Bill, such as the appointment of a High Commissioner for India. Does the Hon'ble and gallant gentleman want all this sort of thing held up pending the settlement of the Franchise Rules? It is really unreasonable that you should hold up a Bill, which is to receive the assent of the King Emperor, and prevent the coming into force of many of its important clauses while we are waiting for the machinery to come from India for the approval of this House of certain franchise and other Rules.'

"So it seems certain that the view of the House of Commons then was that this particular provision of the Bill should come into force immediately without waiting for the rules to come from India, and my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda now wants that a notification to that effect should issue, so that the appointment of High Commissioner could be made under it.

"The next point is that in making the appointment the claims of Indians should be taken into consideration. Well, I personally do not see much force in the demand, though I do not wish to oppose that part of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Chanda's Resolution. It does not matter whether you have an Indian or a European so long as the incumbent is not to be controlled by the representatives of the people. He will be guided, whether he is a European or an Indian, he will be controlled by the Secretary of State and the Government India, and he will have to follow the instructions laid down and orders issued for him from time to time by them. Rules will be framed under that section and those rules will be binding on him. However, I should certainly like to see an Indian appointed as High Commissioner, if Mr. Chanda thinks an Indian in that post will do much better than a European. With these observations, I support the Resolution."

11-20 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Marris :—"Sir, I think the Council will gather from the fact that I have been asked to deal with this resolution by the Hon'ble Member for Commerce and Industry that this question of the appointment of a High Commissioner in London has not actually reached the positive constructive stage. I do not mean to say that we are vague about it or theoretical, but it is a case in regard to which we have not yet got a plan clearly thought out in detail. We have a definite idea of the nature of the office and general character of its functions, but we have not yet got, so to speak, the working drawings. We trust the time is by no means far off at which we shall have them, but we have not quite reached that point yet. Now, Sir, in the sense that questions relating to the operations of the Stores Department of the India Office and their re-action upon Indian industries have been for some time agitated, this question is not a new one, but in the further sense that such dissatisfaction as has been expressed at the arrangements for the purchase of stores has now become embodied in the concrete desire for a High Commissioner and the beginning of the emancipation of our business operations in England from the absolute control of the India Office, in that sense, Sir, this project is not a very old one. The germ of it lies in that paragraph of the Report on Constitutional Reforms which advised that the agency functions of the India Office should be segregated from their political and administrative functions and that the latter alone should be a charge upon Indian revenues. That report was published in July 1918. As the Hon'ble mover has told us, a month or two later the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde moved his resolution for the appointment of what was then called an Agent General, whose functions would be primarily to undertake the purchase of stores, to act as Indian Trade Commissioner, to look after Indian students, to make purchases of silver, to take over the work of the Finance Committee of the India Office, and so forth. That resolution, Sir, was not accepted by this Council. I do not think the Hon'ble Mover put the matter quite fairly when he said that Government threw cold water on it. The fact was, as the Hon'ble Member in charge pointed out, and as was known to the Council at the time, that the Industrial Commission was then sitting and was very much concerned in this question of the production and purchase of stores, and that that Commission was likely to make proposals for the development of the production of stores in India in a way which the retention of the purchasing power in the hands of an Agent General might rather thwart than encourage. That was the view which the Hon'ble Commerce Member presented to the Council and which met with the acceptance of the Council. The Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, however, made it plain that the duties of this officer in London might be a question of detail, and what he was largely driving at was the provision in London of a representative of Indian interests, who would not be under the control of the India Office, but an officer of the Government of India, and although the Resolution was not accepted by Government or Council, that was a point of view for which every one I think felt that there was much to be said.

"The next stage, Sir, was the report of the Crewe Committee on India Office organisation. They went a little further than the Montagu-Chelmsford Report and proposed a demarcation between the administrative and political and the agency functions of the India Office. They thought that the step would be acceptable to Indian opinion 'as marking a stage towards full Dominion status' But when we look at their positive proposals we see that they fall short of this. What they recommended was that the direct control of the Stores Department of the India Office and some of the Accountant General's work of that office, (but not high finance), and other work that lent itself to such treatment, such as the business of the Indian Students Department, should be transferred to the new office. They thus left a perceptibly wide gap between the functions of the office which they contemplated and those of a full blown Dominion High Commissioner. And it is, I think, obvious that that distinction must be made so long as Parliament and the Secretary of State retain the responsibility for Indian affairs which the Government of India Act lays upon them. The Indian High Commissioner cannot exercise the diplomatic functions which Dominion High Commissioners do. I think that is clear. At all events the Joint Committee thought so, for they laid it down significantly that our High Commissioner's functions should be functions of agency as distinct from political functions analogous to those performed by Dominion High Commissioners. This inevitable decision cuts out from immediate consideration what to my mind is perhaps the most interesting feature of the subject, namely, the problems that arise in respect of diplomatic relations.—I mean the indeterminate position of the High Commissioner between the changing Dominion Governments and the great Departments in Whitehall. It is an interesting thing to an observer of political developments to notice that it has always been the aim of the Departments to treat these Dominion High Commissioners as the diplomatic representatives of the great Dominions in London and to deal with the Dominions through their High Commissioners. There has been, on the other hand, a perceptible reluctance on the part of the Parliaments of the Dominions to allow their representatives that status, and when Imperial matters of first importance have come up for discussion, that discussion has not been conducted, as might have been expected, through the High Commissioners, but the Premiers or leading statesmen of the Dominions have come over to participate at first hand in the deliberations. That, Sir, is not an aspect of the matter which immediately concerns us because it may not arise. But limited as the functions of our High Commissioner may be at the outset, it seems to me perfectly certain that the mere fact that we have a representative of our own in London will result bit by bit in new functions being given to him, and personally I should forecast at no very distant date an interesting question arising as to the powers of the High Commissioner and the rights of the Government of India to deal with him vis a vis of the Secretary of State.

"However, leaving these questions which do not immediately arise from the Resolution and confining ourselves only to the sure ground upon which we have to build, we may take it that the High Commissioner in London, an office which is shortly to be created, will at all events deal with the purchase of such stores as are required to be bought overseas. He will have associated with him an Indian Trade Commissioner, and he may or may not exercise functions connected with the supervision of Indian students.

"Well, Sir, what then is the position at the present moment? The position is that the Government of India of course intend to pursue this policy and to make this appointment, but at this actual moment a Stores Committee is in session to consider the question of the arrangements to be made for the purchase of stores in India. The question of the arrangements to be made for the purchase of stores in England must obviously depend upon what is seen to be possible and expedient as regards purchase in this country, for the most direct way in which we can stimulate production in this country is by purchase in this country; such production must come first; it must be furthered by every legitimate and prudent means. That, Sir, is the declared policy of Government and it has the support of Indian opinion. As soon, therefore, as the Stores Committee have advised upon this question the Government of India think that the time will be ripe to take up this matter of moving for the appointment of a High Commissioner and of definitely defining his duties. They are perfectly willing to give an undertaking that the question will then be considered, and it goes without saying that the further question which is raised by the Hon'ble Member's Resolution will receive the fullest consideration also. With this explanation, Sir, that we must first see one more step ahead of us before acting, the Government of India accept the Hon'ble Member's Resolution."

11-33 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, I am grateful to the Hon'ble Sir William Marris for his kind acceptance of my Resolution with certain reservations.

"While I was listening to his very instructive and very interesting speech—it was several times the length of my few remarks—I was wondering whether I would not be justified in characterising the present attitude of Government as the same which was adopted in 1918, namely, that of throwing cold water upon the scheme. It is now two years since this matter was debated and recommended by the Crewe Committee, the Joint Committee and lately found a place in the Statute; still we are told that the time has not yet come, and that many other things have to be taken into consideration. However, I am pleased to hear that Government accepts my Resolution. I am prepared, Sir, to accept the attitude that we must go through several stages and that we shall have progressive realisation in this also as in other matters. I, therefore, express my gratitude for the attitude which has been taken up by the Hon'ble Member."

The Resolution was put and adopted.

RESOLUTION RE PROVINCIAL SERVICES.

11-34 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, at the time I gave notice of the Resolution* which stands in my name, the orders of the Secretary of State in regard to the recommendations of the Public Services Commission about the Provincial services had not been passed and there was no knowing when they would be passed. But yesterday, in reply to an interpellation, the Hon'ble the Home Member gave information that the orders had been passed which makes it unnecessary now for me to press this Resolution. I, therefore, ask for leave to withdraw it."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"The Hon'ble Mr. Sinha's Resolution is by leave withdrawn."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I rise to a point of order, Sir. Has it not to be put to the vote?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"It has not been moved."

The Resolution was by leave withdrawn.

*This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that orders be passed without further delay on the recommendations of the Public Services Commission relating to the various Provincial services.

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

RESOLUTION RE AMNESTY TO POLITICAL OFFENDERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :— 11-35 A.M.

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to give the fullest effect to the letter and spirit of the Royal Proclamation in regard to clemency to political offenders.'

" Sir, the policy of His Majesty's Government is to introduce responsible government in India, and, in order that that policy might be carried out successfully, it is necessary that the officials, i.e., those responsible for the government, and the people of India must work together. Now they must, I say, work together with a common determination for a common purpose, namely, the attainment of responsible government in India. This is possible if there is co-operation between the people and the officials. Now, in order to bring about the necessary co-operation, it is absolutely essential that all traces of bitterness between the people and the officials must disappear. Now, how are those traces of bitterness to disappear ? Several ways were first hinted at by Colonel Wedgwood in the House of Commons on the the 5th of December. Colonel Wedgwood in his speech on the third reading of the Government of India Bill, uttered these memorable words :—

'This Bill is not enough. India is not vitally interested in this Bill. India is infinitely more vitally interested in the repeal of the Press Act, of the Seditious Meetings Act, the Rowlatt Acts, and all the un-English Acts with which we have had to hold down India. India is much more interested in an amnesty for political offenders, for those hundreds of men who still lie in jail in India or who are banished all over the world. If this Bill is to be a success, if it is to work, remember that it must have the right atmosphere in which to work. Unless it has that right atmosphere, no amount of amendments, even if we carried them from the Labour benches, would put the matter right. No amount of amendments would unite the English and Indian peoples as they ought to be re-united. They have been severed—I will not go into the reason of it now—by people who did not know what England stood for. We have to bind them together. This Bill is not enough. Start from that, but for goodness' sake when this Act comes into force, when the new constitution is granted to India, see that it is accompanied by a full amnesty for all political offenders, and see, above all, that it is accompanied by a declaration of rights which will put the humblest Indian subject of the British Crown on the same footing as any of us here, and establish all those principles for which the English have fought in the past when they conquered their rulers.

'Give us throughout the whole British Commonwealth a people divided neither by colour bars nor by any differentiation in the rights of men.'

" Those are noble words of a noble member of the House of Commons. Now, what do we find ? A few days after that, I think about two weeks after that, comes the Proclamation from His Majesty the King-Emperor embodying one of the suggestions made by Colonel Wedgwood, namely, the general amnesty. Of course the Proclamation is not exhaustive as to the ways by which all bitterness can be obliterated; it refers to one of the ways, namely, general amnesty to all political prisoners. Now, Sir, the question is whether the fullest effect has been given to this command of His Majesty. Well, of course, if the fullest effect had been given there was no justification for the admission of this resolution. The very fact that His Excellency has been kind enough to admit this resolution is proof enough that the fullest effect has not been given. But, apart from that, it is necessary for me to give this Council a few facts and statistics to show that the letter and the spirit of the Royal Proclamation have not been observed. I take Bombay first. In Bombay 123 people were convicted by the Martial Law Commissioners. Out of these 123 I think 72 were released, and 51 are still rotting in jails. I know that the sentences of 18 of these 51 have been reduced, but I submit to this Council that it is not a question of reduction of sentences. What His Majesty the King desires is that all traces of bitterness should be obliterated, not reduced. Reduction of sentences, if it means anything at all, means reduction in the bitterness. What is required is a clean slate. I do not know on what principle the Government of Bombay acted in this matter. Of course there is that general discretion given to His Excellency the Viceroy that in extending the general clemency he should consider the question of public safety at the same time. That is a discretion which must be very wisely exercised. But nothing in the Proclamation admits of reduction of sentences surely. The discretion clause means that certain people whom the Viceroy thinks are people who could not consistently with public safety be released should not be granted amnesty. However, if I were the adviser of Government, which fortunately I am not, what I would do is this. I would advise His Excellency the Viceroy to ask all political offenders whether they wish to take advantage of the general amnesty clause or not. I assure you, Sir, and I assure this Council, that whatever else you may say against these people they are an honest lot; they mean what they say and they say what they mean, and if you ask them whether they wish to take advantage of the general amnesty clause, that is to say, whether they propose hereafter to begin with a clean slate and to have no bitterness whatsoever, and if they say 'yes,' I would advise His Excellency the Viceroy to trust those people, to take them at their word. Let us ask them, I say, whether they wish to take advantage of the general amnesty clause in the Royal Proclamation, and if they say 'yes,' trust them, confide in them, and they will not fail you; in fact, they had their convictions and they paid the price for them, and if they now say 'Well, in view of the changed circumstances, in view of the Royal Proclamation, we are willing to have all bitterness obliterated and to begin with a clean slate and co-operate with Government,' why not confide in them and grant them general amnesty?

"I was referring, Sir, to the cases in Bombay. Now in Bombay, as I say, there are 51 persons still left in jail out of 123. There are also other stray cases here and there in Bombay, the case of Mr. Horniman for example. The Secretary of State wrote to Mr. Horniman the other day that his case entirely depended upon the view that the Governor of Bombay would take. No doubt Mr. Horniman has been refused passports, but the letter that the Secretary of State wrote to Mr. Horniman is perfectly clear, that passports were refused, not because the passport officers in their discretion thought fit to do so, but because the Governor of Bombay had not yet consented to the return of Mr. Horniman to India; and after all we know exactly how things stand. We know what were the allegations against Mr. Horniman They were only two as subsequently announced, one was that he published a newspaper telegram from the Delhi correspondent of the Bombay Chronicle just at or about the time when the riots took place in Delhi; that telegram stated that some soldiers in the firing used what he called soft-nosed bullets. Well it was subsequently found that no such bullets were used, and thereupon the same correspondent sent a telegram to Mr. Horniman withdrawing the allegation. That telegram was despatched to Mr. Horniman, I understand, on the 17th April, or thereabout, and Mr. Horniman was deported on the 26th, and for some mysterious reasons the latter telegram that was sent by the correspondent did not reach the Bombay Chronicle office till the 29th, and immediately it was given publication in the Chronicle.

"Sir, I do not know why the telegram did not reach Mr. Horniman in due course Perhaps the Government alone can explain. Neither Mr. Horniman nor anybody can say how it was that the telegram which was despatched from Delhi on the 17th did not reach Bombay until the 29th. The deportation took place on the 26th. All these facts were brought to the notice of Mr. Montagu by the Directors of the Bombay Chronicle, they sent a cablegram explaining the whole situation and the fact that the telegram had been delayed. The second and the only other allegation was that the Bombay Chronicle was distributed free among the soldiers in the hope of exciting insubordination. Now that allegation is one that has been often characterised as false, by the Bombay Chronicle itself, and Mr. Horniman himself called upon the authorities to prove it. Nothing of the kind has been done. I think the authorities must now admit that the allegation was without foundation. These were the only two allegations on which Mr. Horniman was regarded by the authorities a person dangerous to public safety. This, Sir, is really not the way to invite co-operation. If you want co-operation you must be prepared on your side also for co-operation. It cannot be one-sided, it must be, as one of my friends has often stated, responsive. Then there are other cases in Bombay, the case of the Savarkar

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. G. S. Khaparde.]

Brothers. They have offered several times to co-operate, but I will not discuss their case. I will leave it to my Hon'ble friend Mr. Khaparde. I have asked several questions for statistics of persons who come in under the amnesty clause; I have not got them yet. I cannot therefore give the Council the exact figures of all provinces, but I have some figures of Bengal prisoners. The Hon'ble Mr. Stevenson gave them in the Bengal Legislative Council; he admitted on the 3rd instant that out of 64 persons detained by executive order under Regulation III of 1818, only ten have been released. So that out of 64 persons 54 are still under detention. Sir, this is not the way to treat the Royal Proclamation. Then there is another lot of 52 persons who have been convicted for offences against the State; out of these 52 persons not a single person has been released, says the Hon'ble Mr. Stevenson on the 3rd instant. I am told a few have been released since, but I cannot say how many. And yet we are told that generous effect has been given to the amnesty clause in the Royal Proclamation. I know the case of a person in Bengal of the name of Kazi Abdul Gaffar. An externment order was passed against him by the Bengal Government. He applied for the extension of general amnesty to his case. His application has been refused. He has suffered in his business and has been ruined, and yet there he is; he cannot enter Bengal. Then in the Punjab 96 persons are still in jail. They have not been released. I saw a letter this morning sent by a gentleman from Peshawar to the Hon'ble Mr. S Sinha, Member of this Council. The letter says 'Please draw the attention of Government to the distressed people of the Peshawar district, several newspapers have to pay heavy security, several persons are under trial under martial law for inability to furnish security, thousands of arms forfeited, people merely protested against the Rowlatt Act.' Now, Sir, I want the Government to take courage in both hands and grant a general amnesty according to the letter and the spirit of the Royal Proclamation. I am reminded of an incident that happened the other day at Jullundur. The District Magistrate, Mr. Hamilton, refused to renew licenses under the Arms Act to several people because the applicants had joined the Indian National Congress at Amritsar which passed 'certain seditious Resolutions.' That is indeed an effective reply to the Royal Proclamation! I hope there are not many Hamiltons in the I.C.S. I wish the people and the officials to forget the past and begin afresh. This is possible to some extent if fullest effect is given to the letter and spirit of the Royal Proclamation. One word more. The term 'political offenders' ought to be widely construed. I know different Local Governments put different construction on these words. The Burma Government, for instance, has passed orders in favour of persons dealt with under the Press Act, while other Local Governments have not done so. This is not a matter that should be left to each Local Government. The Royal Proclamation directs the Viceroy to grant amnesty; not the Governor General in Council or any Local Government. The Viceroy alone is charged with this duty. I hope and trust that the Viceroy will take courage and rise to the occasion and give the fullest effect to the Royal Command. With these words I move my resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Sir, I take this opportunity of mentioning some facts which appear to me to be relevant to the case of the Savarkar Brothers which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel has left me to speak about, because I have seen some of their papers and put questions which have not yet come on the agenda. The elder brother is G. D. Savarkar. The younger brother is popularly known as barrister Savarkar because he went to England and qualified for the Bar. Now the elder brother in the year 1909 published a poem. That poem was considered bad or seditious or whatever you might call it, and the charge he was taken up under was attempting to wage war against His Majesty. The Sessions Judge who tried the case sentenced him to transportation for life and forfeiture of his property believing, as he expressed in his judgment, that he could not give a lesser sentence because the law provides either death or transportation for life. Then the case was taken in appeal to the High Court, and the High Court also held that the law was very clear on the point, that the Courts had no jurisdiction 12-1 P.M.

to give a lesser sentence. I thought that would be a case eminently fitted for being considered mercifully. The man has been in jail since 1909 in the Andamans. I believe he has already undergone ten years' imprisonment, and transportation for that period is a sufficient sentence for writing a poem. The funny part of it is that I do not think that one in a hundred has read that poem. Probably if anybody read it, he would not care to read it for a second time. But whatever it may be, I thought that it was a proper case for mercy, and I thought that the man would be released under the general amnesty, granted by His Majesty, but he has not been released The case of his younger brother, barrister Savarkar as they call him, is rather a remarkable one, and most Hon'ble Members may probably remember it. He was a law student in London, and he was hauled up for some charge for writing something. He was extradited, and while on his way to India at Marseilles he jumped out of the port-hole and swam to the shore. I tell this to the Council because there is an important argument that admits of being based on this part of the case. He touched the land, he was on the land, when he was re-arrested. So he claimed that he was on the French soil and being under the protection of the French Government, he could not be legally re-arrested. He carried the matter further to the Hague Tribunal. In the meantime the man was arrested and brought to Bombay and placed before a Special Bench of the Bombay High Court. He pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction, that his case was before the Hague Tribunal and until the Hague Tribunal decided the matter he prayed that his case may be postponed. The Judges of the Bombay High Court held, and I am not prepared to differ from their view, probably it is the correct view, that the Court could deal with him. Therefore he declined to take any part in the proceedings and trial and said that he would not cross-examine, that he would not put in any defence, and that he would allow the thing to go on and to take its own course as if he was absent. Well, the trial which may be said to be exparte ended in his conviction. He was transported for life and his property was forfeited, and that man has been all along in the Andaman Jail. I thought that this was also a proper case for mercy. He is a young man who wrote something, probably very bad I quite agree. Judges of the High Court did not wait for the Hague judgment. Probably they were right because after all these are matters of opinion. There is, however, one fact very remarkable about these two brothers, and it is this. When the war broke out, these two brothers offered their services and added that if they were released they would enlist and go to the front and perform such duties as would be assigned to them. I have heard it, and, I believe, I have read it somewhere, that Napoleon used to like people of this kind who did not care for their own lives, and sent them to the front, and if they deserved any punishment, he thought he better leave that to the enemy. He put them on scout duty and generally assigned any other dangerous duties; so had the offer of these two brothers been accepted, I suppose the Empire would have benefited by taking advantage of their reckless nature. That was a grand opportunity I thought, and I also thought that the British Government would gladly release them and send them to the front and keep them employed on dangerous duties, but that opportunity also has passed. Then I thought that these two brothers would be released under the general amnesty, because after all these are young people, both of them were under 22 years of age, more or less, when they committed offences I believe, and I thought they would be fit subjects to be released more especially that they had applied to the Government, I believe in 1918, for enlistment expressing at the same time that whatever they had said or done had been recklessly done, and that if they were released they would remain very law-abiding subjects, and one of them who appears to have heard of the Government of India Act as it was being framed then, added that if that Act was passed, he would be a very loyal subject, he would do everything in his power to make it successful, and that he would give up his former ways. When this petition was brought to my notice . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I know the name of this person?"

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir Claude Hill; Sir William Vincent; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.]

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"He is popularly known as Barrister Savarkar."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"The Hon'ble Member is dealing with the two Savarkar Brothers."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I did not catch the name of this man."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Both of these brothers offered to become very loyal subjects and that they would make the Act successful and so on. I thought that when this Act was passed and when this general amnesty was proclaimed, the case of both these two brothers would come under the clause which I will read out from His Majesty's Proclamation. It says 'It is my earnest desire at this time that, so far as possible, any trace of bitterness between my people and those who are responsible for my Government should be obliterated. Let these who in their eagerness for political progress have broken the law in the past respect it in the future". So I thought that the case of these two brothers would come under this clause, because these two people had broken the law, they had said foolish things, they had suffered for it, and now was the proper time to release them so that they might respect the law hereafter more especially as they had promised to do so. But unfortunately they have not yet been released so far as I know, and therefore, I thought it was a proper case to be mentioned in connection with this resolution.

"There is also a case of Maulvi K. M. Abdul Gaffar reference to which has already been made by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel. It is reported in fairly full detail in the Amrita Bazar Patrika, dated Monday, the 16th February 1920. I suppose all the details which led to his arrest and externment are not well known. The Council may remember that in 1918 there were some disturbances in Calcutta. After that he delivered a speech in Calcutta which was considered seditious. As a result of that he was asked to leave Calcutta. Then he came to the United Provinces. There they found it inconvenient to keep him, and they said 'we do not want you here,' but anyhow he applied again to the Bengal Government.

"But the Bengal Government would not have him back; he has got a residence in Calcutta, and that is how the poor man is now hanging about without a domicile. There is another case of that same kind, Rahman, editor of the Akuvat. That gentleman is also more or less in the same position not convicted of any particular offence, but his articles were considered as rather bad and he has been externed also. I state these cases in some detail to show that the complaint made by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel is not groundless, also in the hope that if these cases have escaped the notice of the Government of India (I have put down a question on that and there is a resolution on it which may come up later), and if their attention is drawn to them, they might receive the mercy that has been graciously proclaimed by His Majesty. With these words I heartily support this resolution brought by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, I would like 12-12 P.M. to associate myself with the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel. I sent in, some time back, a question asking for information as to the numbers of the persons released in the various provinces under the Royal Proclamation of His Majesty. That qustion has not yet been disposed of, and I am, therefore, at this disadvantage that I do not know how the figures stand. Perhaps to-morrow we shall know exactly. But without going into details I should like to say, as I did when moving my resolution about the Royal Proclamation on the first day that this Council Session opened, that I do hope His Excellency the Viceroy will extend the Royal clemency as fully and as freely as possible. From the observations of Mr. Patel and Mr. Khaparde, I think there is yet considerable room for the exercise of the Royal clemency by His Excellency the Viceroy, and I do hope His Excellency will be pleased to extend it as fully and freely as possible."

12-12 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar:—"Sir, there is no doubt that there has been a great change in the angle of vision even among the worst of sinners after the advent of the Reforms and after the recent Royal Proclamation. We have seen lately, I think in yesterday's papers, a summary of the book by one Hardyal as has been wired to us by Reuter, which shows how thoroughly changed he is. We have also heard through private sources that Savakar has been writing to his friends and relations that he has changed his views, and he too is prepared to co-operate with the Government. When the process of reclamation of criminals connected even with heinous offences is to be tried, these methods should be first applied to these selfless political offenders. The Government should not be 'logical to the narrowness' in interpreting the Royal Proclamation also. Let it be royal and let the Government excuse all offenders and make a trial of them. England has withstood the tremendous forces let loose by the war, and she need not fear these small forces, even if it be that these forces do not show signs of being diverted in the right direction. I want that the quality of mercy should not be strained. We are thankful to the Government for the clemency shown to so many people, and we press for their sympathetic consideration that the other people who are not yet set free may be given pardon."

12-15 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. H. McPherson:—"Sir, before attempting to deal with various points which have been raised in the course of the present debate, I desire to explain to the Council what is the general attitude of His Excellency the Viceroy and of His Excellency's Government towards the Resolution. The powers conferred by the Royal Proclamation, like the Royal prerogative of mercy exercised by His Excellency under the Letters Patent of his high office are purely powers which are to be exercised according to the dictates of his own judgment. I am authorized by His Excellency to say that he has no objection whatever to the acceptance of this Resolution by the Council, if it be presented purely as a recommendation of a general nature for mercy. His Excellency is not present to-day, and I doubt whether he would be prepared to accept the Resolution if it be presented, on the other hand, as a sort of accusation or insinuation that the Royal direction contained in the Proclamation has been disobeyed. For my part, I am bound to say that the Resolution seems to me to be something of a superfluity, having regard both to the nature of the message contained in the Royal Proclamation, and to the action that has been taken by His Excellency to give effect to it. The direction in the Royal Proclamation to exercise the Royal Clemency to political offenders in the fullest measure, which in His Excellency's judgment is compatible with the public safety, is a direction from His Majesty the King Emperor, as, indeed, the clemency is to be exercised in his name and on his behalf. The direction is therefore binding on His Excellency and needs no commendation from the members of this Council. That the direction has received the fullest compliance and the most generous interpretation from His Excellency, I will now proceed to show, and I hope that what I have to say will convince this Council that there was really no necessity for the Hon'ble Mover to bring his Resolution though, as I have said before, His Excellency has no personal objection to its acceptance by Council

"Before I proceed to explain what action has been taken by His Excellency under the Royal Proclamation, I desire to make clear to the Council that the policy of conciliation, which is so strongly emphasised by the Royal Proclamation, is not a new policy, but one which has been steadily pursued by His Excellency's Government and by Local Governments for a very long time back, and more particularly from the time when the strain and anxiety of the war were temporarily relieved by the Armistice of 11th November, 1918. I can perhaps best illustrate this by explaining what action was taken in Bengal during the year 1919 to relax the restraints which, in the interests of the public safety, had been placed upon the liberty of revolutionists and the movements of political offenders during the previous years of the war. During the twelve months of 1919 the Bengal Government after a careful scrutiny of individual cases released 22 persons who had been confined under the provisions of Regulation III of 1818, and cancelled the restraints which had been placed on the movements of 513 persons under the Defence of India Act and of 3 persons under the Ingress into India Ordinance—a total of 538 persons. I may illustrate the same thing from the Punjab, and here I am referring not to action taken in connection with the unhappy disturbances of April 1919—a subject to which I will return—but to action taken in connection with an earlier event, with what is known as the Ghadr Conspiracy. In the Punjab the Local Government during 1919 relaxed the restrictions imposed on 67 persons under the Defence of India Act and 467 persons under the Ingress into India Ordinance—a total of 534 persons. In other provinces of India there is less to record of indulgence because there was less of offence, but the grand total for all India of action taken before the amnesty to remove restrictions under the State Prisoners Regulations, the Defence of India Act, and the Ingress into India Ordinance covered 1,210 persons.

"I will now refer briefly to the action which prior to the proclamation of the Royal Clemency had been taken to extend mercy or to give relief to persons convicted in the Punjab disturbances. The Council will remember that in September last, the Hon'ble Home Member announced the intention of Government to have the cases of those persons still remaining under sentence of Martial Courts and any other cases that might be specifically referred to them examined by two High Court Judges who would submit their recommendations to the Government of India through the Local Government. In fulfilment of that promise two High Court Judges (Sir B. K. Mullick from Patna and Mr Justice Chevis of the Punjab) were duly appointed to undertake the work of examination. These two High Court Judges spent nearly two months on their task and made the most careful examination of all cases tried by Martial Law Courts in which sentences had not expired and of 51 cases tried by Martial Law Commissions. As a result of their labours 99 persons convicted by Martial Courts and 24 persons convicted by Martial Law Commissions were recommended for release. The Local Government was fully prepared to accept these recommendations, as were also the Government of India, but in fact they were for the most part anticipated by the action which was taken by His Excellency under the Royal proclamation on the wider recommendations of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. Apart from these recommendations, however, in all 333 persons who were convicted after the Punjab disturbances had been released by the Local Government before the amnesty was proclaimed, and had the recommendations not been largely forestalled by the amnesty the total number of releases before that event would have amounted to nearly 450

"I have said enough, I hope, to prove that the policy of pardon and conciliation towards political offenders was the accepted policy of the Government of India before the Royal message of clemency was proclaimed in December last. That message merely placed the coping stone on the work already undertaken by the Local Governments and the Government of India.

"And, having said so much, I need hardly take the trouble of denying the insinuation, the baseless insinuation, which has been made in certain quarters, that the Royal message of clemency was something which was forced upon a reluctant Government by a masterful Secretary of State. On the contrary, the message was framed after due consultation with the Government of India and the general principle involved in it had their full concurrence.

"I come now to the action which has been taken by His Excellency to give effect to the direction of His Majesty, the King-Emperor, that the Royal clemency should be extended to political offenders in the fullest measure, which in His Excellency's judgment is compatible with the public safety. If I may be permitted to say so, no one is more keenly anxious than His Excellency that the new era which has been created by the passing of the Reforms Act, and has been ushered in by the gracious message of His Majesty should begin under the most favourable auspices, and that the political atmosphere should be purged of all traces of bitterness. His Excellency, therefore, started with the strongest predilection in favour of the most gracious interpretation of the terms of the amnesty, and I may also say that the Local Governments, whom His Excellency has necessarily consulted in giving detailed effect to it, have been equally animated with the same gracious spirit. There are, however, limitations to the scope of the Royal message. It is not, and was never intended to be, an 'Open Sesamé' that would unlock the doors of all our jails and let loose upon society every prisoner, however dangerous his character, however unrepentant his disposition, however brutal his crime, and however remote might be the connection between his offence and things political. It was never the intention of His Majesty that under the amnesty indulgence should be extended to persons who under the thin disguise of political excitement have promoted or committed serious crimes of violence, such as murder and arson. Nor do the gracious words of His Majesty extend to persons whom Government know, or have reason to believe, to be utterly unrepentant of their former courses, men who have openly declared that from the moment of their release they will make it their business to rekindle the embers of revolution and to carry on war to the knife against the officers of Government. It would be an act of criminal folly on the part of Government to let loose on the public these mad dogs of the anarchist movement. We want no 'Red Terror' in India.

"And I must make it clear to the Council that there is another class of criminal to whom the Royal Proclamation has no application. The Royal Proclamation does not apply to non-political offenders who have been convicted by Tribunals created under the Defence of India Act, to such persons for example as the persons convicted after the Shahabad riots in Bihar or the Katarpur riots in the United Provinces. It has been argued that the words used in the Royal Proclamation 'persons who for offences against the State or under any special or emergency legislation are suffering imprisonment or restrictions upon their liberty' cover these cases, because the trying Courts were Tribunals created by special or emergency legislation, but this is clearly and obviously a mis-reading of the passage. The offences for which these persons are suffering imprisonment are not 'offences under any special or emergency legislation.' They are for the most part offences under the Indian Penal Code—not offences against the State, but offences against private individuals, and there is not the smallest ground for extending to such individuals the benefit of the Royal clemency.

"And now having explained to what classes of cases the Royal Proclamation does not apply, I will explain what action has been taken to give effect to it.

"The first point to which I would draw attention is this, that His Excellency has in one important respect travelled far beyond the letter of the Royal Proclamation. A strict interpretation of the message would have confined its operation to convictions for offences under Chapter VI of the Indian Penal Code, and for offences under special or emergency legislation, but after consultation with Local Governments and with their concurrence, His Excellency, animated with the desire to remove all possible causes of bitterness, decided to extend the scope of the amnesty to a large circle of offenders convicted for other than State offences after the disturbances of March-April 1919. The number of such cases is very large. It runs to several hundred and the result of this extension of the spirit of the Proclamation may best be seen from its application to the case of the Punjab disturbances.

"I have the details in a reply which was prepared to a question asked by Dr. Sapru; and here I should like to express my regret that through the non-attendance in Council of Dr. Sapru yesterday certain statements which had been prepared in reply to his questions were not placed on the table and therefore did not become available to the Hon'ble Members who have taken part in the present debate Here are the figures

"The total number of persons convicted in connection with the Punjab disturbances was 1,779; of these, 712 had served their sentences by 1st January, 241 were released under orders passed before that date, 92 were released in connection with the proposals of the Reviewing Judges, 638 have been released under the amnesty, and 96 remain in jail.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Patel has drawn attention to the largeness of the figure 96, but I think that the Council will look at the matter in a different way. In view of the serious character of the disturbances and the many brutal deeds of violence which were committed during their course, the margin of retention is indeed very small, and the generous nature of the recommendations made by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab in this matter will, I am sure, be gratefully recognised by this Council, and by those who are now pressing for the utmost possible effect to be given to the Royal Proclamation. I may add that His Excellency has lately received from Sir Edward Maclagan his recommendations on behalf of those who were convicted five years ago in the Ghadr conspiracy, and His Excellency has agreed to the immediate release of 45 such persons, while the cases of several others are still under consideration. In the case of Bombay, regarding which we have also heard complaints from the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, an equal measure of indulgence with the Punjab has been extended to those who were convicted after the disturbances of April last, and in all 72 persons have been released, while 19 have had their sentences very materially reduced.

"Taking India as a whole, the total number of persons who have benefited from the amnesty is 1,235, of whom 24 were State prisoners confined under Regulation III of 1818, 300 were restricted under the Defence of India Rules, and 132 under the Ingress into India Ordinance, while 52 were persons convicted of offences against the State, and 727 were persons convicted in the disturbances of March and April 1919. Some Hon'ble Members may say that there is another side to the shield; we have indeed heard a good deal in Council to-day regarding that other side —the persons who have been excluded from the benefits of the amnesty. I have already explained to what classes of cases the amnesty could not be extended, and it would be easy to show under which category each case of exclusion falls, but I will not attempt this task because I do not think that this is the time, or the Council floor the place, for discussion of individual cases. I will refer to one individual case only which has been brought forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, the case of the Savarkar brothers. Mr. Khaparde came and spoke to me about that case some days ago, and I promised him then that the papers would be carefully examined again. I may add that I am prepared to make the same promise to any Hon'ble Member of the Council who desires to have some individual case re-examined, and I am sure that His Excellency will be pleased to hear any recommendations that may be made in individual cases I will refer also to one group of cases to which attention has been directed, both in the Council and also in the public press—and consider the case of certain State prisoners in Bengal. Their case, I can assure the Council, has been given by His Excellency the Viceroy and the Local Government most careful consideration, and I am now in a position to state that, although this batch of detenus consists of persons against whom there is overwhelming evidence of most dangerous revolutionary activities, His Excellency has just been pleased to accept a recommendation of the Local Government for the release of 15 of their number who have displayed symptoms of repentance and have promised on release to abstain from further association with the revolutionary movement. The cases of the others are still under consideration, and I can say, on behalf of His Excellency, that as soon as ever it appears to him that any person now detained can be released without danger to the public safety, His Excellency will be ready to extend the Royal clemency to that person. I may add that it is his earnest hope that the generosity now displayed will secure the desired object of obliterating all trace of bitterness between those who in their eagerness for political progress have broken the law in the past and the Governments which are responsible for the maintenance of law and order. And may I, before I resume my seat, urge upon the Council the need for reciprocity in this matter. May I make an appeal to the non-official members of Council that they will urge upon those who have received the benefit of the amnesty, with whom they may come into contact, direct or indirect, or over whom they may have influence of any sort, the great need for moderation. The Council is well aware of the generosity which His Excellency displayed as soon as ever the Royal message came into his hands towards certain well-known leaders, like Dr. Kitchlew and Satya Pal in the Punjab, and the Ali Brothers. The response to this generosity was not, most will admit, very gratifying. The gentlemen in question went off in hot haste to Amritsar, and there many of them distinguished themselves by the violence of their invective against Government. There was in their speeches little evidence that the hope expressed by His Majesty for the obliteration of all traces of bitterness would be fulfilled. There was little display of that 'common determination among my people and my officers to work together for a common purpose' for which His Majesty the King Emperor appealed.

"There are, however, gradually increasing indications that the Royal message of clemency has not been in vain and that its wide and generous application has been appreciated even by those who clamour for its further extension, but I can assure members of Council that nothing is more likely to spur Local Governments to recommend, and His Excellency to accept, such an extension than the powerful example of those who have already received the benefits of the amnesty and prove by their moderation the wisdom and success of the policy of conciliation and forgiveness"

12-40 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" Sir, I think I speak the sense of this Council when I say that we must congratulate the Hon'ble Member on the highly conciliatory statement which he has just made on behalf of Government. He has told us that His Excellency the Viceroy has no personal objection to the acceptance of the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend, and that His Excellency is prepared to extend the fullest measure of clemency which has been announced by His Majesty compatible with the public safety. I do not think that in the Resolution of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel there is the slightest insinuation against the Government of India. I hope I have correctly interpreted the meaning of the Resolution. I think from our places here many of us, I at any rate, have declared that the Royal act of clemency has been exercised in a generous manner, and furthermore, I venture to add, that this Royal measure could not have come into operation except with the concurrence and approbation of the Government of India and that His Excellency must have been consulted before the Proclamation was issued, so far at least as this matter was concerned. Mr. Patel deserves the thanks of this Council for bringing forward this Resolution and for the reason that it has elicited the statement which the Hon'ble the Home Secretary has just made. It does good to know what the popular view is and also what explanation the Government has to give with regard to the complaints which have appeared in the public press. We now know that more than 1,200 political prisoners have received their release under the Royal Proclamation, but several cases require further consideration. I understand that 15 of the prisoners in Bengal under Regulation III of 1818 have been amnestied, and that the cases of several others are being discussed. May I inquire if the case of Barendra Ghose has been considered ? I hope my Hon'ble friend will be able to give me an answer in regard to that matter . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—" Barendra Ghose has been released and has reached Calcutta. "

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee:—"I desire to congratulate the Government on that point. Barendra Ghose is a man of honour, and if he has made a declaration I am sure he will loyally co-operate in the interests of law and order. His case is one that has excited a considerable measure of public attention in Bengal, and I am glad to hear that he has been released. I hope that some of the prominent members of the Alipore Bomb Conspiracy have also been released under the Royal amnesty. I hope a similar measure of generosity will be shown to his brother Arabindo Ghose, who is now in Pondicherry. He is a most cultured man, he was the first man of his year at Cambridge in the classical tripos, and there is a feeling in Bengal that these two men should be released. If Arabindo Ghose is released, it will add to the general feeling of gratitude which has been created by the Royal amnesty. I desire to congratulate the Hon'ble the Home Secretary upon the statement he has made. I am perfectly sure that it will have a very conciliatory effect on the public opinion of the country. I have full confidence that the Royal Proclamation, so far as it relates to the amnesty of political prisoners, will be dealt with in the spirit of generosity which marks that historic document."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I am very glad that the Government have decided to accept this Resolution. At the same time, I am really sorry that my Hon'ble friend Mr. McPherson has chosen to take advantage of the opportunity to observe that Dr. Satya Pal, Dr. Kitchlew and the Ali brothers after their release have made objectionable speeches at Amritsar. I have read all the speeches of the three gentlemen, and so far as I can see, I see not one objectionable word in any of them. I do not understand what really the Government expect these released prisoners to do. If they expect them to co-operate with the Government in working the Reforms, they can understand, but if they expect them to hold their tongues and not educate public opinion in the matter of our grievances, which are many, then I join issue with the Government. We are not at all satisfied with the Reforms granted, and if the Government expects that we should not talk about further reforms or agitate to get our grievances redressed, well I am sorry such attitude we are not prepared to adopt. I should have been very glad if my Hon'ble friend had quoted chapter and verse from the speeches of the three gentlemen referred to; he has not chosen to do so, but speaking for myself I am bound to say that this complaint of my Hon'ble friend is groundless. I have already stated that I am glad the Government have accepted the Resolution. My Hon'ble friend Mr. McPherson tells us that this Resolution is somewhat in the nature of a superfluity. That statement, Sir, is wholly inconsistent with the attitude of Government on the Resolution. If it were in the nature of a superfluity, there was no reason for accepting it. If you had given full effect to the Royal Proclamation there would have been no need for a Resolution. I have placed facts before this Council which my Hon'ble friend Mr. McPherson has not thought fit to controvert. I have already stated that out of 123 persons convicted by the martial law orders in the Bombay Presidency, as many as 51 are still in jail. Are these dangerous persons? We are told by the Hon'ble Mr. McPherson that the same degree of clemency has been extended to the Bombay political prisoners as has been extended to the Punjab. That is absolutely incorrect in view of the fact that, in the Punjab out of hundreds of persons convicted, only 96 are in jail; in Bombay out of 123, as many as 51 are still in jail. He says he does not want to refer to or deal with individual cases. My Resolution of course is not intended for any individual case or cases. It is intended to secure general amnesty on the widest scale possible. I maintain that full effect to the letter and spirit of the Royal Proclamation has not been given. In Bengal, I am glad to hear that 15 out of 52 persons have been released. But there still remain 37 people, and out of 64 detained under the Bengal Regulation III of 1818, only 10 have been so far released. These are facts which my Hon'ble friend Mr. McPherson ought to bear in mind. 12-45 P.M.

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. H. McPherson.] [24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

Government must not do anything half-heartedly in this matter. I want Government to accept the principle I have suggested, namely, that the persons concerned should be asked whether they are willing to take advantage of the general amnesty clause, forget the past and begin afresh on a clean slate. If you accept that principle, I have no complaint to make. You ask them and if you are satisfied that they agree, let me again assure this Council that you will lose nothing by trusting them. How is His Excellency going to decide whether the release of a particular man is not consistent with public safety? How is His Excellency going to decide that point? His Excellency will naturally ask the Local Government; the Local Government will ask the Inspector General of Police, and the Inspector General of Police will ask his subordinates and so on. This is a most unsatisfactory way of dealing with the question, and, therefore, I suggest that the only solution is to trust these people, to take them at their own word. That is the principle that I still maintain and I hope it will be acted upon by the Viceroy. It has been admitted that there are 96 people in jail in the Punjab; as a matter of fact there are still 51 persons still in jail in Bombay. It is also admitted that 54 persons under the Bengal Regulation are still in detention, and only 15 have been released out of 52 convicted in the conspiracy cases in Bengal. These figures speak for themselves. I have not been able to get other figures from Government yet, but even on the figures I have quoted—and they are correct—because they have not been contradicted, I submit there is ample scope of action by His Excellency the Viceroy.

"There is, however, one point on which I should like to make a few observations. The other day this Council solemnly passed a Resolution expressing gratitude to His Majesty the King-Emperor for the Royal Proclamation. To-day we hear from the Hon'ble Mr. McPherson that this Royal Proclamation is nothing more or less than a continuation of the policy adopted by the Government of India; in fact the Royal Proclamation, he says, is the result of consultation between the Government of India and the Secretary of State. It does not come, according to him, spontaneously from His Majesty, the King-Emperor, but is really a continuation of the policy already adopted by the Government of India. Well, I am very sorry to hear this. It takes away all the grace and dignity of the Royal Proclamation. It belittles it. I always thought, and still think, that the Royal Proclamation came direct from His Majesty, the King-Emperor. I am not prepared to give credit to the Government of India that the initiative in regard to the issue of the Proclamation was theirs, or they had anything to do with it. I am not prepared to give credit to the Government of India at all in this matter. Well, if it was a continuation of the policy pursued by the Government of India and lays down no new principle or announces no new policy, there was really no necessity for the Proclamation at all. Where was the justification for it? People could have been released without the aid of the Royal Proclamation. Where was the difficulty, where was the need for a Royal Proclamation for releasing these people? I am very sorry, I repeat, that attempt has been made to take away the grace of the Royal Proclamation by stating that it is merely a continuation of the policy of the Government of India and nothing more. I hope and trust, however, that full effect will be given to the letter and spirit of the Royal Proclamation after the acceptance of this Resolution."

12-56 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. H. McPherson:—"Sir, I have only a few words to say in reply to the remarks made by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel. As far as I have been able to hear him, he has merely reiterated statements which he made in his opening speech, statements which I have dealt with in my previous reply. I said then that I was not prepared to discuss with him the merits of individual cases, because I do not think this is the time or the place for such discussion. He has quoted to the Council certain figures regarding action taken in the various provinces, but so far as my information goes, his figures are not correct. He has, I think, said that about 50 persons are still in jail in Bengal who were convicted of offences against the State. My information is that in Bengal there were only six persons convicted of offences against the State, of whom three have been released and three are still in jail . . .

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. H. McPherson; Sir Claude Hill; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"Tried and convicted by the Martial Law Commissioners?"

The Hon'ble Mr. H. McPherson :—"There were no Martial Law Commissions in Bengal nor in Bombay. As regards the Bombay figures, Mr. Patel tells us that about 50 people are still in jail and have not been released. My information as regards Bombay is that 72 people have been released and that 19 only remain in jail, of whom 17 have had their sentences reduced from 7 to 3 years and two from 10 to 5 years. If there are any others in jail besides these 19, I can only surmise that they are persons who took a very prominent part in murder, arson or other serious crimes of violence, and were not recommended for release on that account, but I will make inquiries I have already spoken about the Punjab figures. The number of persons who remain in jail is 96, and I have absolutely no doubt that this figure does not include anybody except persons who have committed most serious crimes, persons, for example, who took a prominent part in the murders that were committed in the course of the Punjab disturbances. I do not think I have anything more to add to what I have already said in reply to the Hon'ble Member's speech."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill presiding :—"It is not very clear from the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's reply as to what he means. Does he intend to move his Resolution although he expresses regret that it is accepted by the Government? I should be quite clear on the point."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"It has been accepted by the Government, I understand"

The Resolution was put and adopted.

RESOLUTION RE AMENDMENT OF RULES FOR THE RECRUITMENT OF THE PROVINCIAL SERVICES.

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha :—"Sir, I rise to 12-59 P.M. move the Resolution standing in my name :—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to cancel rule VI of the rules recently promulgated for the guidance of Local Governments in framing rules for the recruitment of Provincial Services (Executive and Judicial) and so to amend rule VIII that a 'Barrister of England or Ireland or a member of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland of not less than 5 years' standing may be eligible for direct appointment to offices in the higher grades of the Provincial Civil Services'.

"Since I gave notice, Sir, of this motion, I have been informed by my friend the Hon'ble the Home Secretary that the rules which I want to modify or amend have been in existence since 1910, and that they are not fresh rules at all. That may be so, but they were very recently re-published in the official gazettes and the newspapers, and I understand that the Government of India have provided that these rules are to be published by the Provincial Governments from time to time, and they are to keep them in view in making their own rules for the recruitment of the Provincial Services. That being so, I feel justified in trespassing upon the patience of the Council for a short time in making my submissions in regard to this Resolution. There are only two points which I raise in this Resolution—one is a minor matter and the other is of some importance. The minor matter is that the rules provide that if the Government desire to appoint to a purely judicial office a legal practitioner, he must be a barrister of England or Ireland of ten years' standing or an Advocate of Scotland of the same standing. Now considering that a member of the English, Scotch or Irish Bar is entitled to be a Chief Justice of a High Court if he be of five years' standing, there does not seem to be any reason for laying down that for a District Judgeship he should be a man of ten years' standing. The differentiation does not appeal to me on any ground of logic or reason, and I therefore ask the Government to retain the same rule for both, namely, if a barrister is made a High Court Judge after five years' standing, he may be appointed after the same period, provided he is otherwise duly qualified, to be a District Judge.

"The other matter to which I refer, namely, the cancellation of rule 6, is of some importance, and I shall bespeak the indulgence of the Council when I read out the rule. It is that: 'Europeans who are not statutory natives of India shall be eligible for appointment if qualified according to the above conditions with the sanction of the Government of India'. Now this is a rule to which I take exception. There is some misunderstanding in the minds of some of my official friends who have very kindly suggested to me that this question should not be raised at the present moment, it being inopportune as it raises a question of race or nationality, but I think that they are entirely mistaken. I am not raising any question of race or nationality. I frankly concede that in the Provincial Service, if a European be domiciled in the province, he has as much right to enter it as any Indian subject of His Majesty, but when a European is not domiciled in the province and is a total stranger, then I take exception to his being appointed in the Provincial Service. For the European who is not domiciled there are the large Imperial Services to which he may be appointed, but the Provincial Services are meant for those who are domiciled in the province. In my own Province of Bihar at Monghyr, there are a number of Europeans who have been settled there for generations and some of them have been appointed as Deputy Magistrates. I make no grievance of that at all; but I take exception to a man who is not so domiciled, who may be a native of Australia or South Africa, or any other part of the British Empire, being suddenly pitchforked into the Provincial Service. I think it raises a question of some importance. It is, therefore, not needful to raise any racial question, and I think the Hon'ble the Home Member will see the advisability of accepting my proposition that this rule should be cancelled. These are my submissions in brief with regard to these rules, and I do not think I need detain the Council any longer."

1-4 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"I will deal very shortly with the Resolution which the Hon'ble Member has proposed as there are many other matters of greater importance before the Council. The rules which he seeks to modify are in no sense new rules. They have been in force, I think, for the last ten years, and so far as I am aware we have never received any complaint that they operate unfairly. Of the two rules which the Hon'ble Member seeks to modify, the first is rule VIII which runs as follows:—

'The Government of India retain power in very special cases to make direct appointments to offices in the higher grades of the Provincial Civil Services, and whenever the Government of India exercise this power in the case of judicial officers, it will be confined to barristers, advocates, or pleaders of the High Courts who have shown distinguished ability in the exercise of their profession for not less than ten years and have a thorough knowledge of the vernacular'.

"As a matter of fact I am informed that the power under that rule has rarely, if ever, been exercised at all, and some Local Governments, the Local Government of Bengal for instance, are in favour of abrogating that rule altogether. The Government of Bengal say in a letter which I have before me:—'The Governor in Council would propose that this power should be abrogated. It is seldom used and when it is used suspicions of jobbery and favouritism are always aroused'. So that, far from relaxing that rule, the only proposal before us, is to do away with it altogether. Where barristers or pleaders of standing are appointed, we contemplate appointing them not to higher places in the Provincial Service, which would be a great hardship to men who have worked their way up the ladder of those Services, but rather to other posts.

"The second rule of which the Hon'ble Member complains is rule VI, which says :—

'Europeans who are not statutory natives of India shall be eligible for appointment if qualified according to the above conditions, with the sanction of the Government of India'.

"If I understand the Hon'ble Member correctly, he wishes to abrogate that rule, is not that so?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Well, his intention is of course to prevent the appointment of Europeans who are not domiciled to Provincial Services. The effect of the recommendation which he makes would be exactly the opposite. This rule does not authorise the appointment of Europeans, but merely places a limitation on such appointments. If you remove the rule, you remove the limitation. That I conceive is not what the Hon'ble Member intends. There is another rule which provides that persons appointed to the Provincial Services 'ordinarily shall be natives of India', and that and not the rule to which he refers is really the restricting rule on the power of the Local Government.

"There is only one thing more that I need add and that is, that these appointments to the Provincial Services are clearly a duty which will shortly be delegated, subject to any general principles that may be enunciated by the Secretary of State, to Local Governments, and I do not think that this a matter in which the Government of India at this juncture should interfere in any way, and I suggest to the Hon'ble Member that he need not press this Resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, I shall be very short in my reply. In regard to the first point, namely, the appointment to the Provincial Services of Barristers of five or ten years' standing, my impression is, unless I am greatly mistaken, that the Public Services Commission have recommended that a large number of legal practitioners, barristers and vakils, should be employed as judicial officers in the various provinces under the new scheme . . . . 1-9 P.M.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"As District Judges, not in the Provincial Service, I think."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Well, I had that in view when I made my suggestions that the rule should be so designed as to place them on the same footing in qualification as High Court Judges, namely, a standing of five years, but if the rule is to be abrogated so far as the Provincial Services are concerned, I shall be quite content to leave the matter at that.

"In regard to the other point, that of the appointment of non-domiciled Europeans in the Provincial Services, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent makes out that the abrogation of the rule would be to do something just the reverse of what I desire. If I am guilty of that I shall be very sorry for myself and for my resolution. However, I will not pursue that line of argument because Sir William says, that before long, this matter will be delegated to Provincial Governments, who will be at liberty to make such rules as they will deem right and proper. In that view I shall not press my Resolution, but ask leave to be allowed to withdraw it."

The Resolution was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

[Sir Claude Hill; Mr. V. J. Patel; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.] [24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

POINT OF ORDER.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"The next two Resolutions,* those standing in the names of the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda and of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, Nos. 10 and 11, deal with a question which has already been the subject of discussion at a meeting of this Council on the Resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde and they are therefore under Rule 25 (1) not open for discussion on the present occasion. On meeting again . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"May I explain, Sir?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"I am afraid not; I have given my ruling.

On meeting again at half past 2, the Council will therefore proceed to the discussion of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's Resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Will you not, Sir, hear me on the ruling that you gave?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"No, Mr. Patel."

At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch.

RESOLUTION RE FREE IMPORT OF GOLD.

2-30 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to move the following resolution:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that gold imports into India be freed from all restrictions.'

"The Resolution closely follows the recommendation of the Committee appointed to inquire into Indian exchange and currency and deals with a subject of extreme importance from the financial point of view. I may, Sir, without hesitation say that the consensus of opinion in India has been always in favour of absolute freedom in respect of the inflow and outflow of precious metals into and from India. I do not think, subject to correction, there is any difference of opinion between the British Chambers of Commerce and the Indian Chambers of Commerce in this respect. Almost every one who thought about it recommended that gold should be allowed to be freely imported into India. The Currency Committee state this at page 29 of the Report:—

'Under the Gold Import Act all gold imported into India has to be tendered to Government, at a specified rate based on the exchange value of the rupee and the premium on gold. The export of gold is not prohibited, but owing to the fact that gold commands a substantial premium in the Indian bazaar there is no tendency for it to leave the country under existing conditions. The provisions regarding the import of gold were avowedly enacted under the stress of war and were only intended to be temporary. It is, in our opinion, desirable that the entry of gold into India should be freed from regulation or control by the Government. We accordingly recommend that the Gold Import Act should be repealed as soon as the change in the Statutory ratio of the rupee to the sovereign, to which we refer below, has been effected. Movements of gold to and from India would of course continue, as in the past, to be reported for registration and statistical purposes.'

* 10. 'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the whole Council do go into Committee to discuss the rules and regulations to be made under the Government of India Act and make recommendations.'

11. "This Council recommends that the Governor General in Council may be pleased to appoint a Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea, the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha, the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ibrahim Haroon Jaffer, the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, the Hon'ble Mr. Paton, the Hon'ble Sir G. M. Chitnavis, the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda and the mover to examine the draft rules, regulations and standing orders under the new Government of India Act and to advise generally on all matters connected with reforms."

"One of the reasons which they give for coming to a decision immediately on the various questions referred to them rather than postponing giving a decision until some more permanent feature became discernible in the monetary and commercial transactions of the various countries was that delay would mean a continuance of Government control which they deprecate in the most emphatic terms. This is what they say at page 26 :—

'The postponement of a decision which is synonymous with the continuance of the existing uncertainty would be open to serious criticism, and would entail the prolongation of Government control over exchange and over the import of the precious metals into India.'

"So they were emphatic in their opinion that, as early as possible, gold should be freely allowed to enter India. The only qualification which they made, and wisely too, was to defend the interests of persons who held sovereigns in India; those that held sovereigns in India were entitled to receive Rs. 15 per sovereign, whereas under the new reginé it would be only Rs 10 and consequently some little time had to be given to those who hold sovereigns in order that they may receive rupees if they care to do so in exchange for their sovereigns. I think that that was the only object with which the Commission said that the necessary steps would have to be taken before free import of gold into India was permitted. I think sufficient time has elapsed between the date of the publication of this report and now for people who hold sovereigns to tender them for conversion into rupees or notes if they cared to do so.

"The Secretary of State as usual accepts the recommendations about which there is some doubt in India, but does not see eye to eye with the report on those recommendations on which there is practical agreement between the report and the people of India; and the reason that he gives is that any sudden change would lead to a shock to the commercial and financial system of India and other countries, and therefore, in the interests of India itself, there should be regulation so that the country may be gradually accustomed to cheap gold. I shall deal with that later, as to whether there is any substance in that argument and as to whether our interests would not be really jeopardised if this decision of the Secretary of State be adhered to. Sir, there is a feeling throughout India that during the war the Government had wittingly or unwittingly to pursue a policy which jeopardised to a large extent the true interests of India in the interests of war and in the interests of the British Empire, especially of the United Kingdom. We know that we did make sacrifices and we cheerfully underwent them. I am not here mentioning that in a spirit of boastfulness or carping criticism, but with the object of showing that there would be a continuous perpetuation of the evils which were inherent in a system of Government control as was pursued during the war. During the war the Government officials, especially those in charge of finance, seemed to be particularly unhappy when there was a large trade balance in favour of India because they found it extremely difficult to finance the exports of this country and the exchange problem was a considerable strain upon them. I fear that that disposition prevails even now. The Finance Minister last year when introducing the budget echoed that sentiment. We find on turning to the figures that during the five years 1914-15 to 1918-19, 182 crores was the value of the excess exports over imports including in the term imports treasure which was imported into India on private account. In 1914-15 it was 27 crores, in 1915-16 it was 30 crores, in 1916-17 it was 45 crores, in 1917-18 17 crores, and in 1918-19 it was 61 crores. How was it financed? Ordinarily if India had her freedom, she might have got gold in payment of this balance of 182 crores, or might have invested part of this money in foreign countries; it might have got silver in part; but there were restrictions imposed by the Government on the import of gold and silver and the net result was a considerable reduction in the quantity of precious metals which flowed into India.

"I think the Indian Chambers of Commerce went into this question fully. Whereas the United States and other neutral countries were adding considerably to their gold stocks during that period, India was really undergoing a gold famine, as it were. The amount of gold allowed to come to India was extremely small ; it was 26 million in gold and 35 million pounds in gold and silver during this period on private account. How was the 182 crores balance financed ? Well, it is difficult to venture on any specific answer to that question. I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will dissipate our doubts in the matter. Dealing with one of these years, the Currency Controller's Report states that the balance, namely 18 crores, was in so far as it was not adjusted by invisible imports of that year represented by credits in foreign countries due to India on private account. It is curious that the total amount of exports up to the end of 1919 agrees very nearly with the total amount of notes printed in India and the amount of metals absorbed during the period. The value of exports during the 9 months of 1919-20 was nearly 9,776 lakhs. The total amounting to Rs. 280 crores, 36 lakhs. It is curious that the number of notes printed in this period was 122 crores in notes and the absorption of metals during this period was 146 crores, the total making up 267 crores. This 267 crores is approximately the same as the 280 crores mentioned above and a margin will have to be left for invisible imports. Instead of India being allowed to get gold she was given 122 crores of paper and some silver in the shape of rupees, included in the 146 crores absorbed. It is curious that against 122 crores of notes Government invested securities in 82 crores in Securities and Treasury balances which unhappily resulted in a loss of 3½ crores. We did not get gold though we were entitled to get it. Currency was inflated although a portion of the metals was absorbed, having done its work. I do not think therefore that we can congratulate ourselves upon the devices employed for the purpose of effecting these transactions, although we must honestly confess there was nothing else perhaps to be done in the circumstances. That was during the war. The Armistice came about at the end of 1918 and we are now 16 months from it. The United States removed their embargo upon the export of gold as far back as June 1919 and eight months thereafter we are told that the time has not yet come when the Indian Government can allow gold to be freely imported into India to pay for India's goods, should India decide that that is the best investment of her balance of trade. The Chamberlain Commission and the Currency Commission emphasised the fact that India must be allowed to be paid readily for her goods in whatever shape or form she liked to receive it. Why should there be this artificial restriction placed on the import of gold which led during the war to such disastrous consequences ? I do not think that even up to August, 1919, there was any appreciable addition to the gold stocks. I think it was later that the Secretary of State did buy gold for the benefit of India and has been sending gold to India. But the question arises why should we require the interposition of the Secretary of State in India's free settlement of trade ? This is a question which the Government will have to answer. So far as we can see the measures adopted were absolutely detrimental to the true interests of India because India did not get what she wanted during that period. Turning again to the year 1919-20 we find that the exports were 97 crores in excess over the imports and 33 crores were the Council sales. Then we have curiously enough 30 crores as the amount of notes issued, the difference between 183 and 153 crores, the figure at which it stood in April 1919 and altogether we have 63 crores, and I suppose the rest is in the shape of invisible exports and the absorbed silver. There are at present 39 crores of rupees and 45 crores of gold in stock and I do not know whether the sovereign is valued at Rs. 15 or Rs. 10. If the gold in the paper currency is valued at Rs. 15, then it means we shall have to write-off at least one-third So long as the notification or rule fixes the sovereign at Rs. 15, I am afraid there will be a loss and we shall have to adjust our figures of the value of gold where the price of the sovereign is reckoned at Rs 10. This again is an absolutely anomalous position for the Government to value sovereigns at Rs. 15 when it is really Rs. 10 or below that. I think that is absolutely anomalous and wrong from a financial point of view. Then again what does it mean ? It means that a person who wants to buy gold in

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

India from the Indian Government has to pay a heavy tax to the Government up to 40 per cent., while his brother outside India escapes the tax. Outside India a tola of gold is Rs. 15 or below, whereas in India you would have to pay Rs. 21 or Rs. 23 or Rs. 26 and therefore, I submit, that this is an indirect tax upon the Indian; whether it is for the benefit of the State is another matter. I do not think the Government is justified in taking this money in the form of indirect taxation from the tax-payer. Therefore, I submit that from this point of view also the continuance of control is assailable. You receive gold in London and sell Council Bills to India for various purposes. The loss falls on the Indian exporter so long as you have that rigorous control.

" From the year 1899-1900 when coinage was restricted down to the year 1916-1917, council bills to the extent of about 615 crores of rupees were sold. The average rate of silver at the time was 27*d.* per oz., and the 1*s.* 4*d.* rate would work out to between 41 and 42 pence per ounce. That means to say there was an indirect tax upon the exporter alone, not upon the whole of India, but upon the exporter alone to the extent of about one-third, that is about 315 crores over 19 years. I would ask if that is just, though part of it went to the general tax-payer; but is it just that the exporter, who is generally an agriculturist, should pay this indirect tax? That is another question, but the reason why I brought up this question, is that control is very closely allied with the functions of selling councils. Then when you sell councils in order to maintain exchange and facilitate export of specie what do you find? You are selling gold here at the rate of Rs. 23 a tola according to the tender prices. You wish gradually to bring it down no doubt. But at the same time in selling reverse councils you ship virtually gold out of British India for the benefit of those who wish to transmit money at the rate of Rs. 10 per sovereign. That is to say, the man who sends his money out of India has got a considerable benefit, if my reasoning is right or sound, over the man who purchases gold in India, and I submit, Sir, that this is also an indirect method of stopping the free influx of gold into India. Besides, you have not got a single farthing of gold in the Gold Standard Reserve to meet reverse councils which should be sold only when exchange is weak. The Currency Report recommends that the location of the paper standard reserve should be India, therefore not an ounce of gold has any business to be in England in the paper currency reserve. Then how are we to meet these reverse council bills? You can meet them only with the gold that the Secretary of State gets for his council bills or otherwise purchase it from the Indian tax-payers money. Well, then, what ought to be sent out here, is utilised for the payment of reverse councils. These complications are leading indirectly to the Government encouraging export of money from India showing an apparent partiality to one class of persons—I hope I am not wrong in my general reasoning—the man who pays for gold in India is the loser, and the man who sends money out of India gains considerably. I think, Sir, all these difficulties would only arise by reason of your controlling the import of gold. Why should you do it, I ask? It is said that gold is controlled in order that there may be no shock. Let us analyse the position. You find that the imports from the United Kingdom and the rest of the British Empire are greater than the exports to those parts. That is, it is we who have to send gold to adjust the balances against us to the United Kingdom and the rest of the British Empire. So we do not ask for any gold to flow into this country in trading with those countries. It is other countries like the United States, Japan, France, Italy and Australia that take largely goods from us, and it is here that there is excess of exports over imports, and as London is a free market and the centre of world trade adjustments, gold has to be shipped from these foreign countries to whom we export goods in such large quantities to London to be transmitted to India; if India wants gold, there should be no restrictions. So the countries which give us gold, if India desires gold, is not the United Kingdom, but it is the United States, Japan and other foreign countries. And why should we not have gold from these countries in exchange for our goods? If they wish to pay in gold for our goods, why should Great Britain interpose and say that there will be a shock to other countries. I submit, Sir, that the balance of trade in 1918-19 was in the case of the United States 12 millions in our favour. I think Mr. Dalal has worked out and has shewn the figures for the pre-war year that £88 million was the balance of trade due to us from other countries and 47 millions against us to the United Kingdom, Java, etc. So that it is other countries that in that year had to pay 41 million pounds. Similarly, you will find on analysis that these 97 crores, which was the excess of exports over imports into India during this period of nine months, is largely due to us from other countries and not from the United Kingdom. What is done is that the gold which is due to us from other countries is intercepted. Council bills are sold to us, that means to say paper money or silver is given to us, and a number of mutual adjustments are made to the detriment of India. I think this is the view which was taken by Mr. Dalal on this point, and I think on this point, although we may not agree with him in all his contentions, he is perfectly correct. He says: 'The real reason for this latter practice is not so much to meet the convenience of trade as to retain the power of diverting payments of India's foreign balances from gold to silver.' Then again 'these revolutionary changes are to be explained by the particular bent of the policy followed—a policy of making India accept payment in India of the balances due to her as far as possible in the form of rupees.' And then the rest of it in paragraph 68 is to the same effect. 'It is a policy which is settled and managed in London, and which necessarily operates in the markets of London and India. That the interests of the London markets have not been without influence in shaping the policy may be gathered from the enormous sums of money or investments belonging to the Indian currency which have been accumulated there.'

"So, I submit, there is absolutely no reason whatsoever for any shock to any other country by reason of our demanding gold. After all, we do not demand so much gold. We did demand about 20 millions on an average during the pre-war period quinquennium, and after all there is a limit to it. It is limited by the excess quantity of goods we supply after meeting all the countries' liabilities and investments, and Hon'ble Members will find on analysis that about 5 annas 4 pies worth of precious metal per head was imported into India during the last five years on private account. There are 153 million women in India, and if you divide it amongst them, I think it will give less than a rupee per head, about 11 annas, taking a sovereign to be 15 rupees, and if you turn to the figures for Europe and America you will find that the average consumption in jewellery and on private account in arts and industries is far larger per head than in India. There is of course a small class of people here who wear heavy jewellery, and I shall never encourage in the slightest degree the habit of wearing jewellery, but you will find on analysis that India has not absorbed more gold than she justifiably may and that is the view taken by the Currency Commission also. Therefore, I submit, Sir, there is absolutely no danger, either to India or other countries if she imports gold freely and there is also a chance of our getting gold now because European countries have a minus balance the imports being larger than exports and do not require gold unless it be to back up a floated currency which would be impossible for them to do except by the adoption of other measures. Therefore, I submit, we have got a fair chance of getting gold if only we are permitted to get gold freely. Government may say, 'We are getting gold and selling it, therefore wherein lies your difficulty?' My difficulty is that first of all you are imposing taxation on buyers, secondly, it is leading ultimately to the export of capital from India, and my third difficulty is, that the Secretary of State has grievously erred in setting at naught the recommendations of the Currency Committee and centring control with the attendant complications. If the Government say that they wish gradually to bring down the price of gold in India, my submission is that if your figures are correct, you have nearly succeeded already because the minimum tender the other day was Rs. 16 per tola, and if that be so, one of the reasons urged for the continuance of the Gold Import Act has disappeared. . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"I do not want to hurry the Hon'ble Member, but he has exceeded his time and perhaps he will bring his remarks to an early conclusion."

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"I therefore submit, Sir, that the Secretary of State should accept the unanimous wishes of the people of India, expressed from all quarters, that there should be free import of gold into India, and should act upon the recommendation of the Currency Committee and not find excuses which after all are supposed, subject to explanation by the Government of India, to be really meant to improve the condition of the money market or the exchange market in London."

The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—" Sir, I rise to support the resolution of Mr. Sarma. I had thought of bringing the matter before the Council before now, but I was informed that it was the intention of Government to introduce a Gold Import Bill, and therefore to avoid a discussion a second time, I refrained from bringing in a formal resolution. But as a resolution has been brought in I strongly support it. 3-2 P.M.

'Sir, this question of gold imports has been carefully considered by the last Indian Currency Committee and the findings of the Committee are :

(a) The quantity of gold taken by India for all purposes before the war (£19 million pounds sterling annually) was not disproportionately large in relation to her economic condition ;

(b) India is entitled to require payment for her produce in the form most acceptable to her people ;

(c) India's capacity to draw gold from the other countries depends in the last resort on the desire of her customers to secure her produce and so long as they continue to take it, India will be in a position to demand gold, in so far as she may prefer payment in this form to the import of commodities or the investment in foreign securities of credits due to her ; and

(d) the entry of gold into India should be freed from regulation or control by Government.'

" The whole position has been summed up thus, and the conclusions are absolutely sound. In the light of this analysis of the Indian trade conditions the apprehension that exports of gold to India would be stopped by foreign countries is groundless. Our demand will be backed by the whole strength of our economic position. The United States of America is now the chief exporting centre, and for long years will remain so. And in her trade relations with that country India is in an exceptionally strong position. There is normally a heavy balance of trade in India's favour In 1913-14, that is at a pre-war period, the value of Indian exports to the United States exceeded that of her imports from there by £11⅓ million pounds sterling. During the war American exports to India increased both in volume and value, but this improvement has not materially affected India's favourable balance of trade. It remains to be seen how far the improvement will be maintained with the restoration of normal conditions of production and shipment in the belligerent countries of Europe, and the establishment of trade relations with enemy countries. With increased demand for her produce within the country, again due to the expansion of her industries, India will be in a better and stronger position in her dealings with foreign countries, the United States of America included. With all these factors in her favour, it is extremely unlikely that India will be refused gold by America. India's position in her trade relations with Japan, another gold-using country, is equally strong. For the matter of that, as pointed out and substantiated by a specially prepared table by Mr. Dalal in his minority report on our currency problems, out of 77 foreign countries engaged in trade with India, only in five is the balance against her. The net balance in her favour in 1913-14 exceeded forty million pounds sterling. This exceptional position of India in her foreign trade insures to her a power to enforce liquidation of her credit in gold. The embargo on exports of the metal has been removed in the principal centres.

"It is not fair to India to restrict her gold imports on the plea of the need of the conservation of the world's stock of gold for legitimate purposes of currency. The fact cannot be emphasised too much that India has been wrongly and unjustly described as the sink of gold. Sir Babington Smith's Committee have found that the Indian demand for gold is not excessive. Sir Stanley Reed, in his able memorandum before that Committee, exposed the unsoundness of the contention in the following passage:

'This attempt to fasten upon India an exceptional and invidious responsibility for the consumption of gold cannot be too vigorously combated.' India is still an illiterate country, whose credit and banking facilities are miserably unorganised and where the practice of holding small savings in gold and silver ornaments is centuries old. Yet its normal demand for the Industrial arts and for the satisfaction of the social customs of three hundred and fifteen millions of people was met before the war by about ten millions of gold annually. The United States of America was reported recently to be absorbing a million sterling gold per month for industrial purposes. Yet no one says that the United States is a bottomless sink in the matter of her gold absorption. It is stated that in England one of the most flourishing trades during the war was that in cheap jewellery in which form the working classes invested a substantial proportion of their increased earnings. Every country in the world uses gold and silver for industrial and domestic purposes, and it induces a sense of angry injustice to find that the Indian demand for the precious metals, for precisely the same purposes, is perverted into senseless hoarding, especially when the history and conditions would justify a far larger gold absorption than the Western nations with their general literacy and highly organised credit systems can claim.'

It is true the Government has been selling gold in moderate quantities by tender, but that raises another point of vital interest to the people. Government is making a profit of 40 to 45 per cent. upon these transactions. This heavy profit is paid by the people and is an indirect taxation for which justification is wanting.

"The whole point now before the Council is, whether in these circumstances the gold market should at once be thrown open to India or not? It is entirely wrong from our point of view, as also on grounds of equity and natural justice, that India must be made to wait. Indian public opinion strongly deprecates further delay in making imports of gold free and unrestricted, and Indian public opinion in such matters especially ought to count with the authorities.

"Besides, free imports of gold will help us to have a gold currency. All our coins are token coins on a gold basis. Only gold is wanted to start a sound Gold Currency. Japan took advantage of her strong economic position to have a Gold Currency. Why should not India make use of her present opportunity in a similar way? The Currency Committee too favour a Gold Currency with a Gold Mint for India. That is the only sound policy to follow, and the removal of all restrictions and control from gold imports is the most effective way to give effect to it. The sooner therefore gold imports are made free the better for the country. The debtor countries of Europe have still a Gold Currency. There is no talk of a change in their currency standard even with their huge financial obligations. There is no sound reason for preventing India, a creditor country, from adopting a Gold Currency. The argument that the free import of gold into India at this stage will disturb the world's finance, does scant justice to our interests which are of paramount importance to us and ought to be of paramount importance to this Government.

"With import of gold the exchange will find also a natural corrective. Sir, with these few words I support the resolution. I will bring forward other arguments when the Bill is to be passed."

3-10 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum:—"Sir, if the last words of Mr. Sarma's Resolution had been 'as soon as possible' I would certainly have supported it. At present I am not prepared to support it without hearing the arguments that will be brought forward from the Government's point of view, because I think that they must have sound arguments for the policy they are adopting at present I entirely agree with what the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy and the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma have said of the right of India to be paid for her exports in whatever way she wishes. If she wishes to be paid in gold she certainly ought to be paid in gold. A special point was made of that in the Bengal Chamber of Commerce's report to the Currency Commission, and the Currency Commission have accepted that point and have agreed that India should be paid in whatever way she demands. But I think that perhaps Mr. Sarma and Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy made a little bit light of the effect that the absolute free import of gold into India would have on the world's commerce, and it is from that point of view that I would like to hear Government before I definitely give my vote to the Resolution. Generally, in principle, I think we are all agreed that, as soon as possible, India should be allowed to import gold and silver as freely as she requires and wishes."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"Sir, I have naturally listened with the very greatest interest to the case presented by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, in the preparation of which I realise that he has devoted a great deal of independent study. I fully sympathise also with the point of view taken up by the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy. I know that Bombay feels strongly on this question of the free import of gold. At the same time, in listening to them I wondered to myself how much real difference there was between the attitude of Government and their own attitude. Let us, if I may, clear the ground a little bit in the first place on general principles. There might have been a time when perhaps economists and perhaps some others might have laid emphasis on the argument that India is a sink for gold, that its craving for gold is insatiable and unreasonable, and that it does an injury to the world to attempt to satisfy that craving. They might have argued that gold is only imported for the purposes of hoarding and that hoarding is an economic evil. Well, Sir, there will certainly be no tendency at present to base our case purely on such arguments. We recognise now—I think everybody recognises now—that India has, as the Hon'ble Mr. Crum says, a right to take payment in any form she wishes. If there is hoarding, well it is a thing we deprecate and which we would like to argue people out of; but knowing the lack of banking facilities in the country we cannot help sympathising with the desire of the people of the country to keep some store of value in the shape of gold. The Chamberlain Commission laid down very clearly the attitude of an independent body of thinkers on that point. It deprecated, I am bound to say, the use of gold in currency, on the ground that it was not an economic use, but it wrote as follows on the subject of the use of gold in India :— 3-18 P.M.

'The line between gold in hoards and in circulation is an indefinable one, but the hoarding habit is sanctioned by the experience of centuries in India and by religious and social laws and customs with which the Government of India have neither inclination nor power to interfere. Any attempt to refuse gold to meet these legitimate demands would be unjust and foredoomed to failure and could only cause alarm and instability. The proper line of advance consists not in actively discouraging the use of gold for currency but in encouraging the use of notes'.

"Then you have heard also what the Currency Committee said on the same subject. I am not sure if my Hon'ble friend quoted the passages I have particularly in mind, but it is very much to the same effect. They say :—

'It must be remembered, however, that the population of India exceeds 315 millions, and that the use of gold (or, alternatively, of silver) plays an important part in social ceremonies sanctioned by religion and tradition. Presents of gold and silver ornaments are obligatory at weddings and on other ceremonial occasions and so forth. It has always been the habit in India to use the precious metals as a store of value and to hold savings in this form ; nor, until banking and investment facilities have been expanded, and the habit of using them has been acquired by the people of India, is it easy to see in what other form savings can be accumulated.'

"Our own conclusion certainly is that India ought to have a free import of gold as soon as that can be provided for without injury to other interests, and that, in effect, was exactly the recommendation of the Currency Committee. Where Mr. Sarma differs from our present attitude is in thinking that the moment for removing all restrictions has arrived. I think he believes that there is still at the back of somebody's mind, perhaps the Secretary of State's mind or perhaps our mind, some malign desire to deprive India of the gold to which it has a right. There is no such desire at all, but the fact is that at present there is in India an internal premium on gold, and as long as that premium exists, it would be impossible to carry out the policy of the Currency Committee as enunciated in paragraph 65 of their Report, which is to maintain the restriction until the parity of 10 rupees to a sovereign is attained. If we allowed free import of gold at the present moment what would be the result? It would be a result which, I think, Mr. Sarma himself would deprecate. It would be profitable to bring in gold on private account; there would be an enormous demand on the part of profiteers for Reverse Councils in order to pay for it. Now, in maintaining the restriction on gold in order to carry out the policy of the Currency Committee's Report, are we doing any present harm to India? As I have said before, the Report contemplates a temporary restriction only, and the Government only contemplates temporary restrictions. Government is now importing gold freely. Is India able to absorb the whole of the gold that Government imports? No. At the last sales the whole of the gold offered at auction was not bid for. Again, is India suffering in the point of price? No, certainly not. Gold has never been as cheap in India for many generations as it is to-day. I put it to the Council that it is clear that by keeping on the restriction purely as a temporary measure, in order to carry out the policy of the Currency Committee's Report, we are doing at present no injury to India at all.

[Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

" Mr. Sarma told us that by our present policy of selling Reverse Councils we were doing a further injury to India because we were sending India's gold out. Now, I was not able to follow his argument in this respect. We are not sending out gold from India. Perhaps when that later stage of discussion comes on, that is, when the Gold Import Act is brought up for discussion, he will be kind enough further to elaborate that argument. At present I have not been able—perhaps it is my fault—to follow it fully.

" Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy said that we are making large profits from the sale of gold; Mr. Sarma referred to the same point. I think if he would realise that we are paying at the rate of 120 shillings in London for the gold, he would revise somewhat his idea of the percentage of profits that we are making on that account. I do not think that either of the Hon'ble Members who have addressed themselves to this point are justified in saying that India has suffered severely in the past by our policy in respect of gold. The imports of previous metals into India have been enormous. It is calculated that India has absorbed in the last 60 years something like 350 million pound worth of gold. There was of course a temporary cessation of imports during the war, owing to the restriction imposed by us. Mr. Sarma attacked that policy, but he was good enough to say at the end of his attack that he himself could see no other way of financing ourselves during the war than in the manner adopted by us. Let me quote against him the opinion of the Times of India, a paper which is not always favourable to our currency policy. In discussing the Report of the Currency Committee, the Times of India purposely asked its readers not to go back on what was done during the war. It was, the paper said, impolitic to go back on that policy now, because no other policy was possible at the time. We are not dealing with past measures, we are dealing merely with the future; we are dealing with the question whether it is wise at the present moment to allow the free import of gold into India in view of the existing internal premium on gold, and we are merely suggesting that the restriction should be kept on until the internal premium has disappeared.

"My Hon'ble friend reminds me that I did not say whether the Government could or could not accept the resolution. If the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma would be willing to agree that the resolution should be modified by providing that the restriction shall be removed as soon as possible, the Government will be very glad to accept it, and they would at the same time be perfectly prepared to bring before the Secretary of State the opinions expressed by the non-official members of the Council who have spoken this afternoon."

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I am thankful to the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey for his appreciation of our difficulties which urge us in bringing forward this resolution at the present stage, and I am thankful that he has promised to consider whether it would not be possible to address the Secretary of State to remove, at the earliest possible moment, the restrictions on the import of gold. But, Sir, 'at the earliest possible moment' is a somewhat elastic term, and I have never felt any doubt that the Government would abolish these restrictions at what they consider to be the earliest possible time. If the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey gives some indication as to the period within which he expects to do this—I will not say do it to-day or to-morrow—but if he can say when he expects these restrictions will be removed, I think I may see my way to drop the resolution. Of course the resolution is entirely in the hands of the Government. 3-24 P.M.

"But may I say, Sir, that the arguments that were advanced by the Government really strengthen the position for which I stand. As far as I remember the recommendations of the various Chambers of Commerce and public men who appeared before the Currency Committee were in favour of an immediate removal of the restrictions. The Secretary of State must, therefore, have represented his view before the Committee, if he had any views on the matter, showing how it would be impossible to carry out the wishes of the people. The question must have been considered by the Committee in the light of the representations of the Government and the question must have been threshed out before the Committee came to a conclusion on the matter. The Committee state that they deprecated delaying the report although exchange was fluctuating in a remarkable manner, absolutely unforeseen by any one; they deprecated delaying on the ground that that would mean the continuance of Government control over the imports of gold and over exchange. I take it, therefore, Sir, that either the Secretary of State did not raise any objection, or had no arguments to advance to convince the Commissioners, and his arguments were not considered of sufficient value, as to justify the Committee coming to a different conclusion. Consequently, some strong arguments have to be urged now by the Secretary of State before he can justify his position that the Gold Import Act should be continued and that restrictions should be continued for some time. And what are the arguments? It is said that there is a premium on gold; exactly, that is the reason why these restrictions ought to be removed; the premium will continue as long as there is a dearth or scarcity or famine of gold, and the Government sales do not come up to the people's requirements. If they can buy what they want at Rs. 10 per sovereign as they hope to, if the market were free, why should they pay at the rate of Rs. 16 or Rs. 15? There is a lot of smuggling also going on. Therefore the premium on gold would depend upon the quantity of sales by the Government, and if the Government should sell large quantities without making any profit, or if the people are allowed to buy in an open market, then there would be no premium on gold, and therefore I cannot see how this argument of the existence of a premium on gold in India can be used for the purpose of perpetuating a premium on gold. Then, Sir, if my remark was correct that the last tender was 16 rupees a tola which was accepted the other day, the time is fast approaching when the nominal value and the market value will approximate together. Therefore, I submit there would be no necessity for any further continuance of that. The Hon'ble Mr. Hailey says 'India cannot absorb all the gold; we have seen that from the fact that she is not able to buy all the gold we are tendering.' That is exactly the argument which I would use for the purpose of showing that there will not be a shock to the world. If the people of India cannot absorb the gold that is being sold, surely they are not going to grab all the gold available in the world and create a famine in the rest of the world. Therefore, that argument strengthens my position that India would not dislocate the markets of the world.

"Then it is said that India is getting gold as cheaply as at any time. That may be correct from a relative point of view; but if owing to circumstances over which nobody has any control the relative values of gold and silver and other articles have so altered as to enable the people of India to buy gold at the rate of Rs. 15 a tola, what is the use of arguing that Government are selling at the rate of Rs. 18 or Rs. 20, a much cheaper rate than they paid some time ago? The question is, are they buying at the rate which is ruling in the outside world? The answer is no. Why should there be any difference? I submit, therefore, that the argument that the people in India are not so badly off and that they are getting gold as cheap as they did at any time, is no argument in favour of their not getting it as people outside India are getting it at the present moment.

"Then it was said that reverse councils would be demanded in order to buy gold. I really could not follow that argument. Of course, if the people of India were going to buy gold they would not export gold; they must pay in goods or silver; silver they cannot send. The purchasing power would be limited by the goods they export, and reverse council need be sold only when there is an adverse trade balance, which means she has nothing wherewith she can pay for gold. Then again, those who send their capital outside India, are not those who buy gold for private use?

"I do not believe that the trade balance which is now 97 crores in our favour is going against us by reason of a few crores of rupees of gold being purchased by the middle or upper classes. So I do not think much of that argument. Then it was said that India was not treated badly in the past. Nobody has said so except in the matter of the sales of council bills. In 60 years she has absorbed 350 millions and that is a very tiny fraction of the whole quantity; it comes to about 3 annas per head per year at 15 rupees per tola. I do not think that that is a magnificent sum. India has not been indulging in luxuries in absorbing 3 annas per head per year. So I do not think there is much in that argument either. The reason why I have brought up this discussion is to strengthen the hands of the Government of India both in the interest of the people of India and the Secretary of State. Perhaps I should not draw a distinction between the Secretary of State and the Government of India. But there is no harm in our expressing our feelings that we wish to strengthen the hands of Government in the struggle. I wanted this Resolution to be discussed before the Gold Import Act was introduced. I hope the Government will see their way to remove the restrictions at the earliest possible moment, i.e., in the next few weeks."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"Do I understand the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma to accept the four words 'as soon as possible'." ?

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"No, Sir."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey:—"I am sorry Mr. Sarma is unable to accept my suggestion in that respect."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"If the matter is open to consideration I shall accept it, if no definite conclusion has yet been come to. If there is any chance. . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"Order, Order."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey:—"It is of course quite impossible for me, it is quite impossible for anyone here or anywhere to prophesy exactly when the moment will come when the internal premium on gold will disappear? For the information of Members of this Council I may point out the extent to which we have been able to reduce that premium by our sales of gold. When we started the price was about Rs. 32 a tola; it has gone down now to Rs. 21 a tola; and it has of course still to go down to a little under Rs. 16 a tola before the parity is established. Judging, however, from recent sales of gold it will not be long before the internal premium shows a further reduction. When it does go down to the ten-rupee parity, Mr. Sarma may be assured we shall recommend that the restriction be removed. I did not perhaps fully elaborate the point which Mr. Sarma has referred to regarding the effect of the immediate removal of the restriction on gold. Of course when you refer to gold you refer to it in two forms, that of sovereigns and that of bullion. Australian gold, for instance, is imported entirely in the form of sovereigns. Until we have established the ten-rupee parity it would obviously be dangerous to allow the free import of sovereigns into India—that would place an obligation on us of giving Rs. 15 for every sovereign introduced—a sum in excess of its present bullion value. Mr. Sarma himself would recognize this to be a very dangerous obligation. But with regard to the free introduction of bullion I put the matter as follows. So long as gold is at a premium above Rs. 10 to the sovereign, it would be profitable to bring in gold on private account and to pay for this by reverse Councils. There would be a fictitious and non-trade demand for reverse Councils which would be enormously increased by profiteers. That is the exact point I wish to put to Mr. Sarma."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding) :—"Do I understand Mr. Sarma to accept the words 'as soon as possible' I must ask him to say yes or no."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"I would rather have the Resolution put."

RESOLUTION RE COUNCIL BILLS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—" Sir, in view of the Press Communiqué issued last night, I do not wish to move this resolution now:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council—(a) that Council Bills be sold in London only in so far as it may be necessary to do so to meet the requirements of the Secretary of State for India, and (b) that Reverse Council Drafts be sold only for bona fide trade purposes.'

The Resolution was by leave withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE CONTROL OF FOODSTUFFS.

3-45 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, the resolution that stands in my name reads thus:—

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the control over foodstuffs, particularly rice, as between province and province and district and district in the same province wherever it exists at present, be abolished.'

" Sir, this is a question which has been agitating the minds of the masses of India much more acutely than the classes or the classes are aware of There is hardly a village in the whole country which does not look forward to a satisfactory solution of this foodstuffs problem, and I therefore hope, Sir, that the Council will be able to arrive at correct conclusions on the subject. It is also a question involving the correct determination of very large and vital principles with regard to the relations between the several provincial administrations of India and the principles agreed upon would have to be reduced to practice not at some remote time, but in the immediate present. The question I would ask my Honourable colleagues and the Government alike is, are we to treat the several provinces of India as united only for purposes of defence and collateral purposes, or are we to look upon the whole country as really one wherein the people would have to be benefited by or to suffer alike from a bad crop, high prices or other inconveniences resulting from the fluctuations of the season? If the various provinces can, subject to a loose control by the Government of India, determine for themselves the policy as to whether they should build up a protective wall round themselves whenever they feel that there is a scarcity and that the result of a rise in prices would be to inconvenience their population, if you are to allow the Councils and the people of the various provinces to embark on such a policy, I am afraid we shall be doing something egregiously wrong and detrimental to the union of the people and the treatment of India as a single unit. I have been noticing that the various Provincial Governments have been, in dealing with this and other cognate matters connected with the subjects of other administrations, treating themselves as if they were semi-independent units subject, no doubt, to the advice and control of the Government of India, but entitled to be practically free to do what they wished and justly aggrieved whenever their wishes were not acceded to. I have dwelt upon it at such length, because I often hear the cry that the people of a particular province would be seriously inconvenienced by the depletion of its foodstuffs if an adjoining province which is more unhappily circumstanced gets foodstuffs from there. I hope, therefore, Sir, that a correct solution will be found and that, as far as possible, equality of treatment will be given to all His Majesty's subjects throughout India, and all should benefit or suffer equally from high prices. At the present moment I cannot say as to whether it is due to the stupidity and ignorance of our commercial men, to the difficulties in the way of transport or other obstacles placed by inter-provincial regulations that the prices of foodstuffs within the several provinces and even the limits of a single province present such grave differences and discrepancies,

[24TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.]

There seems to be absolutely no principle or data by which you can account for these differences, and it is unfortunate that sometimes it so happens that it is just in those places where the rate of wages is low that pressure is the hardest. I will allude a little to details so that I may not be considered to be dwelling upon vague formalities and surmises. Let us take the latest figures from the Supplementary Gazette of India, for February 1914. I suppose when they speak of rice, wheat, etc., the qualities are the same or are approximately equal. You will find from those figures that—let us take the prices in 1920—in the case of wheat the price was Rs. 5-9, Rs. 5-13, Rs. 5-14 in Peshawar, Lyallpur, etc., whereas in Nagpur it is Rs. 9-13-7 per maund of 82 lbs. There is a difference of Rs. 4-4 per maund, and surely no merchant's profits or transport charges could possibly account for such a vast difference. Taking again rice, the price of rice was Rs. 5-13-1 in Rangoon, Rs. 10-10 in Ferozepore, Rs. 10-3 in Poona, and Rs. 8-6-11 in Madras, and, I think, it is really much more in Madras. There again you find a fluctuation of nearly as much as Rs. 4-13 between Rs. 5-13-4 in Rangoon and Rs. 10-10 in Ferozepore. Take Jowar for instance. It was Rs. 4-7 in Lahore and Rs. 8-6 in Bombay, a difference of nearly Rs. 4 per maund. Take again Bajri. It was Rs. 5 in Lyallpur and Rs. 7-8 in Ahmedabad. Take Gram which was Rs. 5-0-9 in Peshawar and Rs 10-2-4 in Poona, and it is curious that even between adjoining places that prices are grossly dissimilar. In Ahmednagar the prices fell from Rs. 10-15-3 in 1919 to Rs. 5-11 whereas in Ahmedabad it fell from Rs. 11 (the original difference being only 9 pies) to Rs. 7-8. And my experience of the Madras Presidency also confirms me in the existence there of surprisingly great variations in adjoining districts. In the districts of Kistna and Guntur rice is sometimes 6 or 7 seers to the rupee, while on account of control in neighbouring districts it is 4 seers nominally, really 3 to 3½ seers to the rupee. What is the result? A lot of smuggling, a lot of profiteering and innumerable evils which the Government cannot possibly check. I know that during the previous year the Government had to deal with exceptional circumstances. There was such a tremendous shortage in food crops that unless the Government took over the control people might have died by thousands, on account of inability to obtain food, even though they were ready to pay for it. And I am not asking the Council now to consider the question whether the Government were right in the past in regulating the control and the various steps they took for that purpose. The question now is, is there any reason for a continuance of control during the year 1920? I think it is believed generally that the crops were fairly good throughout India, and that there is enough food in Burma and India to supply the reasonable requirements of the people. I proceed on that assumption subject to correction. It may be that the depleted stocks cannot be replenished immediately from this year's harvests, and that therefore steps must be taken to prevent export, so that the depleted resources may be replenished. I can understand that, but the point is whether, if the premises are correct, namely, that there is enough food to go round India, there is any justification in controlling the movement of foodstuffs by giving licences to particular individuals for carrying on trade either in rice, wheat or other articles of human consumption. That is the real point, and my submission is that, although I admit that the wages in different parts of the country vary so enormously that a price which may be considered to be reasonable in one quarter may be extremely unreasonable in another quarter, yet we must look forward to levelling down prices and levelling up wages also, so that there may not be this disparity, and so that the real economic deficiencies, the real economic difficulties may not be slurred over, may not be hidden from our vision by artifical devices. Of course, if a coolie in the Punjab gets one rupee a day and a coolie in Madras gets 4 annas a day, if there is a free circulation of food from Madras to the Punjab, there would be great hardship; but, Sir, I submit the Government would then have to deal with the situation on a different footing, and I do not think there is any justification in a year which is not a year of famine for taking these artificial distinctions and exercising control. Firstly, the Government will not be able to exercise any efficient control. If you control, you must control well, you must have a sufficient organisation throughout the country so as to minimise the chances of corruption, of profiteering and to avoid a hundred other evils following in the wake of licensed control not properly controlled—and, I think, it must be candidly admitted that the Government has not such a machinery and will not have such a machinery as to really take the place of the retail trade of the country. Then what is the alternative in a normal year? I submit you must leave to the ordinary channels of trade to arrange these deficiencies, and if you find that in any particular place the rate of wages is abnormally low, and the people have no living wage, other remedies must be provided, either by finding employment for the people and raising their wages, by encouraging emigration of a portion so that the wages may be raised, or in such other ways as may be necessary to adopt. These are the immediate problems which confront the Governments of the provinces and the Government of India, and the fear lest exports of a few thousand tons from one province to another may jeopardise the safety of the people should not be pushed too far. As a matter of fact in Madras where district control has been kept up for some time the evils are supposed to be the worst felt. I think it is the people themselves who are clamouring for freedom from control. Of course it may be an ignorant cry. I am not saying Government should immediately listen to that cry and follow it because a large number of people are raising it, if there is no substance in it. But the Government must be aware of this, that unless they can find cogent reasons for stepping in, they should not allow the ignorant coolie or peasant to be under the impression that the Government are taking this control for the benefit of any section of the community, and, rightly or wrongly, I may inform the Government that the racial question has unfortunately also been brought into this in more places than one. I shall not allude to it further, but as I have said already the mere fact that Government are likely to be misunderstood is no reason whatsoever for deterring them from a policy if that policy is the only sound policy that may be followed. But my submission is that the policy of control is not a sound policy at present on other grounds as well . . .

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding) :—"May I point out to the Hon'ble Member that as the Council will be adjourning before 4-30, if he takes his full half hour in moving the resolution, there may be difficulty in getting in his reply."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—"I therefore submit, Sir, there is absolutely no reason for continuing this control any longer, that all control as between district and district should be immediately abolished and steps should be taken to induce the Governments, if necessary by command, to draw no distinction between any parts of India, including Burma.

"We find, unfortunately, that even with a bumper crop, prices are rising. They were greater at any rate when I left Madras than they were last year. There is deep misery among the people and it behoves the Government to take every step possible to ameliorate the condition of the peasantry so that this discontent may not deepen and be a source of trouble to the people as well as to the Government."

4 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. R. A. Mant :—"Sir, I do not think I need detain the Council long, as the hour is getting late, because I can say at once that I am in complete agreement with most of what the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma said. He said, he did not wish to go into the question whether our control was justified at the outset or not, and so I propose to deal with that very briefly. As the Council will remember you, Sir, explained in the statement which you made to this Council at this time last year that we were forced to adopt control by the shortage of railway wagons and locomotives. We were never in love with the system and we always said that we would get rid of it as soon as we could. As regards the actual working of the system it has been summed up in the report by Mr. Innes, the Foodstuffs Commissioner, which was published last November. Mr. Innes said :—

'It is probable that the measures taken tended to reduce speculation, to conserve supplies, to keep down prices in exporting provinces and to facilitate price control in importing provinces.'

I do not know whether the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and other members have perused that report of Mr. Innes. If they have, I think they will admit that at any rate we made the best of a bad job in our administration of control, and I think a great deal is due to Mr. Gubbay and Mr. Innes who worked out the details of it. However, as I said, we have never been in love with the system. When I addressed this Council last year on the subject of high prices, I said that we would abolish control as soon as possible, and all I want to tell the Council now is, the extent to which we have not been able to abolish it completely. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma referred to inter-district control. I take that first. We treated that as rather a domestic affair and left it to Local Governments. The Government of Madras was the only Government that used the system extensively and had an elcborate system of district control. I daresay a good many of Mr. Sarma's criticisms arise from his experience of the working of control there. I am not competent to say whether it is a good thing or a bad thing. We were recently informed by the Director of Civil Supplies in Madras, that it is proposed to abolish the system this month or at any rate at the beginning of March, so, I think, we can leave it at that. The only other provinces in which complete control is maintained over exports and imports of food-grains from or to the province are the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan. There have been obvious reasons why special measures should be taken to keep down the price of food-grains there while there was trouble on the frontier, and Government could not resist the advice of the local officers that it would be inadvisable to withdraw control in those areas. The next case is that of wheat and gram which are two staple food-grains in the Punjab. We have removed control over those grains except in the Punjab, and the United Provinces. The Punjab represented that in maintaining restrictions on exports from the North-West Frontier Province, we had deprived them of one of their sources of food supply, as they normally import gram from the North-West Frontier Province, and they represented also the possibilities of trouble in the Punjab, which I have no doubt, Hon'ble Members can appreciate and that it was desirable there also to keep down prices. We have agreed to maintain restrictions on the exports of gram and wheat from the Punjab for the present, but the matter will be re-considered as soon as the new crop comes into the market, and the recent course of prices in the Punjab is encouraging. There has been a fall in the price of wheat, and I hope that we shall be in a position shortly to remove restrictions there. In the United Provinces we have been forced to move in the same vicious circle. The United Provinces said 'if you allow the Punjab to stop exports of wheat and gram, we shall be drained of these grains and so you must allow us to restrict exports too.' So, if we can remove the restrictions in the Punjab, we shall also be able to remove them from the United Provinces.

"There remains only the question of rice. Hon'ble Members are aware, I think, of the arrangements which have been made for controlling the Burma rice crop, whereby the consumer in India and Burma gets his rice at barely half the price that it would fetch in the outside world. India takes large quantities of this rice from Burma, and we have hitherto considered it necessary to control local distribution in order to see that the consumer reaps the benefit of the cheap prices at which we are getting rice from Burma. I am not sure that we could not remove control over rice ; it is a matter which is being considered by a Committee of this Council on high prices and of which the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma is a member, and I hope that he will give us his advice in greater detail at the next meeting of that Committee. I must say that I should have felt happier if he had brought forward some arguments to show that the effect of removing control would be to reduce prices generally. He quoted instances of inequality between different localities, and he made rather a large assumption when he said that he supposed that the standard quoted was the same. Well, that is just one of our difficulties in dealing with these statistics relating to different provinces. They are collected by the Director of Statistics and published in the Gazette, and we really have not detailed information as to quality, and, I think, it is almost certain that the variations to which the Hon'ble Member alluded are largely explained by differences of quality. We have recently arranged to get figures from the Director of Civil Supplies which will be compiled on a uniform basis, and we shall in future be in a better position to judge to what extent prices are going up or down.

"It really then comes to this. The main question which we have to decide—and I am going to ask this Council not to decide it to-day, but leave it to the committee which they appointed last September—is whether we can without danger remove control altogether. The question really is, what will the effect be on prices? It is quite possible that it will cause in the beginning a rise in prices in many localities. My own belief is that eventually they would stabilise and equalise at a lower level, but it is a matter that wants very careful consideration, and I do not think we ought to decide it here and now without consideration of details. Our policy so far has been to move very cautiously in this matter of removing control. It has been the experience of the military authorities, I believe, that demobilisation presented almost as difficult problems as mobilisation, and there has been the same experience in Europe in the process of de-control. I understand that in some cases the removal of control forced up prices so suddenly that the control had to be re-imposed. Now, I think, Hon'ble Members will agree that we do not want any chopping and changing of that kind here. We must foresee exactly the effect of any step we may take and be sure that it will succeed. For these reasons, I will accept the Hon'ble Mover's resolution if he will qualify it by adding at the end the words 'as soon as practicable.'"

4-14 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Mr. Mant has invited me to struggle with him at the Committee sitting and try to induce him to agree with me on this question of control. I think across the table in a small committee room there is a chance for much greater success than by challenging Government here on this Resolution. There is a real difficulty, Sir, and we have tried to work it out in practice. This control of Burma rice costing Rs. 5-13-3 in Rangoon and about Rs. 9 in Madras is absolutely unaccountable; neither freight nor profit can account for it, and we know what is going on behind the scenes; and I think it is really to the interest of all that there should be no control, but I shall not go at greater length into it here, and I shall for once seek the gratification of having a Resolution accepted, and accept the modification suggested."

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill (presiding):—"Before putting the Resolution with the additional words to the Council, I should like to say that Mr. Sarma will find, as Mr. Mant has tried to explain to him, no disagreement in principle between the Government of India and himself on the question at issue here."

The Resolution, as amended, was then put and adopted.

The Council adjourned until Wednesday, the 25th instant, at 11 o'clock.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

Owing to the fact that the expansion of Calcutta has not kept pace with the needs of its population and that building operations were reduced to a minimum during the war, the housing accommodation now available is unequal to the demand. This and other causes have enabled many landlords to compel tenants to pay exorbitant rents, and it is considered necessary to provide for the protection of tenants by a measure which will tide over the time that must elapse before the supply of houses is equal to the demand and economic rents take the place of scarcity or monopoly rents. The Bill has accordingly been drafted in order to provide for the restriction of rents in Calcutta for a period of three years. It generally follows the lines of the Rangoon Rent Bill recently passed by the Burma Legislative Council, but it differs from that measure in the following respects:—

(1) In order not to discourage private enterprise in building new houses, it is provided, as in section 8 of the English Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1919, that the measure shall not apply to buildings erected after, or in course of erection at the time it passes into law.

(2) The standard rent is taken as the rent on which premises were let on 1st April 1919 or, if they were not let on that date as the rent on which they were last let before that date.

(3) It is not proposed to debar the recovery by landlords of rent due up to the date of the passing of the Act or to allow tenants to recover from landlords sums paid prior to that date.

(4) Where a landlord has since 1st April 1919 incurred or shall after the passing of the Act incur expenditure on the improvement or structural alteration of premises (not including expenditure on decorations or ordinary repairs) it is proposed that the Controller may allow the rent to be increased by not more than 10 per cent. on the amount so expended.

NOTES ON CLAUSES.

Sub-clause (3).—Power has been taken to extend the Act to any other town or local area in Bengal where application of its provisions may be considered desirable in order to afford relief to tenants.

Sub-clause (4).—For reasons given in the Statement of Objects and Reasons the duration of the proposed Act has been limited to three years.

CLAUSE 2.

Sub-clause (a).—The definition of "Calcutta" follows section 3 (a) of the Bengal Cruelty to Animals Act, 1920.

Sub-clause (d).—"Notification" has been defined in order to avoid repetition.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The following Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide more effectual control over the administration of Charitable and Religious Trusts was presented to the Indian Legislative Council on the 8th March, 1920 :—

WE, the undersigned, Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to provide more effectual control over the administration of Charitable and Religious Trusts was referred, have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin, and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto.

Paper No. I.—From the Chief Commissioner Baluchistan, dated the 1st October, 1919 ; Chief Commissioner of Coorg, dated the 19th November, 1919, and enclosure ; Chief Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara, dated the 27th November, 1919, and enclosures ; Government of the United Province, dated the 9th December, 1919, and enclosures ; Chief Commissioner of Assam, dated the 9th December, 1919 ; Chief Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, dated the 11th December, 1919.

Paper No. II.—From the Chief Commissioner of Central Provinces, dated the 9th December, 1919, and enclosures ; Government of Madras, dated the 9th December, 1919, and enclosures ; Government of Bihar and Orissa, dated the 22nd December, 1919, and enclosures ; Government of the Punjab, dated the 22nd December, 1919, and enclosures.

Paper No. III.—From Government of Madras, dated the 24th December, 1919, and enclosures ; Government of Bengal, dated the 31st December, 1919, and enclosures.

Paper No. IV.—From Government of Burma, dated the 29th December, 1919, and enclosures ; Chief Commissioner of Delhi, dated the 14th January, 1920, and enclosures.

Paper No. V.—From Government of Bombay, dated the 13th January, 1920, and enclosures ; Government of Madras, dated the 10th January, 1920, and enclosures ; Calcutta High Court, dated the 22nd January, 1920.

2. We have added a proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 1 which will enable any Province or part of a Province to be excluded from the operation of the Act if it is found to be unsuited to special local conditions. As it appears that there are certain trusts within the scope of the Act which are subject to a satisfactory system of management and control, we have at the same time provided that the operation of the Act may be barred in the case of any particular trust or class of trusts. We have also added, in deference to the opinions expressed, a new clause after clause 1 to provide for the working of the Act in the Presidency-towns and Rangoon, which would otherwise have been left outside the Act.

3. Clause 3. We have considered a number of suggestions that the word "interest" in this clause should be defined, but as the expression is not defined in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to which this Bill is merely ancillary, we have decided not to attempt a definition.

We consider that no claim for accounts should be allowed to relate back for more than three years from the date of the presentation of the petition and have provided accordingly.

4. Clause 5. After considering the opinions which have been laid before us on the proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 4 of the Bill, we think that, if the Court is completely deprived of any power to pass orders on a petition in a case where the trust alleged by the petitioner is disputed, the Bill will largely fail in achieving its principal object. We have accordingly re-cast this clause so as to allow the Court to decide such a question if the trustee or other person raising it refuses or neglects to utilise the opportunity, which the Bill as amended gives him, of getting the matter determined by a regular suit.

This decision has involved a certain number of other changes in clause 4 (now clause 5) of the Bill, most of which, however, are merely consequential on the single alteration of substance which we have made.

5. The remaining alterations which we suggest in the Bill are either in the nature of drafting amendments or otherwise not of sufficient importance to merit special mention in this Report.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The following Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to extend the operation of, and otherwise to amend, the Import and Export of Goods Act, 1916, was presented to the Indian Legislative Council on the 11th March 1920 :—

WE, the undersigned, Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to extend the operation of, and otherwise to amend, the Import and Export of Goods Act, 1916, was referred, have considered the Bill and have now the honour to submit this our Report, with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto.

2. It was a special instruction to us to consider whether the provisions of section 3 of the said Act should be amended with the object of limiting its scope, and, if so, to report the amendments in the Act which we might consider necessary or desirable to give effect to that purpose.

3. We have considered these special instructions and have decided to recommend the continuance of the Act until the 31st March, 1921. In view of the shortened period which we recommend, we do not consider it necessary to limit the scope of the Act in any other way.

4. We understand that, so far as Government can foresee at present, it will not be necessary to apply the provisions of the Act to any commodities other than foodstuffs (including fodder), gold, silver (exports only), and rouble notes. Under these circumstances, we consider that the Act may safely be kept in operation until the 31st March, 1921. We recognise, however, that it may quite possibly be necessary to consider a further extension in the case of foodstuffs at any time.

5. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma is of opinion that there should be no restriction on the import of gold, but recognises that this question will be decided in connection with another Bill which, he understands, will shortly be brought before the Council.

6. We have made a few further amendments of a purely drafting nature in the Bill which we do not consider it necessary to specify in this Report.

7. We think that the Bill has not been so altered as to require re-publication, and we recommend that it be passed as now amended.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The following Bill was introduced in the Indian Legislative Council on the 11th March 1920:—

No. 15 OF 1920.

A Bill further to amend the Lepers Act, 1898.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Lepers Act, 1898; It is hereby enacted as follows:— (III of 1898.)

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the Lepers (Amendment) Act, 1920.

Amendment of section 1, Act III of 1898.

2. In sub-section (4) of section 1 of the Lepers Act, 1898 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the words "and may in like manner amend or cancel any such notification" shall be omitted. (III of 1898.)

Amendment of section 2, Act III of 1898.

3. In clause (1) of section 2 of the said Act, the words "in whom the process of ulceration has commenced" shall be omitted.

Substitution of new section for section 3, Act III of 1898.

4. For section 3 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

Appointment of leper asylums by Local Government.

"3. The Local Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint any place to be a leper asylum if it is satisfied that adequate arrangements have been made or will be made for the accommodation and medical treatment of lepers therein, and may, by a like notification, specify the local areas from which lepers may be sent to such asylum."

Amendment of section 6, Act III of 1898.

5. In section 6 of the said Act—

(a) in sub-section (1) after the words "any police-officer" the words "or any other person specially empowered by the Local Government by order in writing in this behalf" shall be inserted; and

(b) in sub-section (2) after the words "Such police-officer" the words "or other person" shall be inserted.

Amendment of section 12, Act III of 1898.

6. In section 12 of the said Act, for the words "by any police-officer without a warrant," the words "without a warrant by any police-officer or by any other person specially empowered by the Local Government by order in writing in this behalf" shall be substituted.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The attention of the Government of India has been drawn to the necessity of taking more adequate measures to check the spread of leprosy in India. In particular it has been pointed out that, according to the latest medical opinion, leprosy is contagious in all its forms and not merely in the ulcerous stage, and that the operation of the Lepers Act is greatly restricted by the present definition of a leper in section 2 (1) of the Act. It is, therefore, proposed to widen the definition so as to include persons suffering from leprosy in any stage of the disease. Minor amendments of the Act are also proposed in order to provide for the combination of isolation with medical treatment, and to facilitate the administration of the Act by authorising any person empowered by the Local Government to exercise the powers now vested only in police-officers.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

It was at first intended to give an interval of time subsequent to the bringing into operation of the Dacca University Act, during which the Trustees of the Jagannath College might consider the terms of their Trust and take the action necessary to enable them to participate in the new University. The Trustees, however, expressed their desire to see the College (so far as its classes above the intermediate stage are concerned) amalgamated with the University of Dacca from its inception in the form of a Hall. This Bill clears the way to such an amalgamation by superseding the Trusts on which the Jagannath College property is held and handing over the institution, together with that property, to the Government. This will permit of the foundation of the Jagannath Hall (which will be specifically mentioned in the Dacca University Bill) and will enable the Government of Bengal either to re-transfer the bulk of the property to the Trustees or otherwise to deal with it with a view to its utilisation as an intermediate college in the city of Dacca, or for such other purposes as may appear suitable.

No. 17 OF 1920.

A Bill to amend the Gold (Import) Act, 1917.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Gold (Import) Act, 1917; It is hereby enacted as follows:— XXII of 1917.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the Gold (Import) Amendment Act, 192 .

Substitution of a new sub-section for sub-section (3) of section 1, Act XXII of 1917.

2. For sub-section (3) of section 1 of the Gold (Import) Act, 1917 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the following shall be substituted, namely:— XXII of 1917.

"(3) It shall remain in force until the Governor General in Council, by notification in the Gazette of India, otherwise directs."

Amendment of section 2, Act XXII of 1917.

3. In section 2 of the said Act the word "air" shall be inserted after the word "sea."

Repeal of section 4 of Act XXII of 1917.

4. Section 4 of the said Act is hereby repealed.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

By the Gold (Import) Act, 1917 (XXII of 1917), the Government of India took power to acquire gold coin or bullion imported into India for the period of the war and six months thereafter. In view of the announcement made by the Secretary of State regarding the recommendations of the Indian Currency and Exchange Committee, which was published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary, of the 2nd February, 1920, it is necessary to continue the present control on the import of gold until such time as the internal price of gold has been reduced to the neighbourhood of the new exchange value of the rupee in terms of gold. It is not possible to fix any time-limit within which this is likely to occur, but, in order that control may be removed when the opportunity arises, it is proposed to take power in the Bill to terminate control on such date as the Governor General in Council may notify.

Paper No. IV.—From Government of Bengal, dated the 26th January, 1920, and enclosure.

Paper No. V.—From Government of Bengal, dated the 4th February, 1920, and enclosure.

2. The Bill as introduced provided for the inclusion of the Jagannath College at Dacca in the University at some future date. We understand that the trustees of the College have expressed a desire that the College should be incorporated in the University from its inception and separate legislation is being undertaken to give effect to provide for this. We have, therefore, included the Jagannath Hall among the Halls of the Universities named in clause 33 (original clause 34), and we have omitted the first proviso to clause 48. The inclusion of the Jagannath Hall involves slight changes in the definitions of "Hall" and of "Hostel" in clause 2. We have adopted a suggestion to substitute "the University of Dacca" for "the Dacca University." We have omitted the definition of "servants" and made various consequential drafting changes throughout the Bill.

3. The first three sub-clauses of clause 4 have been re-arranged and we have also provided for the conferment of degrees on bonâ fide teachers who pass the university examinations under certain conditions. Clause 4 (1) of the Bill as introduced precluded the possibility of teachers taking degrees without attending the University courses.

4. In the proviso to clause 5 we have substituted the words "not unwilling" for the word "willing." The result of this amendment will be that students will be given religious instruction unless they expressly state that they do not desire it.

5. The opinion has been expressed that clause 6 providing a definition of membership of the University is superfluous. With this opinion we agree and have accordingly struck the clause out. The clauses from this clause onwards up to clause 40 have accordingly been re-numbered and in this Report we indicate a clause by its number in the Bill as revised by us followed by its original number in square brackets.

6. Clause [7].—We have introduced a sub-clause here to make it clear that the recognised teaching of the university is to be supplemented by tutorial instruction given either by the university or under its control.

7. Clause 7 [8].—We consider it reasonable that inspections or inquiries made under this clause should not be ex parte. We think also that there should be some more definite result from the visitor's inspection or inquiry than the Bill originally provided, and we accordingly propose that where the Executive Council does not take satisfactory action on a report within a reasonable time the Chancellor may, after hearing anything that the Executive Council may have to say, issue directions with which the Executive Council will be required to comply.

8. Clause 9 [10].—We have considerably elaborated sub-clause (5) of this clause which provides a right of appeal to the Chancellor in certain cases, so as to bring it more closely into line with the recommendation of the Calcutta University Commission, and we have removed this provision from its present place and have inserted it as a new substantive clause 41 in the Bill.

9. Clauses 10 and 11 [11 and 12].—We think it should be made clear that the Vice-Chancellor should be a whole-time officer of the University and that the Chancellor should in making the appointment consider any recommendations made by the Executive Council.

10. Clause 13 [14] —The Statutes placed on the Academic Council the duty of maintaining the register or registered graduates. We consider that this is a duty that might well be performed by the Registrar. It was suggested to us that we should follow the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission in providing that the Treasurer should be an honorary officer. The majority of the Committee, however, is of opinion that the Treasurer will be called upon to perform duties which will be both onerous and responsible, and that there is likely to be no continuity in the office unless the Treasurer is a paid officer.

11. Clauses 16 18 [17-19].—In connection with the constitution of the Court we have kept in the Bill only those ex-officio members who are directly connected with the University. The Committee disapproves of the idea of throwing open the membership of the Court to donors of specified amounts. We think it will be most suitable to give the Chancellor power to appoint as life members persons who make substantial donations. Instead of the teachers (whom the Statutes declare to be five in number) to be elected by the Academic Council we have provided five Lecturers to be elected by the whole body of teachers who will thus be given more direct representation on the Court. The Professors and Readers are all ex officio members. We have also added to the Court ten persons appointed by associations approved by the Chancellor. This approximates to a recommendation of the Calcutta University Commission. Further changes in the constitution of the Court are dealt with in connection with the Statutes. We have reduced the number of members who can require the Vice-Chancellor to convene a meeting of the Court from forty to thirty and we have collected in clause 18 [19] the more important functions of the Court.

12. Clause 22 [23].—We recognise that there is a widespread desire that Faculties of Medicine and Agriculture should be constituted in the University from its commencement. We have therefore provided for these in this clause. We do not consider that there is any necessity that the election of the Dean should be subject to the confirmation of the Academic Council. We have also added words to make it clear that the Dean need not necessarily receive any additional remuneration as Dean.

13. Clause 28 [29].—We have made it clear in this clause that Statutes can only be amended or repealed by Statutes. We have made it clear that the Court may, in referring a Statute back to the Executive Council, suggest amendment therein, and we have provided for a power in the Chancellor to refer a Statute, which the Court has rejected, back to the Court for further consideration. It was urged upon us by our Muhammadan colleagues that those provisions of the Statute which provide for a definite representation of Muhammadans on the major authorities of the University should be brought into the Bill in order that their amendment should not be possible without legislation. The majority of the Committee is, however, of opinion that a reasonable compromise in this matter is to provide that no Statute which affects the proportion or method of Muhammadan representation shall be made save with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council. We have accordingly added a sixth sub-clause to this clause.

14. Clause 30 [31].—We have also provided that when the Executive Council rejects the draft of an Ordinance proposed by the Academic Council the Academic Council may appeal to the Chancellor who shall be given power to pass the Ordinance. We think, however, that an ordinance passed by the Chancellor in these circumstances should have effect for six months only.

15. Clause 32 [33].—We have relegated the proviso to this clause to the Statutes so as to give further elasticity in the matter of non-resident students.

16. Clause 35 [36].—We have made it obligatory for the Admission Committee to include at least one Provost and one Warden.

Clause 36 (37).—We have put into the hands of the Academic Council instead of the Executive Council the appointment of the examination committees, and we have provided that these committees shall also be charged with the duties of deciding examination results and preparing such results for publication by the Executive Council.

17. Clause 39 [40].—We think that the power of removal given by this clause should be confined to a power to remove registered graduates from the register.

18. Clause 45.—We think the first of the options allowed by sub-clause (ii) was complicated and unnecessary and that it might lead to inconvenience. We have, therefore, struck it out. We have provided that the services of a Government officer may be lent at his option for a specified period within which it will not be in the power of Government to recall him.

19. Clause 48.—The clause as introduced gave the Governor-General in Council power to relax its provisions. We think that this is inadvisable and we have made the restrictions of this clause absolute in connection with any University incorporated by law in British India, but have provided that the terms of the clause shall have no application to agricultural or other technical institutions whose connection with the University has been sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council. We have adopted the suggestion that Faculties other than the Faculty of Law might find it convenient to assemble at Calcutta. We do not think that these concessions should be allowed in the case of Faculties of Arts and Sciences.

THE SCHEDULE.

20. Clause 2. We have considered a large number of suggestions regarding the constitution of the Court. We do not think we need refer to the changes made in the ex-officio members. In sub-clause (2) we have made it clear that the other fifteen registered graduates are to be non-Muhammadans elected by the non-Muhammadans.

21. Clause 3. We have included the Provosts of the three original Halls among the ex-officio members of the Executive Council. This involves an increase of two members and the increase in the number of Faculties provided in the Bill will add two more. It was urged upon us that the clause as drafted did not necessarily secure sufficient Muhammadan representation on the Executive Council. We have provided that in making the four appointments which are in his hands the Chancellor shall appoint Muhammadans so long as half of the non-European members of the Council are not Muhammadans. The changes we have made in sub-clause (iv) merely give effect to what we consider was the original intention of this sub-clause.

22. Clause 5.—We have reduced the number of Wardens on the Academic Council to one.

23. Clause 11.—On the Muhammadan Advisory Board we have given the Muhammadan Members of the Court more direct representation by reducing the number of members appointed by the Chancellor.

24. Clause 12.—Exception has been taken to the committee of management provided for in this Statute. We have, therefore, removed it.

25. Clause 13.—For the bare majority required for the withdrawal of a degree or a diploma, we have substituted a two-thirds majority.

26. Clause 15.—It was pointed out to us that the number of registered graduates would under this clause as introduced remain for a considerable period insignificant. To obviate this difficulty we have provided that in addition to students who have graduated from the Dacca colleges graduates of three years' standing of other Universities who have studied at the Dacca colleges for a definite period should be admitted to the privileges of registration. We think that in the case of students who have graduated from the Dacca colleges only graduates of three years' standing should be registered. For the purpose of providing sufficient Muhammadan graduates to fill fifteen seats on the Court we propose as a transitory measure to admit Eastern Bengal Muhammadan graduates of other Universities.

27. Clause 17.—Various suggestions were made for the inclusion of officers of the University on the committees of selection appointed in India. We have modified sub-clause (v) so as to provide that one more officer of the University may be appointed by the Chancellor on such committees.

28. Clause 18.—We consider that it should be for the Chancellor to decide whether exceptional circumstances justify direct appointment by the Secretary of State. We have altered sub-clause (ii) so as to give the University somewhat more direct representation on a committee of selection constituted in the United Kingdom, and we have also provided that of the members appointed by the Secretary of State one shall be an Indian Member of the Council of India.

29. Of the further amendments which we have made in the Bill some are merely matters of drafting, others are consequential on the changes which have been referred to in the paragraphs above, and the rest are not, in our opinion, of sufficient importance to justify special mention.

Minute of dissent by the Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Banerjea, and the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Kassimbazar.

We object to the communal principle in the representation of the Muhammadan community which finds so large a place in the Bill. Except in the case of the Benares University which is a denominational institution and which was largely financed by the Hindu community this is a novel feature in our University legislation. We recognise that there is a strong body of feeling among the Muhammadan community for such representation in the University, though there are some distinguished Muhammadan representatives who are opposed to it and that the Calcutta University Commission supports it. The recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission have not been uniformly accepted in this Bill and the Government themselves are of opinion that their recommendations need public criticism and examination. The communal principle must in every case be regarded as a temporary expedient and must be provided with the necessary safeguards. In deference to the Muhammadan community we are prepared to recognise the principle only as a temporary measure, and we further think that the electorate which is to return Muhammadan members should be a mixed one consisting of Hindus and Muhammadans. Such an electorate would ensure the return of representatives with sober and moderate views who would command the confidence of both sections of the community interested in the success of the Dacca University.

We mention below further points on which we are not in agreement with the majority of the Select Committee.

We should like to see a Faculty of Technology definitely mentioned in clause 22.

We are of opinion that there is as great a necessity for a Hindu Advisory Board as there is for an Advisory Board to look after Muhammadan interests, and we should like to see this Board provided for in the Bill.

We object to the constitution of a Selection Board in the United Kingdom.

We think that the power of appointing the first Vice-Chancellor should lie in the hands of the Governor of Bengal in Council and not of the Government of India.

We should like to see more important functions assigned to the Court. We think it should be more than a mere advisory body; it should exercise legislative and financial control through a committee of reference, as recommended by the Calcutta University Commission.

We think the Senior Subordinate Judge at Dacca should be an ex-officio member of the Court.

SURENDRANATH BANERJEA.

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDY.

Minute of dissent by the Hon'ble Nawab Nawab Ali Chaudhuri.

I am of opinion that the addition made to clause 28 does not adequately provide that Muhammadan representation on the major authorities of the University shall be permanently secured.

With reference to clause 48 I am of opinion that a further neutral zone, ten miles in width, should be provided, within which no institutions should be permitted to affiliate themselves with other Universities.

I reserve the right to move amendments on these and other points.

Proceedings of the Indian Legislative Council.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.

(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Wednesday, the 25th February, 1920.

PRESENT:

His Excellency BARON CHELMSFORD, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.C.M.G., G.C.B.E., Viceroy and Governor General, presiding, and 59 Members, of whom 51 were Additional Members.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:— 11-2 A.M.

1. "Is it a fact that in no University is there a chair for the teaching, or any facilities for the study and research, of the indigenous system of medicines? Do Government intend to take any steps in the matter?" Indigenous systems of medicine.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied:—

"So far as the Government of India are aware there is no chair in any of the Indian Universities for the study of, and research in, indigenous medicines. Teaching in these subjects was at one time given under the auspices of the Punjab University. The Ayurvedic classes were subsequently transferred to the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic College and the Unani classes to the Islamia College, Lahore; and it is understood that the University gives a grant for their maintenance. The Government of India do not intend to take any steps in the matter. The question is one for consideration, in the first place, by the Universities. The Calcutta University Commission devoted some care to this subject and, while they considered that it affords a fruitful field of study and investigation, felt it impossible to ask the University of Calcutta to undertake to train students in it."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Local bodies in India.

2. "Will Government be pleased to give a list of Local Bodies in India (1) which are wholly elected, and (2) which, though not wholly elected, consist entirely of non-officials ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied :—

"The list* required by the Hon'ble Member is placed on the table."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Taxation.

3. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following opinion of Lord Selborne's Committee :—

'Whenever the necessity for new taxation arises, as arise it must, the question involved should be threshed out by both parts of the Government in consultation together, and it is especially important that in this matter both parts of the Government should, if possible, be in agreement when the proposals of the Government are laid before the Legislature.'

(b) Has the attention of Government been also drawn to the following observations of the Secretary of State appearing at page 283 of the Official Report of the debates in the House of Commons of Wednesday, 3rd December, 1919 :—

Mr. Montagu : 'The situation is really this. So far as I understand the Provincial Government in India now has practically no powers of taxation. The powers of taxation are absolutely a new thing. To my mind taxation ought not to be imposed on the provinces. I hope the contingency will never arise except when the whole Government, after consideration of the resources at its disposal, agrees to go to the Legislature and ask for taxation, and I take it all Budget proposals will be discussed in common between all the parties concerned.'

(c) Do Government propose to give effect to these opinions, and will provision as indicated therein be made in the rules to be made under the Government of India Act ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

"(a) Yes.

(b) Yes. The Government of India take these remarks to mean that the future Provincial taxation should be imposed only on the initiative of the whole Local Government and with the concurrence of the local Legislature.

(c) It is proposed that the rules regarding the budget and taxation should be framed in accordance with the recommendations of the Joint Committee."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Lord Hardinge's Post-war Reforms.

4. "(a) Is there any despatch of Lord Hardinge containing proposals for post-war reforms which he prepared and submitted to the Secretary of State after full consultation with the heads of the various Local Governments ?

(b) If so, will Government lay it on the table ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The answer is in the negative."

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

5. "Do Government propose to include in the rules to be framed under the Government of India Act, rules for the appointment of Standing Committees of the Legislative bodies, their composition and regulations governing their procedure?" Standing Committees of Legislative bodies.

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied:—

"The Hon'ble Member's attention is drawn to paragraph 10 of the Joint Committee's Report which runs as follows—

'The Committee think that it may often greatly assist the political education of India if standing committees of the legislative bodies are attached to certain departments of Government, but they only express this opinion on the understanding that the appointment of such committees, their composition, and the regulations which govern their procedure, shall be matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General or of the Governor, as the case may be.'

In view of this strong expression of opinion the Government of India do not propose that the Governor General's or Governor's discretion should be fettered by rules under the Act."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

6. "Are Government prepared to do away with the system of confidential reports so far as it is applicable to gazetted officers?" Abolition of confidential reports on Gazetted officers.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"The Government of India do not contemplate any change of the existing practice in this matter."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

7. "(a) Is it a fact that for the purpose of formulating the franchise proposals to be submitted to the Franchise Committee, the Government of Bombay had prepared statistics showing the number of voters on the basis of an annual income of Rs. 250? Voters in the Bombay Presidency.

(b) Will Government be pleased to say what was the number of voters in the Bombay Presidency on that calculation, and why ultimately the idea of including such voters was given up?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied:—

"(a) Yes.

(b) The number of persons in the Bombay Presidency (excluding Bombay and Karachi cities, which were not included in the calculations) who were estimated to have an annual income of Rs. 250 or over was 170,610. As regards the reason why the Franchise Committee did not include receipt of an annual income of this amount in their proposals for the franchise, the Hon'ble Member is referred to paragraph 9 of their report, in which it is stated that the proposals of the Committee were based on the possession of property as evidenced by the payment of land-revenue, rent or local rates in rural areas, and of municipal rates in urban areas and of income-tax generally. It is presumed that the Committee considered that it would not be possible to make annual income not so evidenced the basis of a satisfactory electoral roll."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

8. "What action have Government so far taken on the report of the expert employed to study the problem of reviving the trade in natural indigo and to devise means of standardising the natural product in a form which would enable it to compete with the German synthetic dye?" Steps taken to revive the trade in indigo.

[Sir Claude Hill; Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Sir William Marris.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"I lay* on the table the information asked for by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

9. "(a) When was the order directing the removal of Kazi Abdul Ghaffar from the Bengal Presidency passed under the Defence of India Rules?

(b) Is it a fact that the said order has not yet been withdrawn, and that the Kazi has petitioned the Government of Bengal that the general amnesty be extended to him?

(c) Do Government propose to call for the papers and consider his case?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"(a) On the 14th September, 1918.

(b) Yes.

(c) His Excellency the Governor General has considered the case and has decided that it would not at present be consistent with the public safety to cancel the order."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

10. "(a) What is the personnel of the informal Advisory Committee recently appointed by Government to examine the draft rules, regulations and standing orders under the new Government of India Act?

(b) Is Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea included as a member of that Committee? If not, why not?

(c) Are any members of the Moderate or the Congress Deputations that were sent to England in connection with the reforms, included as members of that Committee? If not, why not?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied:—

"(a) The members of the Committee are—

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma,
,, ,, Mr. Srinivasa Sastri,
,, ,, Sir Dinshaw Wacha,
,, ,, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea,
,, ,, Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru,
,, ,, Sardar Bahadur Sardar Sundar Singh, Majithia,
,, ,, Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha,
,, ,, Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer,
,, ,, Rajah of Mahmudabad,
,, ,, Mr. W. E. Crum,
,, ,, Mr. N. F. Paton.

(c) It is understood that Messrs. Sastri, Banerjea and Sapru were members of a deputation which visited England in connection with the reforms."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

"Are any members of the Congress Deputation which were sent to England in connection with the Reforms included as members of the Committee?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied:—

"I am not aware of the exact personnel of the Congress Deputation."

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir Claude Hill; Sir William Marris; Mr. Shafi.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

Tanning materials yielded by the forests in India.

11. "What action have Government taken on the report of the expert employed on an investigation of the tanning materials yielded by various forests in India with a view to preparing tanning extracts for trial on a commercial basis?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"The expert employed by the Government of India on investigating the tanning materials yielded by Indian forests has published several preliminary reports. His general survey of Indian tanstuffs was, however, interrupted during the war by the more urgent investigation of tanstuffs which could be readily adopted as a substitute for tarwad, the deficiency of which was jeopardising the supply of half-tanned leather to the War Office. The expert is now continuing his general survey of indigenous tanstuffs, and the results of his investigations will be made available to the public, from time to time, as the survey of each local area is completed."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

Allotment of seats to the rural population of Broach and Kaira.

12. "(a) Will Government state what action they have taken or propose to take in regard to the following recommendation of Lord Selborne's Committee:—

'The Committee regard the number of seats allotted to the rural population as distinct from the urban as disproportionately low and consider that it should receive a larger share of representation.'

(b) Is it a fact that the seats allotted to the rural population of the Districts of Broach and Kaira in the Bombay Presidency compare very unfavourably with those allotted to the rural population of the Ahmedabad and Panch Mahals Districts?

(c) Do Government propose to call for the report of the Government of Bombay on this question?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied:—

"(a) It is proposed to allot from 5 to 7 additional seats to rural constituencies in the provinces of Madras, Bengal, and the United Provinces where the disparity in favour of urban areas was conspicuous.

(b) The Hon'ble Member is referred to the statistics of population and voting strength contained in paragraph E of Appendix II to the report of the Franchise Committee. The Government of India do not consider that the disparity between the two pairs of districts is greater than must inevitably occur in any practical scheme of distribution of seats.

(c) The answer is in the negative."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

Municipal elections.

13. "(a) Is it a fact that in 1918, a resolution recommending the introduction of the system of proportional representation in elections for select municipal areas was discussed in the Bombay Legislative Council?

(b) If so, what has been the outcome of that discussion?

(c) Do the Government of India propose to call upon Local Governments and Administrations to apply the said system by way of experiment in elections for select local bodies?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied:—

"The resolution referred to by the Hon'ble Member was discussed in the Bombay Legislative Council in 1918, but was subsequently withdrawn. The Hon'ble Member's attention is invited to paragraph 5 of the Resolution of the Government of India on Local Self-Government, dated the 16th May 1918, which lays down the system of representation which the Government of India consider suitable for introduction in local bodies. The Government of India do not propose to call upon Local Governments and Administrations to introduce any system of proportional representation by way of experiment in elections for select local bodies."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Repeal of Press Act.

14. "Do Government propose to repeal the Press Act as urged by the Indian National Congress, or at any rate to amend it on the lines outlined by Sir P. S Sivaswamy Aiyer, in his speech as president of the Second All-India Moderate Conference?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"Government do not propose to repeal the Press Act, but they will examine the suggestions for its amendment made by Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Appropriation of revenue for military purposes.

15. "Under the new Government of India Act, will it be open to the Legislative Assembly to discuss as the Legislative Council now does, at the time when the annual statement is under consideration, the proposals of the Governor General in Council for the appropriation of revenue for military purposes?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member is referred to the provision of section 25 (3) sub-section (5) of the Government of India Act, 1919, under which proposals for the appropriation of revenue relating to expenditure classified as 'defence' expenditure shall not be open to discussion in the Indian legislature at the time when the annual statement is under consideration, unless the Governor General otherwise directs."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Votes for women in the Bombay Presidency.

16. "(a) Is it a fact that in the city of Bombay women have been exercising Municipal franchise for some years, and that recently the Bombay Legislative Council has adopted a resolution recommending that women should be eligible for membership of the Bombay Corporation?

(b) Do Government propose to grant the vote to the women of the Bombay Presidency in the new constitution? If not, why not?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied :—

"(a) There is nothing in the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, which expressly debars women in that city from voting at municipal elections. The Government of India believe that the statement made by the Hon'ble Member himself before the Joint Select Committee on the Government of India Bill that women in the Bombay Presidency have been exercising the franchise for many years past is correct. A resolution recommending to the Governor in Council that steps be taken to remove the disqualification in the Act above mentioned, which prevents a female from being elected or appointed as a Councillor of the Corporation, was moved on the 6th November 1918 in the Legislative Council of the Governor of Bombay and was adopted by a majority of votes.

(b) The Hon'ble Member is referred to the report of the Joint Select Committee on clause 7 of the Government of India Bill. It is proposed that the rules should deal with the question of woman suffrage in accordance with the recommendations of the Joint Committee."

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris; Sir William Vincent; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir George Barnes; Mr. W. M. Hailey.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Reservation of seats for non-Brahmans and Mahrattas.

17. "(a) Have the Government of Madras invited the Brahmans and the non-Brahmans to settle the question of separate representation for the latter in the Legislative Council by means of the reservation of seats by negotiation amongst themselves, and if so, with what result?

(b) Have the Government of Bombay taken similar action on the question of the treatment to be accorded to the Mahrattas and the allied communities in the Bombay Presidency, and if so, with what result?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The Hon'ble Member is referred to the Communiqué recently issued by the Government of Madras. As stated in this, since no agreement could be reached between the Brahmans and non-Brahmans as regards the separate representation of the latter by means of the reservation of seats, the Government of India, at the request of the Government of Madras, have appointed Lord Meston as arbitrator.

(b) It is understood that negotiations are in progress between the Mahrattas and the non-Mahrattas, but that they have not yet reached a stage at which the prospects of an agreement being arrived at can be forecasted."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

The Anarchical and Revolutionary Crimes Act.

18. "Do Government propose to take immediate steps to repeal the Rowlatt Act?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The answer is in the negative."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde asked :—

Postal delivery of certain newspapers in Delhi.

19. "(a) Is it a fact that the Delhi post offices are under the administrative control of the Punjab Government?

(b) Is it a fact that any prohibition order issued by the Punjab Government in regard to newspapers is regarded by the Delhi post offices as debarring them from serving the papers concerned in the city and province of Delhi with the consequence that (1) the Independent of Allahabad, (2) the Amrita Bazar Patrika of Calcutta, (3) the Hamdam of Lucknow, (4) the Congress of Delhi itself, etc., cannot be delivered in Delhi through the agency of the post office though these papers are not prohibited by the Delhi Government itself?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

"(a) The post offices in Delhi Province are under the administrative control of the Postmaster-General, Punjab and North-West Frontier Circle. They are not under the Punjab Government.

The answer to (b) is yes. The newspapers proscribed by the Punjab Government are intercepted by the post offices in the Delhi Province under the authority of the Chief Commissioner, Delhi. Of the papers named by the Hon'ble Member the orders relating to the interception of the Amrita Bazar Patrika and the Hamdam of Lucknow have since been withdrawn."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde asked :—

Transmission of gold and silver coin by railways in India.

20. "(a) What are the circumstances which necessitated the prohibition of the transmission of gold and silver coin by railways in India?

(b) How long will the said prohibition remain in force?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

"(a) The restrictions on the transmission of specie by railways in India were necessitated by the difficulties of the currency position.

[Mr. W. M. Hailey; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Sir Claude Hill; Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer; Sir William Vincent; Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

(b) The restrictions on the movement of gold coin and bullion were removed in September last. As regards silver bullion, permits for transport by rail are now being issued in all cases, but the Government of India are not at present in a position to make any statement regarding the removal of restrictions on the movement of silver coin."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde asked:—

Pasture lands.

21. "Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) Whether the Governor General in Council received, on or about 24th March 1916, a memorial and a telegram of that date from Mr. Hansanand Varma of Calcutta praying for setting apart for exclusive purposes of grazing certain plots of pasture lands in every place available in every village, taluka and district in British India?

(b) Did Government forward the said memorial and telegram to the Department of Agriculture?

(c) If the answer to (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the steps taken to give effect to the prayer in the memorial and the telegram?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"(a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The matter was considered in the Department of Revenue and Agriculture.

(c) No action has been taken by the Government of India, as the question is one for disposal by Local Governments."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer asked:—

Enhancement of salaries of public servants.

22. "What arrangements have been and are proposed to be made regarding the enhancement of the salaries of public servants in response to the increased cost of living?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"Temporary relief has been given in the shape of war allowances to the lower paid Government servants in all provinces. As a result of the recommendations made by the Public Services Commission the revision of pay, both of the Imperial and of the Provincial Services, has been taken up, and in many cases new rates of pay have already been sanctioned. The permanent revision of the salaries of subordinate services and of Secretariat establishments is now, it is understood, under consideration by Local Governments, and provision to a considerable amount has been made in the provincial budgets for this purpose. In dealing with the question of revision of pay of Government servants account has been taken in all cases of the increased cost of living."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

23. "(a) What is the number and the nature of the artificial obstacles created by the Irrigation Department in the way of the free flow of the waters of the Ganges from Hardwar to the Bay of Bengal?

(b) Are Government aware of the prevalence of the opinion that these obstacles seriously offend Hindu religious ideas, and prejudice the economic and sanitary welfare of the people of the United Provinces and the Provinces of Bengal and Bihar?

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi; Sir Claude Hill.]

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether and when it is proposed to remove the obstacles or to minimise their harmful effects?

(d) Will Government lay on the table a copy of the pronouncement of Lord Hardinge regarding the removal of obstacles at Narora and all papers connected with this question?

(e) Has any effect been given to this pronouncement? If not, is it intended to take any steps in this matter, and, if so, what?

(f) Has it, among other things, been suggested as a remedial measure that an opening of at least 30 feet should be left in the Ganges at Hardwar, and that a similar opening should be made at Narora, with a view to provide a sufficient and an unobstructed flow of the natural stream for bathing and other religious purposes, and do Government propose to give effect to such suggestions? If so, when?

(g) If the answer to the last half of (f) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state how much water flows out of the existing openings at Hardwar and at Narora when the river is at its lowest, and whether such water is sufficient for the purposes mentioned above?

(h) If the water be not sufficient for the above purposes, what steps are proposed to be taken to meet these requirements?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"(a) Two weirs have been constructed to divert the water of the Ganges into canals. The first is the new weir at Hardwar which forms part of the headworks of the Ganges Canal. The second is the Narora weir near Rajghat.

(b) The Government of India have on two occasions considered representations made by the Hindu community to the effect that the flow of the Ganges should not be controlled. On the first occasion, in 1914, Sir James Meston met a representative gathering of Hindus at Hardwar, and in consultation with them drew up proposals which were accepted as fully meeting their objections. Before these proposals could be carried into effect, a further representation was made in 1916 by the All-India Hindu Sabha. Sir James Meston again held a conference at Hardwar, and this conference agreed to certain proposals involving the provision of a gap in the weir at Hardwar to pass a minimum discharge of 400 cusecs. This gap has since been provided.

At Narora a notch was constructed in February 1916. A continuous flow of water passes through this notch and the continuous flow of the Ganges from Hardwar to the sea is thus ensured.

The Government of India believe that any objection the Hindu community may have had to these weirs has now been removed. They have no reason to believe that the existence of these works can in any way prejudice the economic and sanitary welfare of the people of the United Provinces or of the Provinces of Bengal and Bihar.

(c) Since there are now no obstacles such as are described in (b) of the question, there are no proposals for their removal.

(d) and (e). The Government of India have no record of any order issued by Lord Hardinge regarding the removal of obstacles at Narora, but they understand that it was at his suggestion that the notch already referred to was constructed in 1916.

(f) and (g). It was suggested by the All-India Hindu Sabha in 1916 that an opening of at least 30 ft. should be left in the weir at Hardwar and that a similar opening should be provided in the weir at Narora. At Hardwar an opening, as suggested, has been provided, the bottom of the opening being at the bed level of the river. As already stated the minimum discharge through that opening is 400 cusecs.

The minimum discharge through the notch at Narora is not available, but a continuous discharge is ensured. The width of the notch is 2 ft. and the estimated discharge when water is level with the top of the gates of the weir is 49 cusecs. It is estimated that, if an opening similar to that provided at Hardwar be provided at Narora, the annual loss involved would be Rs. 24½ lakhs, of which practically the whole would fall directly upon the ryot. The construction of such an opening further involves serious engineering difficulties and might necessitate the re-construction of the whole weir. The Government of India do not, in the circumstances, consider that they would be justified in acceding to the suggestion."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

House allowance for Provincial Service Officers.

24. "Has any scheme been sanctioned or formulated for including the Provincial Service officers in the scope of the Calcutta, Bombay and Rangoon house-allowance schemes, as recommended by the Public Services Commission in paragraph 69 of their Report ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

"The Calcutta, Bombay and Rangoon house allowance schemes were not framed with reference to the needs of Provincial Service officers, but a scheme of local allowances for Provincial Service officers specially devised to meet their needs was sanctioned for Rangoon in 1916, and it is understood that a similar scheme is under preparation in Bombay. It has not been considered necessary to extend the principle to Provincial Service officers serving in Calcutta."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

The gross provincial revenue and expenditure.

25. "What is the amount of difference between the gross provincial revenue and the gross provincial expenditure of each of the major provinces of India in each of the six years from 1912-13 to 1918-19 ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

"A statement* giving the figures asked for is laid on the table. The figures for provincial revenue include assignments to the provinces from Imperial revenues."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

The Provincial Educational Service.

26. "(a) With reference to the Communiqué of the Government of India, dated the 26th November, 1919, relating to the re-organisation of the Provincial Educational Service, will Government state—

(i) the date from which the orders of the Secretary of State on the subject will be given effect to ;

(ii) whether the Secretary of State has sanctioned any incremental scale of pay on the lines of the recommendations of the Public Services Commission in place of the graded system which obtains at present ;

(iii) if the answer to (ii) be in the affirmative, the details of the scale sanctioned ?

(b) Is it in contemplation to promote the more deserving among the members of the Provincial Educational Service to the Indian Educational Service ?

(c) If the answer to (b) be in the affirmative, will Government state to what extent and from when such promotions will be made ?"

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Shafi; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda; Sir Claude Hill.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied:—

"(a) (i) The date from which the orders of the Secretary of State will take effect is primarily a matter for decision by Local Governments.

(ii) and (iii) The Secretary of State has not sanctioned any such incremental scale. It will be open to the Local Governments to arrange the grades or scales of the Provincial Educational Service within the limits mentioned in the Communiqué.

(b) It is under contemplation to promote certain posts together with their incumbents from the Provincial to the Indian Educational Service.

(c) The Government are not as yet in a position to make a statement with reference to this part of the Hon'ble Member's question."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda asked:—

27. "(a) Is the following table, showing the composition of the existing scientific services, correct:— Recruitment of Indians in various services.

Name of the service.	Officers (Imperial grade).		Average pay of Europeans.	Indians.	Europeans.	Indians.
			Rs.	Rs.
Botanical Survey	2	0	1,000	0
Geological Survey	16	0	1,010	0
Zoological Survey	3	1	970	700
Agricultural Service	38	5	1,000	460
Forest Service	9	1	1,040	680
Medical and Bacteriological Service (on Civil Employment).	24	5	1,220	520
Indian Munitions Board	11	1	780	300
Meteorological Department	10	2	970	770
Veterinary Department (Civil)	9	0	1,100	...
Educational Service	34	3	910	490
Indian Trigonometrical Survey	46	0	...	...

(b) Is it a fact that the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea, in his evidence before the Welby Commission in 1897, called attention to the absence of Indians from the scientific services? Was any action taken on that evidence?

(c) Is the practical exclusion of Indians from the above services due to lack of qualified men or a matter of policy?

(d) Is it a fact that the Provincial Service of the Indian Trigonometrical Survey consists of 112 officers, nearly 80 per cent. of which are Europeans and Anglo-Indians without any academic distinction?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"(a) The table given in the question contains many inaccuracies. I am unable to furnish a correct one because the method on which the Hon'ble Member wishes it to be compiled is not clear, but if he will explain exactly what he wants I shall be happy to give him any information required.

(b) The reply to the first question is in the affirmative. The Welby Commission presumably gave due weight to the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea's evidence.

(c) The comparatively small number of Indians in the services specified by the Hon'ble Member is due generally, though not in all cases, to the lack of qualified candidates. It is proposed in future largely to increase the Indian element in the scientific services generally.

(d) The Hon'ble Member presumably refers to the Provincial Service of the Survey of India Department. This service comprises 112 officers, of whom rather less than 75 per cent. are Europeans or Anglo-Indians.

As regards academic qualifications the Hon'ble Member's attention is invited to paragraph 32(3) of the Survey of India Hand-book, which prescribes that all applicants for admission to the Provincial Service must have passed the B.A. or B.Sc. examination of an Indian University or the Final or High Standard examination under the Code Regulations of European schools, or possess the School Leaving Certificate of any Province or one of the Entrance examination certificates of any University in the United Kingdom."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda asked :—

Political prisoners, detenus, internees and deportees.

28. "(a) What is the number of political prisoners, detenus, internees and deportees province by province, regarding whom effect has been given to the Royal Proclamation about amnesty?

(b) What is the number of such persons in each province who have not been granted any benefit under the said proclamation?

(c) Do Government intend to give relief to them and if so w[illegible]

(d) Do Government propose to issue or suggest to Local Governments the issue of instructions to the Criminal Investigation Department to try as far as possible to give any reasonable active assistance and in any case to abstain from causing any difficulties to the political prisoners, detenus, deportees and internees who have now been released or about to be released; in obtaining means of earning a livelihood?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"(a) and (b). A * statement is laid on the table.

(c) As indicated in the statement, certain cases remain over for consideration. In other cases His Excellency the Viceroy has not found it possible to extend the indulgence of clemency because the release of the persons concerned would not, in his opinion, be compatible at present with the public safety.

(d) Government do not propose to issue instructions of the nature contemplated to Local Governments and Administrations. They have no doubt that officers of the Criminal Investigation Department will abstain from any action likely to prevent those released from earning an honest living; and as a matter of fact it is understood that Local Governments and their officers, including those employed in the Criminal Investigation Department, have in the past done much to help such persons."

System of recruitment for the various Provincial Services in the North-West Frontier Province.

29. "(a) Will Government be pleased to state the system of recruitment for the various Provincial Services in the North-West Frontier Province, specifying whether there is any educational standard fixed as a minimum qualification for entry into any of them, and if so, what it is in each?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing—

(i) the number of appointments held by the various communities in the said services on the 1st of July, 1908, when Sir George Roos-Keppel assumed charge of the province and on the 1st July, 1919, when he was about to retire, and

(ii) the strength and the names of the present permanent cadre, detailing the educational qualifications of each of them?"

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.]

The Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs replied:—

"(a) (i) Executive.

Extra Assistant Commissioners (including Munsiffs) are appointed ordinarily by selection and no minimum educational standard is fixed.

(ii) Educational.

The Educational Service consists of officers promoted from the subordinate service and an Inspectress selected from the Punjab. No minimum educational standard is fixed.

(iii) Police.

Deputy Superintendents of Police are appointed either by promotion from Inspectors or direct recruitment or by selection from other departments of Government. They must all possess a minimum educational qualification equivalent to the Punjab University Matriculation, but the Chief Commissioner may dispense with a knowledge of English.

(iv) Medical Service.

There is no definite system of recruitment for the Provincial Medical Service but Assistant Surgeons must obtain the M. B. and B. S. degrees.

(v) The Irrigation.

Forest and Excise Departments obtain their officers on loan from the Punjab cadre.

(b) In view of the grave pre-occupations of the authorities in the North-West Frontier Province at the present time the Government of India are not prepared to order the collection and compilation of the information asked for, which would involve the expenditure of much time and labour."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked:—

30. "(a) What was the total cost of the administration of the districts now constituting the North-West Frontier Province when it formed part of the Punjab? Cost of the administration of the North-West Frontier Province.

(b) Will Government be pleased to state (i) the total estimated additional cost of the administration of the said province at the time of its creation, and (ii) the total amount of the present expenditure showing the net increase or decrease in the latter over the original additional estimate?"

The Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs replied:—

"(a) The total cost of the administration of the districts now constituting the North-West Frontier Province, just before they were separated from the Punjab was Rs. 64,15,417 per annum.

(b) (i) At the time of its creation the total additional cost of the administration of the province was estimated at Rs. 3,68,407 per annum. The actual additional cost to Government of the formation of the province was estimated at Rs. 3,55,507 as there was a decrease in the cost of headquarter offices of the Punjab Government.

(ii) The total expenditure for the year 1918-1919 was Rs. 1,05,62,476, being an excess of Rs. 37,78,652 over the original estimate of the cost of the administration of the North-West Frontier Province."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked:—

31. "(a) What was the total number of political offenders in detention or jail on the date of the issue of His Majesty the King-Emperor's Proclamation in each province, including the Andamans? Release of political offenders.

[Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Sir William Vincent; Sir George Barnes; Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

(b) How many of these have been released in each province in pursuance of the terms of the said Proclamation?

(c) If all political offenders have not yet been released, will Government be pleased to state the reason for not extending to them the benefit of the Royal clemency?

(d) Do Government propose to take into further consideration the cases of those not yet released? If not, why not?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

" (a), (b), (c) and (d).—The Hon'ble Member is referred to the reply given to the Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked:—

Number of officers Indian, European and Anglo-Indian, employed in the office of the Post-master-General of Bihar and Orissa.

32. "(a) What is the total number of officers—Indian, European and Anglo-Indian—in the office of the Postmaster-General of Bihar and Orissa, and also in the Postal department of the province, in the various grades, drawing a salary of not less than Rs. 25 per mensem?

(b) How many and what proportion of the Indian employees are natives of Bihar and Orissa or domiciled therein?

(c) What is the number of the natives of Bihar and Orissa serving in the Postal Department outside their own province?

(d) Do Government propose to take any steps to recruit more largely from amongst persons who are natives of the province of Bihar and Orissa or domiciled therein? If not, will Government be pleased to state their reasons therefor?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

" (a) Out of 61 officials on Rs. 30 and above attached to the office of the Postmaster-General, Bihar and Orissa, 3 are Europeans or Anglo-Indians, 35 are Indians belonging to other provinces and the remaining 23 are natives of the province or domiciled therein, while out of a total number of 1,039 officials on Rs. 25 and above serving in Post offices in the Bihar and Orissa Circle, 9 are Europeans or Anglo-Indians, 260 are Indians belonging to other provinces, and 770 are natives of the province or domiciled therein.

(b) 793 persons or more than two-thirds of the employees are natives of the province or domiciled therein.

(c) About 450 natives of Bihar and Orissa are serving in the Post Office and Railway Mail Service in other provinces.

(d) There is already a standing order to the effect that candidates for the Post Office in the Bihar and Orissa Circle should be recruited, as far as possible, from amongst natives of the province or from amongst persons permanently domiciled therein."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked:—

Expenditure in connection with the administration of civil and criminal justice.

33. "Will Government lay on the table a statement showing the income, the expenditure, and the net loss or gain for the last five years (1914—1919) in the various provinces in connection with the administration of civil and criminal justice?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied:—

"A statement* is laid on the table showing in round thousands the total figures of receipts and expenditure under the three principal heads relating to the administration of Civil and Criminal Justice, namely, the receipts from the sale of Court-fee Stamps and the receipts and expenditure under 'Law and Justice,' including Jails. These figures, however, when taken by themselves, are misleading and give no clear indication whether the administration of Civil and Criminal Justice is a source of profit or of loss to Government. To arrive at a correct estimate of profit or loss it would be necessary to include various items which are sufficiently large materially to affect the result. The nature of these items is explained as regards the Civil Courts in the Government of India's Resolution No. 101, dated the 9th January 1890, a * copy of which is also laid on the table. The Hon'ble Member will observe from the Resolution that the compilation of even an approximately accurate statement is a matter which would involve a very large expenditure of time and labour."

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. W. M. Hailey; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Mr. Shafi.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked:—

34. "(a) Will Government lay on the table a statement showing the state of primary education in the various provinces since the issue of the Government of India's Resolution, dated 21st February, 1913, in which it was stated 'It is the desire and hope of the Government of India to see in the not distant future some 91,000 primary public schools added to the 100,000 which already exist for boys and to double the 4½ millions who now receive instruction in them?' Primary education.

(b) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the Resolution of the Bihar and Orissa Government, dated the 7th January, 1920, on the report on education in that province for the year 1918-1919, and particularly to the following remarks of the Lieutenant Governor in Council:—

'Although there was a very considerable increase in the funds placed at the disposal of local bodies for primary education, the number of schools fell from 25,827 to 25,652 and the number of pupils from 711,715 to 695, 256. * * * The constant failure to record adequate progress in elementary education in spite of an increase in expenditure of over 60 per cent. since the province was founded continues to cause the Lieutenant-Governor in Council much concern?'

(c) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a leading article headed 'Education in the local Council' in the Searchlight of Patna, dated 23rd October 1919, in which it is stated that since the province was constituted there has been till now a decrease of 3·5 per cent in the number of students in the primary schools? If so, is that statement of the Searchlight correct?

(d) In what other provinces, if any, has there been an actual decrease in the number of schools or scholars? If in no other except Bihar and Orissa, do Government propose to take steps to examine for themselves the question of the decline of primary education in that province? If not, why not?"

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi replied:—

(a) "The statement † is laid on the table. It is necessary to explain that, with effect from 1914-15, the figures for a number of Indian States, which it had been the practice previously to include along with the figures for British India, were omitted. The number of all institutions and pupils shown were thereby reduced by approximately 5,000 and 330,000, respectively. This change in the method of collecting statistics affected Bombay more seriously than any other province, with the result that that presidency shows an apparent decline in primary schools and pupils, whereas in reality there has been an approximate increase of 1,900 schools and 103,000 pupils.

(b) Yes.

(c) The attention of the Government has not been drawn to the leading article in question. If the leading article makes the statement that there has been from the time of the constitution of that province up till now a decrease of 3·5 per cent. in the number of pupils in primary schools, then it is misinformed. There has, on the contrary, been an increase of 7·7 per cent. in such schools over and above the figures for 1911-12.

(d) It is not clear whether the Hon'ble Member's question has reference to the year 1918-19 or to some period of years. If the former, the facts are that the number of primary schools did, during that year, decrease in Burma

* Not included in these Proceedings.
† Vide Appendix.

[Mr. Shafi; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Sir William Vincent.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920]

and Bihar and Orissa, but increased in every other province, the total net increase for India being 2,396. There was also in that year a considerable decrease in the number of primary school pupils in Bengal, substantial decreases in Burma, Bihar and Orissa, the Central Provinces and Berar and Assam and a very small decrease in Madras. There was a large increase in Bombay, a substantial increase in the United Provinces and small increases in the Punjab, the North-West Frontier Province and other minor Administrations, giving a total net increase of 8,741 pupils for all India. If the Hon'ble Member's question refers to figures over a longer period, the statement laid on the table will furnish him with the necessary information."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked :—

Publicity Boards.

35. " (a) Is it a fact that certain Local Governments and Administrations have recently organized Publicity Boards? If so, which are the Provinces now possessing such Boards?

(b) Have these Boards been established as the result of any suggestion or direction conveyed by either the Secretary of State for India or the Government of India? If so, do Government propose to lay on the table a copy of the said communication? If not, why not?

(c) If no such communication was issued, will Government be pleased to state the reason for the establishment of these Boards and the objects they are intended to serve?

(d) Will Government lay on the table a statement showing the name or names of the officer or officers forming the staff of these Boards in each of the provinces, with their emoluments and all other expenses incidental thereto?

(e) Is it a fact that all or some of these Boards issue periodicals? If so, will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of each of them and a statement showing, for each province, the annual cost of issuing such periodicals?

(f) What is the total annual cost, actual or estimated, of the maintenance of these Boards?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"(a) Yes. Publicity Boards exist in Madras, the United Provinces and the Punjab, and there are publicity organizations in certain other provinces.

(b) Publicity Boards were originally established in consequence of the recommendation of the Delhi Conference in 1918.

(c) Originally war organizations, they have been found to possess considerable utility as sources of public information. They were first established as a result of the recommendation by the Government of India, but their continuance has been a result of local experience of their educational utility. Government do not propose to lay upon the table the correspondence connected with their establishment, but they are prepared to make a statement regarding the objects and methods of publicity work. This will be laid on the table at some later date when there has been time to compile the necessary information.

(d) A statement * is laid upon the table giving the particulars asked for by the Hon'ble Member so far as they are now available to the Government of India. Further details will be placed at his disposal when they have been received from the Local Governments concerned.

(e) Two Provincial Boards, those of the United Provinces and the Punjab, issue periodicals. A copy * of each is laid on the table.

(f) The Hon'ble Member is referred to the statements laid on the table."

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha; Sir William Vincent; Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar; Sir Claude Hill; Sir George Barnes.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha asked:—

Articles in connection with the Royal Proclamation in the Statesman.

"36. (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to three editorial articles, about the recent Royal Proclamation, which appeared in the Statesman of Calcutta in its issues of 27th, 30th, and 31st December last?

(b) Is it a fact, as suggested in these articles, that the amnesty granted in the Royal Proclamation was forced on the Government of India by Mr. Montagu, or that it was dictated from London without the Government of India having been consulted about the matter?

(c) Have Government taken any steps by means of the issue of a communiqué or otherwise to remove any misapprehension that may possibly exist in the public mind caused by the publication of the Statesman's articles in question? If not, will they make a statement in the Council which may remove any such misapprehension? If not, why not?"

"(a) Government have seen the articles referred to.

(b) The message of Royal clemency was proclaimed after consultation with the Government of India, and the general principle involved had their full approval.

(c) Government do no believe that any real misapprehension was caused by the articles in question. The answer given to the present question renders any further action in this matter unnecessary."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar asked:—

Agriculturalists and agricultural labourers in India.

37. "(a) Will Government be pleased to furnish information as to what percentage of the Indian population resort to agriculture and agricultural labour?

(b) What percentage of the agricultural labourers receive their wages in kind and what percentage in cash?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"(a) The Hon'ble Member is referred to paragraph 529 of the Census Report of 1911 in which it is stated that 72 per cent. of the total population of India are engaged in pasture and agriculture.

(b) The information is not available."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar asked:—

Salt factories.

38. "(a) Is it a fact that many people were induced by the Government of Madras, through the Board of Revenue, to open salt factories during the last year and the year before last?

(b) Is it a fact that the foreign competition by importation of salt is bringing ruin on the native industry and also great loss to the Government revenue?

(c) Are Government prepared to impose a duty on the foreign salt imported so that there will not be any discouragement to the native industry?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"(a) In 1917 the Government of India asked the Madras Government to take steps to increase the output of salt in view of the danger of a shortage of imported salt. The Madras Government reported in 1919 that the area of land set apart for salt manufacture had risen from 12,000 to 20,000 acres, and the output of salt was estimated at 200 lakhs of maunds per year as compared with 107 lakhs in pre-war years.

[Sir George Barnes; Major Malik Sir Umar Hayat Khan; The Commander-in-Chief; Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto; Sir Claude Hill.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

(b) The Madras salt as manufactured at present is impure, and is not popular in Calcutta, which affords its chief market outside the Presidency. The Government of India have asked the Secretary of State to obtain a technical expert to advise the Madras Government on measures for improving the quality of salt manufactured from sea brine and for producing the grade which is in demand in the Calcutta and other outside markets. The present price of imported salt in Calcutta (excluding duty) is Rs. 1-13-0 per maund. Its price before the war was 11 annas per maund; but, so far as is known, there is no prospect of a material fall in the price of imported salt in the near future. The cost of production of Madras bay salt is never more than 3 annas per maund, the railway freight to Calcutta is 8 annas per maund. This leaves a margin of Rs. 1-2-0 for bagging, intermediate expenses, and for the cost of crushing. The import of foreign salt in 1913-14 was 607,000 tons. In 1917-18 it was 337,000 tons, and in 1918-19 (the first 8 months) it was 255,000 tons (=382,000 tons for the whole year). It does not appear therefore to be a fact that foreign competition is bringing ruin on the native industry.

(c) Foreign salt already pays customs duty on import at the rate at which the excise duty is for the time being leviable on salt manufactured in the place where the import takes place."

The Hon'ble Major Malik Sir Umar Hayat Khan asked :—

Increase in present rates of pay and allowances of Indian ranks.

39. "In view of the present increased cost of living, do Government propose to make any increase in the present rates of—

(a) Pay of Indian ranks?
(b) Pensions of Indian ranks?
(c) Wound and injury pensions of Indian ranks?
(d) Family pensions of Indian ranks and followers?"

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"(a) The question of any permanent increase required in the pay of Indian ranks is under consideration by the Army in India Committee in connection with the re-organization of the Indian Army. Meanwhile, the extra six-monthly bonus of Rs. 60 and Rs. 30 for Indian officers and Rs. 24 for other ranks, which was sanctioned temporarily as a war measure and would have been withdrawn on the termination of the war, is being continued. In addition all Indian troops serving out of India or Burma have been granted a special monthly expatriation allowance in lieu of the old foreign service batta, the allowance for a sepoy being Rs. 5 compared with Rs. 1-8-0 the batta rate.

(b), (c) and (d). The Government of India are engaged in telegraphic correspondence with the Secretary of State on these points."

The Hon'ble Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto asked :—

The Sukkur Barrage.

40. "(a) Is it a fact that no improvements in irrigation are made in Sind?

(b) Are Government aware that considerable loss and damage have been caused to numerous landholders in Sind as a result of the delay in constructing the Sukkur Barrage?

(c) When do Government propose to take the project in hand?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"(a) No. It is not a fact that no improvements in irrigation are made in Sind. In respect of the developments of irrigation in Sind since 1900, the Hon'ble Member is referred to pages 21 and 22 of the Review of Irrigation in India for 1917-18. Since 1880 the total irrigation from Government works in Sind has increased from 1½ to 3¾ million acres, and it is anticipated that when the principal works recently completed, under construction, or under consideration are in full working order, an additional area of 946,000 acres will be irrigated. This extension of the irrigated area is exclusive of the Sukkur Barrage Scheme, which is estimated will provide irrigation for an increase of 2,200,000 of annual cultivation, or double the cultivation of the whole of the central area of Sind.

(b) There has been no delay in the matter of the Sukkur Barrage except such as is incidental in the framing and consideration of a project of great magnitude which is estimated to cost 1,400 lakhs.

(c) The plans and estimates for the Barrage portion of the project have been completed and are under the consideration of the Government of Bombay. A soil survey of the tracts under command has recently been completed and the revision of the projects for the Right and Left Bank Canals has been taken in hand. No date can be fixed as to when the construction of the project will be taken in hand."

41. "Do Government propose to publish the report of the Army Committee presided over by Lord Esher, when it is presented, and give this Council an opportunity of discussing it before final orders are passed thereon?" Publication of the report of the Army Committee.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"The report of the Army in India Committee will not be submitted to the Government of India, but to the Secretary of State by whom the Committee was appointed. The Government of India are not aware of the Secretary of State's intentions as regards publication of this Report, and are consequently unable to say whether this Council will be afforded an opportunity of discussing it before final orders are passed."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

42. "What was the normal Imperial expenditure (excluding extraordinary war expenditure) during the years 1917-18 and 1918-19 under the heads proposed to be made Imperial under the Reform Scheme?" Normal Imperial expenditure under the Reform Scheme.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

"The Government regret that it is not possible to collect, examine and classify the figures desired, without an expenditure of labour which it would be impossible to undertake during the present budget season; but as recently promised, I will after March 1st lay on the table figures showing actual revenue and expenditure re-classified as desired by the Hon'ble Member."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

43. "What proportion of the railway rolling stock, for which budget provision was made in 1919, has arrived in India, and when is the remainder expected to arrive?" Railway rolling stock.

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"From information received, it is clear that conditions prevailing in England have delayed the delivery of a large proportion of the materials under order for delivery to Indian Railways during the current year. Information as to the proportion of the rolling stock actually delivered is not yet complete, and Government are unable to say definitely when the balance of stock will come forward, but it is hoped that it will reach India in the early part of the coming financial year."

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir Arthur Anderson; Sir George Barnes; Sir William Vincent; Mr Shafi.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

Formation of a Railway Committee. 44. "When will the proposed Railway Committee be formed, and what will be the terms of reference thereto ?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"The proposed Railway Committee will be formed in the coming cold season of 1920-21.

As the terms of reference are under correspondence with the Secretary of State, an announcement thereon cannot at present be made"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

Exports of raw skins to the United States. 45. "(a) What were the exports of raw skins to the United States since the passing of the Indian Tariff (Amendment) Act, 1919?

(b) Has the duty had any protective effect, or has it only been operative as a revenue measure?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

"(a) During the four months September to December 1919, beyond which figures are not yet available, 200,798 cwts. of raw sheep and goat skins valued at Rs 4,99,12,825 were exported from India to the United States of America.

(b) It is obviously too early to judge whether the duty has had any protective effect. Shipments since the imposition of the duty have been unusually large, but conditions have been wholly abnormal on account of the world-wide shortage of stocks arising from the conditions that prevailed during the war. It should moreover be remembered that, as previous commitments were exempted when the duty was first imposed, a considerable proportion of the shipments during the period mentioned above were made free of duty."

WORKMAN'S BREACH OF CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) BILL.

11-30 A.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859."

CHARITABLE AND RELIGIOUS TRUSTS BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"My Lord, I move that the Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh be added to the Select Committee appointed to report on the Bill to provide more effectual control over the administration of Charitable and Religious Trusts, vice the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, who has told me that he will be unable to act. I may add that it was only by an oversight that the Hon'ble Raja's name was omitted on the day the Committee was appointed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

INDIAN CENSUS BILL.

11-40 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi :—"My Lord, I beg to move that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of census be taken into consideration. No notices of amendments have been received, and the Bill as drafted and slightly amended in the Select Committee is apparently acceptable to all Hon'ble Members."

PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, I have the honour to move that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, be taken into consideration. 11-42 A.M.

"The legislation of which we have now reached the final stages has been a matter of long and mature consideration by the Government of India. In September 1917, an informal committee was assembled to consider the suggestions which had then been made. In September 1918, the Bill was introduced and published and the opinions received on it from all quarters were favourable. In February 1919, it was referred to a Select Committee; the Select Committee considered the Bill and reported in September 1919, and their Report was presented to this Council on the 24th of that month. They recommended inter alia that the Bill should be re-committed to them for consolidation with the existing Act, and this was accepted by the Council. The Committee sat again during this Session to re-consider the Bill with the question of consolidation, and they presented their final Report on the [illegible] of this month.

"Before, my Lord, I deal with the Report, I desire to express my thanks to those who have taken part in these committees, and who have given me and the Government their whole-hearted co-operation in this matter. It is to their ungrudging labours that we owe much that is good in this Bill, and I feel that the Council owes a particular debt of gratitude to them in this case For myself, I should like to express my thanks in particular to my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Chanda, whose legal experience has been of great value to us, and to my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, whose many sided attainments have always been the subject of my most earnest admiration, and last but not least, I should like to pay some tribute to my own department for the very heavy spade work that they had to do in this matter.

"Turning to the Bill, I would explain, as shortly as possible, what the position is As the Council knows, the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882 contains certain rather crude provisions for dealing with insolvents outside the Presidency-towns. These were replaced in 1907 by the Provincial Insolvency Act of that year, which was admittedly a measure rather of an experimental nature, and which in the twelve years in which it has been in operation has not been found to be altogether successful. In 1909 the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act was passed, which was probably a better-considered measure, and in many ways formed the model which we sought to follow in amending the Provincial Act, and a considerable portion of the labours of the committee has been devoted to assimilating in the Provincial Act provisions from the Presidency-towns Act. But the chief defect in the Provincial Act was always found to be that it lent itself peculiarly to the devices of dishonest debtors, and it was thought that it was necessary to make it much more stringent in dealing with debtors who possibly at all events might be dishonest. It is to remedy this that the main labours of the committee have been devoted.

"Many other points, however, arose for consideration in the committee, and they have all been taken into account, and the committee's recommendations on them have been embodied in their first Report. When it came back for consolidation, we did a great deal of additional work, not merely paste and scissors as in the case of so many consolidation Bills; but we have re-arranged the whole Act to get it into a more reasonable sequence. We have fitted it together; we have had to make many consequential amendments, and we have transferred to Schedules certain provisions which were in the Act before, but which we thought could more fittingly be embodied in Schedules. The Council have the consolidated Bill before them, and I propose to deal only with it now as it is somewhat difficult to trace back the provisions which are now in the consolidated Bill to their origin in the Bill as amended by the first Report of the Committee. There are many minor amendments in the Bill as it is now before the Council which have, I think, been sufficiently dealt with in the Select Committee Reports; and I do not propose to refer to them at all.

"If Hon'ble Members will glance at the Bill, they will see that a large portion of it is printed in italics; that is the new part arising from the first Report of the Committee. Certain provisions are also underlined; those are changes which have been made by the second Report of the Committee in the course of consolidation, and they are mainly drafting changes. There are one or two changes which go rather further than drafting, but they are, I think, sufficiently explained in the second Report. We have had only two amendments tabled to this Bill, which no doubt will be dealt with by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma later. It is, I think, in itself some tribute to the labours of the Committee that there are only two points really outstanding for the consideration of the Council. I do not propose to weary the Council at any length with this Bill, as I take it that it has met with general acceptance, but it is my duty very shortly to call attention to the really important changes which we have made.

"If the Council will turn to the consolidated Bill, which is now before them, they will find in clause 4 an important change in that we have given the insolvency court power to deal finally, if they choose, with any questions of law or fact arising in the course of their investigations. We do not make it compulsory upon the court to do so, we merely give them the power to do so, and we hope that where questions of difficulty or complexity, especially touching the rights of third parties, come before insolvency courts, they will think it wise either to leave them to the decision of the ordinary courts, or to act upon the power which we have given to them in sub-clause (3), without deciding the rights of parties, to sell whatever interest an insolvent has in the property. This of course makes for expedition, and enables the estate to be wound up with much greater promptitude than if the auditors have to wait for the result of other legal proceedings. It is not a novelty, in that it is little more than the adoption of the ordinary procedure in execution where the right title and interest of the debtor, whatever it may be, is sold by the executing court.

"Turning to clause 10 it provides that it shall be a condition precedent to the presentation of the insolvency petition that the debtor is unable to pay his debts. This is not quite such a simple question as it sounds, because if the court is to be satisfied at the outset that the debtor is unable to pay his debts before it can go further, very large questions may arise for preliminary decision, for instance, in this country, there are often questions of the benami holding of property. We do not desire that there should be a preliminary trial of such questions at the outset of every petition, and we have accordingly provided under clause 24 that primâ facie proof only of inability to pay debts shall be required at this stage, leaving the question open for more detailed consideration when the adjudication has been made.

"Clause 20 contains a new provision with regard to the appointment of a receiver. We thought that ordinarily where a debtor was the petitioner an interim receiver should be appointed at once. We do not make this compulsory on the court; we only say that ordinarily where the debtor is the petitioner an interim receiver shall be appointed, and that where the creditor is the petitioner the court may, if it so desires, appoint an interim receiver. A later clause [56 (5)] applies to interim receivers the various provisions of the Act which affect receivers generally.

"Clause 27 and certain clauses that go with it are probably among the most important changes in the Bill. The clauses which the Council will have to consider in connection with it are 43, 10 (2) and 13 (1) (f). The question dealt with here is that of the discharge of the insolvent. In the past debtors have only cared to come before a court to file their petition, to get release from jail, it may be, or protection. They have hardly even cared to come up for discharge. But it is only when they come up for discharge that it is possible to deal with various offences that may have been committed by them. In practice under the Provincial Insolvency Act no application is made for discharge at all. There seems to be no ignominy attaching to an undischarged bankrupt at all events outside the larger towns, and the provisions for discharge have been practically inoperative. The change that we have proposed here is that it shall be compulsory upon every petitioner to come up for his discharge within a certain period. Clause 27 provides that the court is to fix the period within which the debtor must apply for his discharge. Clause 43 provides that if he does not so apply his adjudication shall be annulled. He is liable thereupon to go back to jail if he has been released, and is subject to the ordinary processes of execution. Clause 10 (2) provides that no insolvent may file a second petition on the same facts without the leave of the court. Clause 13(1) (f) provides that every petitioner must state in his petition whether an adjudication has been previously annulled, in order that the court may be able to judge whether the petition is within the law or not.

"Turning to clause 44 (2) the words in italics at the end of sub-clause (2) are important and provide that an insolvent's discharge shall release him from all debts provable in the insolvency. Under the existing Provincial Act the discharge releases the debtor only from the debts which have been entered in the Schedule. It was thought by the Committee that this puts a premium on creditors not coming in under the Act, but keeping out in order to harass the debtor or to get better terms out of him after the insolvency is over. It is obviously the policy of insolvency law not only to distribute the estate among the creditors fairly, but to give the debtor, if he has been an honest man, a fresh start from that time onwards. It is obvious that this policy will be defeated if we encourage creditors to keep their claims out of the schedule. We have, therefore, proposed the substitution for the existing provision of a provision that the discharge shall extend to all debts which are provable in the insolvency. In this instance, as in many others, we have adopted the provision of the Presidency-towns Act which is practically to this effect.

"The next clause of the Bill to which I need refer is clause 69 dealing with penalties. This was clause 19 of the original Bill as amended in the first Report of the Committee. This appears to be a very considerable change from the old Act, but the change is more in form than in substance. It was found that section 43 of the old Act was unworkable largely on account of the vagueness of the language. We have remodelled it largely on the lines of the Presidency-towns Act. The only modifications, however, of the clause as originally introduced in this Council are first that we have provided that in the case of a number of offences committed in the course of the same insolvency proceedings the aggregate imprisonment shall only be two years, and, secondly, that we have added a provision that the insolvency court instead of dealing with the offence itself may, if it thinks fit, make a complaint before the nearest Magistrate. This will enable more serious offences to be dealt with by the ordinary criminal courts.

"Clause 73 deals with the disqualifications of insolvents in the matter of being appointed to various offices. In this matter we have not changed in any way the provisions of the Bill as originally introduced.

"Part V, clause 74, deals with the summary administration of small estates. In this case, again, we have made no changes from the Bill as originally introduced, except that we have restored the old limit of Rs. 500. In the preliminary Committee which sat in September 1917 the question of the limit of summary administrations was discussed at some length. The Act put a limit of Rs. 500, but the Committee thought that, in order to get small estates through with greater expedition, it was desirable to lower the limit and to make the summary procedure apply only in the case of estates of Rs. 200 or under. When the Bill was circulated for opinions there were considerable differences of opinion on this point. Many suggested that the old limit should be maintained, others agreed that the limit should be lowered, others again thought the limit should be raised as high as Rs. 2,000. These opinions were considered by the Select Committee, and it came to the conclusion that, on the whole, it would be better to keep the limit already in the Act, namely, Rs. 500, and we have therefore restored it.

"Clause 78 is, I think, also of sufficient importance to be mentioned. It is a limitation clause. When we provided that if a debtor does not come up for his discharge his adjudication should be annulled, it was obvious that this might cause hardship in the case of creditors, who had causes of action against him at the time of adjudication, but who were precluded from filing their suits. If the adjudication was subsequently annulled, it seemed necessary to provide that the period between the adjudication and the annulment should be extended, and we have embodied this suggestion in clause 78. My friend, Mr. Sarma, did not see eye to eye with the rest of us on this question, and proposes the omission of the proviso at the end of the clause. I will leave him to argue the point, as I shall have another opportunity of dealing with it.

"I do not think there are any other points that I need refer to. I hope I have not wearied the Council with my explanations. If I have done so, I ask for forgiveness. I am conscious that this is a really dull piece of legislation and that it has not got in it even a flavouring of that spice of political interest which many of my Hon'ble friends seek to extract from even the most innocent forms of Government legislation.

"It is, however, none the less a really useful piece of work, and I feel that if it commends itself to the Council, we shall have effected a distinct improvement in a branch of the law which ought to be of greater use to the community than it has been in the past. My Lord, I commend this Bill to the careful consideration of the Council."

The motion was put and agreed to.

12-2 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.—"My Lord, I beg to move that in sub-clause (2) of clause 4, for the words 'as between the debtor and all claimants against the debtor's estate who were parties thereto' the words 'as between, on the one hand, the debtor and the debtor's estate and on the other hand, all claimants against him or it' shall be substituted.

"It is with great hesitation, my Lord, that I have placed this amendment before the Council for consideration. I have always felt that in view of the great importance of clause 4 of the Bill, we should make our meaning clear when we give finality to the decisions that may be arrived at by the Insolvency Courts in adjudicating upon questions of title, priority or of any nature whatsoever for the purpose of doing complete justice, or for making a complete distribution of the property. It is not merely by way of an idle compliment that I say that it is with considerable hesitation that I placed this amendment, because all our difficulties have been very patiently listened to and considered by the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes, and I feel that if I was not able to convince him, then it may be somewhat difficult to convince him now. I think that when I make the matter a little more clear he would sympathise with my position in the matter and see his way to accept the amendment. It is but fair to say that in drafting the particular wording of this amendment I have had the assistance of, or I may say I owe the wording to, the very great legal acumen and experience of my friends, and I have therefore ventured to bring it forward. I have always felt that it is necessary to make our meaning clear especially when we deal with the question as to who are the parties to an adjudication. Considerable difficulties have arisen in the administration of justice in deciding questions of res judicata, in determining who are the parties to an adjudication, and I think that if we can make our meaning clear by saying that the matters that may be adjudicated upon under clause 4 (1) are matters between the debtor and his estate on the one hand, and all persons whatsoever who may claim against that estate on the other hand, the matter would be more simple than if we import the words 'persons who are parties thereto'. Well, let us take a question of adjudication of title. Any creditor who may assert any title against the debtor or his estate to a particular piece of property in insolvency should set up his title, that is, he must be a claimant Well, if he be a claimant against the estate, the matter is res judicata whether he is on the schedule or not, and the matter is extremely important in view of the fact that all creditors who have not proved their debts, but who can prove their debts, must be considered to be represented in insolvency and would be represented by the Receiver if a receiver be appointed, and we have made provision for the appointment of a Receiver. I therefore think, Sir, that if we make this provision that on the one hand the party would be the debtor and the debtor's estate, may be the receiver, and the creditors who are represented by the receiver on the one hand, and the persons who claim the estate, on the other hand, the whole ground would be covered. In cases of priority the persons who would dispute would be the creditors themselves or the receiver may dispute the priority of a creditor. In that case the debtor's estate would be represented by the receiver or by the debtor and the creditors would be the persons claiming against the estate within the meaning of that particular clause. I therefore think there will be no harm if we omit the words 'as between the debtor and all claimants against the debtor's estate who were parties thereto' and substitute those that I have suggested . . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes.—"My Lord, I do not want the Hon'ble Member to think that I am obdurate. My heart goes with him and my heart is going to carry the day. My judgment is still against him, I am not at all sure that this is not rather dangerous, but my Hon'ble friend has great experience in these matters, and if the Council agrees to this amendment, I am prepared to accept it. What it means is this that if a question of title has been adjudicated by an Insolvency Court the decision by the Insolvency Court according to my Hon'ble friend, Mr Sarma, is to be binding upon everybody, the debtor and the debtor's estate on the one hand and everybody who claims against the debtor's estate on the other hand. Personally, I should have thought it safer to limit it only to what I call the parties, that is the people who have actually appeared on the claim. People who had not appeared on the claim possibly had no notice of it at all and should not be bound by it, but I am quite willing to bow to my Hon'ble friend's experience in these insolvency matters, and if the Council thinks that the clause is a better clause than the one we have provided, I am quite willing to accept it. I am quite prepared, if my Hon'ble friend wishes it, that everybody should vote according to his own inclination." 12-7 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I do not think that there is any real difficulty as apprehended by the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes. I think matters between the debtor on the one hand and the creditors who support his title and claim their dividends out of the estate would not be res judicata upon any subsidiary points upon which the decision may be come to. It is only questions of title with regard to any property claimed and disputed to be the debtor's property that would be adjudicated upon as between the debtor and the creditors who support him on the one hand, and the persons who oppose him or who claim a title to that estate on the other hand All persons who actively claim a title to that estate would be parties thereto necessarily, and I therefore think that no one who is not a party to the suit in that sense of the term would be in any way whatsoever prejudiced by any adjudication. The difficulty I felt was as to whether a creditor siding 12-9 P.M.

with a debtor in respect of the title to a particular piece of propety but not in the schedule or not proving his debt or not a party regularly to the suit would still be governed by an adjudication on any issue raised in the course of these proceedings. My submission is that those creditors who support the debtor would be on the same side and the matter would not be res judicata; only the creditors claiming and receiving a dividend would be estopped. The matter would be res judicata as between the debtor on the one side and the persons who claim adversely to the estate on the other, and I do not think that any person by reason of absence of notice or by reason of his not being a party to the suit would be prejudicially affected in any manner whatsoever."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" My Lord, I move that the proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 78 be omitted. The proviso runs thus :—

' Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to a suit or application in respect of a debt provable but not proved under this Act.'

" The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes has told us that the Select Committee has extended the original operation of the Bill by bringing in creditors who have not proved under the Act within the purview of clause 44 of the Bill, that means to say that they would lose their right to proceed against the debtor after discharge even though they did not take the benefit of the insolvency proceedings and did not come in for a dividend and did not take a dividend. The question here raised is as to whether we should draw a distinction between creditors who have proved and who have not proved further to the detriment of a person who has not proved by depriving him of the benefit which this clause granted to creditors who have proved before annulment. Let me make my meaning clear. In insolvency proceedings every creditor has got an opportunity of proving his debt and no person can proceed against the debtor or the debtor's estate during the pendency of the proceedings, except as provided in the Act After the adjudication order has been made, whether a man has proved under the Act or has not proved under the Act equally is he debarred ordinarily from proceeding by way of a suit, against the debtor or his estate. The order of adjudication may, however, be annulled by the court on its being proved to its satisfaction that the debts can be paid or that no order of adjudication should have been made at all, and then the property re-vests in the debtor and persons can proceed from that date onwards against the debtor or his estate. Now during that interval the persons who have been deprived of the benefit of taking the usual proceedings will be given the advantage under this clause of having to their credit, for the purposes of computation of limitation, the period which has elapsed between the date of the order of adjudication and the date of annulment, that is, if they have lost three months they will have three further months within which they can file a suit But if, unfortunately, a man has not proved, this proviso enacts that he shall not have that benefit. My position is that a creditor who is debarred from taking the regular proceedings by reason of an adjudication order should be given the benefit equally whether he applies for a dividend by proving his debt or does not. I will explain by one or two concrete instances wherein the hardship lies. Supposing a creditor has three months within which he can file a suit when an order of adjudication is made. He comes to know a little after, say within a month, that an order of adjudication is made, he has still two months' time within which he can sue. Suddenly at the end of a month and 20 days the order of adjudication is annulled. He has still 10 days within which to sue. The suspensory period may be long if the insolvency proceedings are protracted. The order of annulment may be passed when he has only ten days or even two days within which he can sue, or after the period is over. Now in the case of a creditor who has proved or, at any rate, offered to prove under the Act this three months' period or two months and 28 days' period between the order of adjudication and the order of annulment will be counted in his favour, that is, he will have three months or two months and 28 days still to his credit. But the creditor who has not moved the court in insolvency will not have these 2 months and 28 days; he will have only two days within which to bring a suit or one day or it may be he will have no time whatsoever, although in the course of the insolvency, if the proceedings should be continued without annulment, he might have proved his debt. Therefore, in one case he might be deprived altogether of his remedy by reason of a sudden annulment of the adjudication order. In any case he would be seriously prejudiced by the period of limitation being curtailed against him for no fault of his own. I therefore submit that there is no real reason for curtailing the rights and privileges of a creditor further in the manner that is suggested in this proviso.

"The only argument that may be advanced is that it would make creditors diligent in proving their debts. Well, my Lord, there may be occasions when a man does not really know that there is any necessity for proving or thinks that it is not worth while to do so. I will put it to the Council he may discover that the order of adjudication has been annulled by reason that the man is able to pay his debts in full, when suddenly it is found that the debtor is really in possession of a very much larger estate than was supposed to be the case. A man may be justified in not proving his debt if he stands to receive only one anna or six pies of his debt, but why should you deprive him of this period when the circumstances under which an order of adjudication is annulled show that the debtor is in a position to pay a very much higher dividend or practically the whole? I submit, my Lord, that we should not penalise a creditor further than we have done. We have under clause 44, and I hope rightly also, enacted that a creditor who does not prove under the Act will have no remedy against the debtor after discharge. I think we need not go further and rule that he shall not have even the benefit of limitation allowed to other creditors who have offered to prove under the Act."

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes:—"My Lord, I can only recommend the Council very strongly not to accept this amendment. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma says there is no real reason why you should penalise a man who has not proved. I can only say with great respect that none are so deaf as those who will not hear. 12-19 P.M.

"I gave my Hon'ble friend the reason when I was addressing the Council just now. The reason is the policy of bankruptcy law. The policy of bankruptcy law is, as I stated, not merely to distribute the bankrupt's estate, but to start the bankrupt afresh after his insolvency; and the tendency in India is, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma knows quite well, for creditors to hang out and wait till the man is free and then to harass him when he ought to be making a new start in life, by threatening to sue him for debts which they have not proved in insolvency. It is to meet this that we have insisted on the proviso, namely, 'debts provable in insolvency', not merely 'debts which have been proved.' It is in the same way to check this that I strongly advise the Council not to extend this concession in the matter of limitation to people who have not come in and proved their debts in insolvency. The position we are dealing with is this; that a man has filed a petition in insolvency, or a creditor has filed a petition that he may be adjudicated an insolvent; upon that the court, if it finds the petition in order, makes an order of adjudication and at the time of making the order of adjudication declares upon what date the insolvent has to come up for his discharge. The court has power under the clause to enlarge that time if necessary; but everybody knows, everybody who is a creditor of the man knows, that he has been adjudicated an insolvent, and will know that by the order of adjudication a time is fixed within which he has got to come up for his discharge. If the insolvent does not come up for his discharge as the court has ordered, his adjudication will be annulled, and the only question is, whose rights are you to save upon that annulment? I say that you should only save the rights of creditors who have come in and proved their debts—the right of those who though honest creditors having honest debts upon which they could otherwise have sued have been prevented by the law from suing him during that period. My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, says 'let anybody stand out who likes; do not make them come in; there is no necessity for them to prove their debts at all; if the adjudication of the insolvent is annulled let them have the advantage of this concession of limitation in order that their suits too may be saved.' I say that is directly contrary to at least one-half of the policy of insolvency law. I ask the Council to maintain the proviso to section 78 as it stands in the Bill."

12-22 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.—"I submit, my Lord, that the reasoning of the policy of insolvency law under which we insist upon everybody proving his debt on pain of being unable to proceed against the debtor after discharge is a thoroughly sound one, and I approve of it. There is no difference between the Hon'ble Law Member and myself; but he seems to think that we have made a concession in favour of creditors who have proved to which other people are not entitled. Therein he differs from me widely. I do not look upon it as a concession. I look upon it as a right, the right of a creditor to proceed against a debtor normally in the course of proceedings within the period of limitation, a right conferred upon him by law. The special policy of the insolvency law prevents him from proceeding against the debtor in the ordinary course. Therefore, we say when an order is found to have been wrongly made adjudicating a person as insolvent, when that order is annulled we shall restore the person who is prevented from proceeding in the ordinary manner, to the old position; there is no question of a concession there, it is a question of right; we are restoring in a measure his former privilege. As I say we are not in any way assisting this man because it may be that the creditor would be perfectly justified, though his debt may be an honest debt, in not worrying himself to prove his debt when the assets are very small; but the very reason on which these orders of adjudication are annulled, namely, possible large property in the possession of the debtor, would justify the creditor proceeding against him in the ordinary course; it may be that he may not have thought it worth while proceeding under the old order or it may be that he has postponed it for a month or two. Therefore, my submission is that we shall be unjustly depriving that person of an ordinary right by enacting this proviso. It is not a question of a concession, and there is not the slightest use saying that the policy of insolvency law is against removing this proviso from this section."

INDIAN PASSPORT BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs :—"My Lord, I rise to move for leave to introduce a Bill enabling Government to make rules with a view to preventing any person not in possession of a passport from entering India by sea, land or air. 12-28 P.M.

"The present passport rules were framed in 1917 under the Defence of India Act, 1915, and will cease to be in force six months after the termination of the war. It is not known when this will be, but it may be presumed that the peace terms with the last of the enemy Powers, Turkey, will be ratified within the next two or three months, so that the present passport rules will cease to be in force about nine months hence.

"The passport rules of 1917 make it obligatory for all persons entering or leaving India by sea to be in possession of a properly issued and visaed passport not more than two years old, and the visaes are in practice granted for single journeys only There are large classes of exemptions, including bonâ fide labourers travelling between India and the Malay States or Ceylon, and bonâ fide Muhammadan pilgrims coming to and from Jeddah or Basrah. The system is reported to have worked satisfactorily, and may, on the whole, be said to have fulfilled the object for which it was introduced; that is to say, it has formed a reasonably effective check upon the movements to and from India of actual or potential spies and Bolshevik propagandists.

"It was at first hoped that after the war it would be possible to do away with the system, but it is only too evident that the end of actual hostilities will not free India or any other country of ordered and peaceful conditions from the great danger, to meet which the passport system was devised. Not only the United Kingdom and the Dominions of Canada and Australia, but also certain foreign nations, such as the United States and Sweden, have already decided to retain their war regulations controlling entry into those countries, and it is believed that practically every civilised country intends to follow their example, although we have not yet received detailed information of the intentions of countries other than those mentioned. In the United Kingdom the Aliens Restrictions Act of 1914 was 'continued and extended' by the Aliens Restrictions Amendment Act of 1919, and an Order in Council was promulgated whereby, with certain exceptions, all persons landing in the United Kingdom, whether British subjects or foreigners, have to be in possession of a passport. The new Aliens Restrictions Act under which this order is passed, will continue in force until the 23rd December 1920. With regard to foreigners, India and the Dominions have been definitely invited by His Majesty's Government to bring their system into line, so far as is possible, with that of the United Kingdom.

"I need not dwell at length upon the very special danger to which India would be exposed in the present state of the world, if no attempt were made to scrutinise the intentions and antecedents of persons trying to enter her territories. We know that the Bolshevik Government have published far and wide their intention of flooding the East generally, and India in particular, with trained revolutionary propagandists. We may expect attempts on the part of the agents of Bolshevism to penetrate this country by every possible route and every possible means. We know that there are a number of such persons at the Schools of Propaganda at Moscow, Tashkent and elsewhere in Soviet Russia.

"I am sure that all the Members of this Council, whatever their political creed, will unite in a desire to prevent, so far as possible, this pernicious penetration, the object of which is to create hatred and strife not so much between the Government and governed as between the 'haves' and the 'have nots.' In addition there is the question of restricting the entry into India for the present, of former enemy subjects. The Government of India have not yet finally formulated their policy on this point except in the case of Germans and German-Austrians, whose entry into India will, at all events, be generally prohibited for a period of five years.

"The Council will observe that the Bill which is now being introduced is merely an Enabling Bill, and that the force of it will reside in the rules. The obligation to obtain a passport at present imposed on persons leaving India is being definitely abandoned, and this may remove a considerable inconvenience from the travelling public, although in the case of persons going to countries requiring passports (which, I fear, will be most countries) there will at present be very little practical difference. The object of leaving the main operations of the Bill to be embodied in rules is, of course, to secure elasticity in view of the rapidly changing conditions of the outside world. It is the intention of the Government of India at present to relax the conditions governing the validity of passports by making the visa last for one year instead of a new one being required as at present for every journey, and this relaxation will, I hope, be further extended as the world settles down. On the other hand, the Bill takes power to require passports from persons entering India by land and air, as well as by sea It is not our present intention to make passports obligatory for entry by land except in the case of the Nushki railway by which there is the danger of the entry of Bolshevist emissaries

"I beg, my Lord, for leave to introduce the Bill."

12-34 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, we have every desire to co-operate with the Government in the object they have at heart, namely, of preventing undesirable foreigners from entering the country with a view to carrying on dangerous propaganda, for the purpose of unsettling the minds of the people here. But we have great difficulty in the way of accepting the introduction of a Bill of this description, because of the extensive powers proposed to be conferred on the Executive, enabling it to prohibit even Indians settled here, resident here, domiciled here, from entering British India if the Government thinks that they are undersirable persons. We can readily, though reluctantly, appreciate the wisdom of a law like this, if it were confined to aliens or to particular classes of British subjects with whom we are at variance on essential, vital principles although I would deprecate drawing any distinction between the several parts of the British Empire. But, my Lord, I think there can be no justification whatsoever for asking this Legislative Council to enable the executive Government to prevent bonâ fide Indian subjects of His Majesty from entering the country without a passport, which it would be in their discretion to refuse if that is the meaning of this law. If I am mistaken, I hope to be told so. I daresay the Government would exercise very cautiously the powers that may be given under this law The question is not whether these powers are to be exercised wisely or unwisely, but whether such powers should be conferred on the Executive in reference to any of His Majesty's British Indian subjects. I know that certain persons who leave India may be considered to be extremely undesirable from several points of view, that they may have come into contact and active association during their stay outside with the King's enemies, with Bolshevists, with persons who are ready and eager to propagate doctrines deemed undesirable. To my mind the remedy seems to be to take powers, if necessary, to arrest such persons, to deal with them when they arrive in British India, but not to prevent them from coming to their homes. The Government have, I think, ample power to deport any person under the Madras Regulations, the Bengal Regulations, and the Rowlatt Acts we have passed recently. Therefore, it cannot be contended that Government has not the power to deal summarily with British Indian subjects who may be considered dangerous to good government. Therefore, I would ask respectfully, what is the necessity for a power to prevent Indian subjects from coming back to their homes. Take the case of Lajpat Rai. I believe it was under the Defence of India Act rules that Lajpat Rai was prevented from entering India, and that has been the cause of a very sore grievance. It was an extremely unwise act on the part of Government. What I would have understood as defensible would have been to deal with Lajpat Rai under the law if it could be proved that he was a dangerous subject, and secure his punishment if he created unlawful mischief outside India. If in this respect the law is weak, you may seek to amend it so as to bring within the category of offences punishable all offences committed outside India by British subjects If Government has no power to proceed against dangerous persons, in the ordinary course of law, still they have power under the summary laws to deal with them and prevent them from doing mischief. I, therefore, submit that this Bill should be confined only to aliens, and if the Government are prepared to go further, they may take powers to extend it to other parts of the British Empire I think there is absolutely no justification for such wide powers as are asked for. Then, again, it may be that at present it is the intention of Government to prevent access to British India to persons outside the frontier, but it should not relate to subjects of Native States. I submit, my Lord, that the Bill should be confined to persons not ordinarily resident in India."

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Mr. P. J. G. Pipon.]

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. G. Pipon.—"My Lord, I should not have ventured to trespass on the time of the Council, but that I happen to have had about 3½ years' practical experience of the working of passports, and, to a certain extent, I am familiar with the working of the passport system in most countries. I think I might even shorten the debate if I could convince my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma that when he has made the suggestion, as he has made, that the Government of India should exempt British Indians from the operation of the law which insists upon passports for all persons entering India, there is no question of principle involved in it at all It is merely a question of practice. Now a passport system entails not only a properly constituted authority for issuing passports, but a machinery for checking it. It is, therefore, perfectly impossible for that machinery to guess the nationality of any person except by demanding the production of a passport. I speak of those conditions where, as during the present war, passports had to be required from a very large number of persons. What is rather interesting in this matter is that the French Government during the war were confronted with very much the same difficulty as my Hon'ble friend is. They had to make in their country a large number of very complicated rules to govern the circulation (as they call it) of the different classes of persons passing through France. The French Government is like my Hon'ble friend, very very sensitive to the rights of their own nationals, to the rights of Frenchmen in France, and consequently at the beginning of the war they made some attempt to lay down rules by which foreigners had to produce certain papers, but Frenchmen were exempted. The result of that was that the unfortunate Frenchmen who had no papers were stopped at the barrier, whereas foreigners who had papers went through without difficulty The point is that the Frenchman had to prove that he was a Frenchman. I may tell my Hon'ble friend that if in India a general passport system is introduced, an Indian returning to India has to prove first of all that he is an Indian Now that is not a very easy matter without a passport. Any question such as basing it on language is bound to break down. For instance . . . . . 12-40 P.M.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I rise, my Lord, to make a personal explanation?"

[The President; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Mr. P. J. G. Pipon; Mr. G. S. Khaparde; Mr. A. P. Muddiman; Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

The President :—" Only a personal explanation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma :—" I only meant that there should be a clause compelling the Government to exempt British Indian subjects, that is all, and not that no safeguard should be taken to see whether a man is a British Indian subject or not ? "

The Hon'ble Mr. P. J. G. Pipon :—" My Lord, all that I meant to say is that it is practically impossible to exempt any particular class of persons. As I was going to say the French Government made an attempt and a very serious attempt to exempt their own nationals from certain rules, and they were obliged to lay down after a very short period that the Frenchmen must also have papers. Otherwise it was impossible for the machinery to know whether he was a Frenchman or a foreigner. I hope I have made that point clear. I do not wish to detain the Council any longer except to say that I rather hope that I have convinced my Hon'ble friend that there is no question of principle involved in this Bill at all. We may concede him all his principles, but it is absolutely impossible, as shown by my personal experience, to exempt the nationals of a country in actual practice. I do not wish to detain the Council any longer."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" My Lord, I feel a difficulty about this Bill, because as the wording goes, there is nothing to prevent British Indians from not coming under this Bill . . . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. A. P. Muddiman :—" May I point out, your Excellency, that this is a motion for leave to introduce a Bill, and the Hon'ble Member is dealing with the principle of it. The usual practice is for members to speak on the principles of a Bill on the motion that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee or for the general consideration of the Bill ? "

12-45 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde :—" I submit, my Lord, I feel a difficulty about the principle itself. The principle is this, that primâ facie an Indian has got every right to go out and return to his home when he pleases, and it is only in exceptional circumstances that we can impose restrictions on him. In other countries also it is the same case that every man has got a right to go back to his own country. But in India the question is a little difficult because there are two Indias, British India and Native India or India consisting of Native States, and whether the Act goes so far as to prevent British Indians from going to Native States and vice versâ, is not clear from this Bill.

"The next question of principle is that it is left to the executive Government to frame the rules. I submit the Legislative Council sits twice a year, and the rules that are framed by the Government could be brought before the Council and modified as might be found necessary. If that is so, why after the rules are framed, should they not be brought before the Council and considered ? It is said that such rules existed during war time. I quite agree, but during the war we never put our mind to such things. We gave something like a free hand to officers so that they might win the war in any way they liked, but the present is not war time; we are in times of profound peace, I believe, and so I think these rules may be brought here for being considered. Otherwise these rules will be framed and merely published in the Gazette of India and then they will become law. These are the two matters about which I feel some difficulty, and I shall be glad to have an explanation about it when the Hon'ble Member in charge makes a reply."

12-47 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda :—" My Lord, I speak with some diffidence on this Bill. I freely confess that when I first read this Bill and the Statement of Objects and Reasons, I thought that it was a dangerous power that was going to be created and that it might be used against Indians, persons domiciled in India. I felt the force of that. But I confess after hearing my Hon'ble* friend sitting in front of me I feel the force of what he has said.

"There is, however, one difficulty which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Khaparde, has pointed out, and it is this, that almost everything is left to rules to be framed by the executive Government. These are matters, I think, my Lord, that require careful consideration. Certainly we shall resent it very much that a person born or domiciled in India, if he goes out of India for a short time, should find it difficult to come back to India unless he obtains a passport. There is considerable force, I admit, in that argument, because in certain instances it may be necessary, but in the generality of cases this restriction that a person born in India, if he goes out of India for a short period, should produce evidence before he can come back, would be very much resented.

"I therefore think that if the rules to be framed be revised in this Council, some objection may perhaps disappear. However, I keep an open mind on the matter."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"My Lord, I should like to draw the attention of Council to the fact that this is only a motion for leave to introduce. The Hon'ble Mr. Dobbs has not asked the Council to accept this Bill; all he has done is to make a very simple request for leave to introduce and publish the Bill in the Gazette. As, however, attention has been drawn to the question of the possible exclusion, firstly, of Indian subjects generally from India, and secondly, of subjects of Indian States from British India, I had better explain the facts. I have been in charge of the Home Department for the last years of the war, and I may say that it has never been our policy, as far as I am aware, to exclude Indians domiciled in India from this country. I will take a particular instance. A number of Indians were recently convicted, as many members are aware, in America for certain offences. We examined the question of prohibiting them from returning to India very carefully, and we finally came to the conclusion that it was our duty, as I might put it colloquially, to consume our own smoke, and that we should have to take back any of our own people, i.e., persons domiciled in India whether we wanted them or not. So far as I am aware, Mr. Lajpat Rai went to America of his own accord before the war. He got his passport from America to England and then got a passport from the Secretary of State to India, and I cannot find in the very short time available to me that any orders excluding him from India were issued against him by the Government of India. As to excluding subjects of Indian States, I submit that this is a fanciful suggestion. I cannot remember any occasion on which we have excluded a subject of an Indian State from British India, nor is it, so far as I am aware, contemplated by the Foreign Department that any such action should be taken under this Bill. The question whether any specific amendments in the law are necessary to meet that point might well be deferred, but I can assure the Council that we have never used the Defence of India rules which, as Hon'ble Members are aware, give us pretty extensive powers in the direction suggested by the Hon'ble Member. I put it to the Council that it is impossible, however, to exclude persons who are not British subjects without a passport system for all, nor indeed we should be prepared to allow the entry into India of persons of an undesirable character from any country. For the present, hovewer, all the Hon'ble Mr. Dobbs asks is, for leave to introduce this Bill and publish it for information, and subsequently, when opinion has been fully ventilated on it, members of this Council will have ample opportunities of discussing it in detail with fuller information." 12-49 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shafi:—"My Lord, I would like to add a few words in order to remove a misapprehension under which my Hon'ble friend 12-54 P.M.

*The Hon'ble Mr. Pipon.

[Mr. Shafi; Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs; Sir Claude Hill.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920]

Mr. Sarma is apparently labouring. This Bill by its provisions excludes nobody from entry into India; it only authorises His Excellency in Council to frame rules under the Act for the exclusion of persons from India. And you will notice that under clause 3, sub-clause (2)(c), the rules may provide for the exemption either absolutely or on some condition of any person or class of persons from any provision of such rules, so that the Bill itself does not exclude any one from entry into India. It only authorises the Governor General in Council to frame rules and in consequence the objection that my learned friend is putting forward against the Bill does not apply."

12-55 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs:—"My Lord, I have very little to add to the arguments contained in the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent's remarks. It is the fact that our main difficulty, if British subjects were not brought within the scope of this Bill, would be to distinguish British subjects from aliens, especially of course in the case of Americans, and it is mainly for that reason that British subjects have not been excluded from the operations of the Bill. It is also the fact that there have been countless difficulties in practice and unending telegrams in regard to passports, and we have often had to modify our practice at very short notice, and if rules had to be submitted to the Council, say once a year, there might be considerable difficulty in dealing with the matter as rapidly as might be required. I trust, therefore, that the Council, will agree to the introduction of this Bill and to its publication, and any matters which may be found to be obnoxious can of course be carefully considered when the Bill is further debated after publication."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs:—"I beg to introduce the Bill and move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

DOURINE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

12-56 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"My Lord, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Dourine Act, 1910. The Bill itself is an exceedingly simple one, and I need not detain the Council for more than a few moments in making this motion since the provisions practically amount only to two qualifications of the existing Act. But I should perhaps explain for the information of the Council that this disease, Dourine, had had a tremendous extension of its baneful activities lately in the Punjab, and that the measures which have been possible under the existing Dourine Act to combat it have proved ineffective. The result has been, since the infection is transmitted wherever breeding operations take place, that a considerable number of stallions has had to be destroyed, and that a considerable economic loss has been occasioned in horse-breeding to private owners as well as to Government. In such circumstances two additional provisions, with a view to prevent this economic loss, are proposed in the Bill, which I am asking for leave to introduce. The first is, it is proposed to give power to the Inspector authorised under the Act to remove a mare found or believed to be affected with Dourine and keep her under observation. The second provision is that, since it has been found that the alternative at present offered in section 8 of the Act of branding mares has failed, it is proposed to abrogate that alternative and no longer to provide for the branding of mares at all. I do not think, my Lord, that, in addition to what is stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, I need say anything further in regard to the provisions of the Bill. I therefore move for leave to introduce it."

The motion was put and agreed to.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Sir Claude Hill; Sir George Barnes.]

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"My Lord, I now introduce the Bill and move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

GLANDERS AND FARCY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"My Lord, I now beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the law relating to Glanders and Farcy. In doing so, I may even be briefer than I have been in reference to the Dourine Act, since the provisions of this Bill are designed practically only to include camels in the list of animals to which the Act applies. Under a Notification issued in September 1910 surra was declared to be one of the infectious diseases coming within the scope of the Glanders and Farcy Act. Well, it has been found since that surra is a disease to which camels are peculiarly susceptible and that camels are par excellence the carriers of the disease of surra, and that it is necessary to bring camels within the scope of the Act. That is practically the whole purpose of the very short Bill which is before the Council, my Lord. The only other alteration is to extend the discretion allowed to Local Governments under section 3 of the Act of determining the local application of the Act." 12-58 P.M.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"I now beg to introduce the Bill, and to move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

IMPORT AND EXPORT OF GOODS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes:—"My Lord, last Session I introduced a Bill to extend the operation of, and otherwise to amend the Import and Export of Goods Act, 1916. The Bill was introduced on the 18th of September last, that is to say, very nearly at the end of the Session, and on the 24th of September, a day before the Session came to an end, it came on for consideration. On that day Mr. Sarma appealed to me to give him more time to consider the details of the Bill. He said that the Bill had not been published for a sufficient time to enable him to consider the details. As there was no urgency whatever in the matter, I then agreed to postponing the Bill until the present Session. When Mr. Sarma asked for more time he also tabled two amendments: one was to limit the operation of the Bill to foodstuffs and the other had some other point of limitation. Now, we want the Bill mainly for foodstuffs, probably also for gold, and, I think, for no other purpose. I have discussed the matter with my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, and he agrees with us in thinking that the most satisfactory course would now be to refer the Bill to a Select Committee and then to consider what amendments are necessary in order to limit its scope, if any limitation at all is necessary. Accordingly, my Lord, I beg to move that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes, the Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy, the Hon'ble Mr. Sita Nath Ray, the Hon'ble Mr. Mant, the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, the Hon'ble Mr. Ley, the Hon'ble Mr. McPherson, the Hon'ble Mr. Crum, the Hon'ble Mr. Jaffer, the Hon'ble Mr. Cook and myself, and that it be a special instruction to the Select Committee to consider whether the provisions of 1 P.M.

section 3 of the said Act should be amended with the object of limiting its scope, and if so, to report the amendments in the Act which the Committee consider necessary or desirable to give effect to that purpose."

1-4 P.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"My Lord, I am glad that the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes has seen his way to recommend that this Bill should be referred to a Select Committee. We commit ourselves to no particular course of action, but we all feel that some power must be given to the Government to regulate the export of foodstuffs. Whether any other articles would have to be included, within what period of time the power should be exercised and so on, are matters which will be gone into by the Select Committee. I am thankful that the Hon'ble Sir George Barnes agreed to postponing this Bill to the Delhi Session and that he has seen his way to refer the matter to a Select Committee now."

The motion was put and agreed to.

[At this stage the Council adjourned for Lunch.]

HINDU MARRIAGES VALIDITY BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to provide that marriages between Hindus of different castes are valid be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent, the Hon'ble Mr. Muddiman, the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru, the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda, the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, the Hon'ble Mr. McPherson, the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha, the Hon'ble Mr. Kincaid and myself. In making a few observations on this motion I hope I shall not say anything which might offend my Hindu friends here or outside this Council. I do not desire to lead an attack on the caste system, nor do I wish to discuss the advantages or disadvantages of that system. In fact from my point of view such a discussion is not at all necessary for the purposes of this Bill. Let us as practical men take the facts as they exist to-day and try to solve them; let us face them and arrive at some solution. What are the facts? The Hindu community is divided into four principal castes,—the Brahmins, the Kshatriyas, the Vaisyas and the Sudras. Each of these principal castes is again sub-divided into hundreds of sub-castes. Marriages among sub-castes of the same caste, or as I should like to call them, inter-sub-caste marriages are admittedly allowed by the Hindu Shastras and they are in consonance with the general Hindu opinion; and we know that hundreds of such marriages, I mean inter-sub-caste marriages, have taken place in different parts of India.

"Then I come to inter-caste marriages. They are of two kinds, marriage of a man of a higher caste with a woman of a lower caste. Such a marriage is called Anuloma, while the second class, called Pratiloma, is the marriage of a woman of a higher caste with a man of the lower caste. Now Anuloma marriages were admittedly permitted by the Hindu Shastras. Pratiloma marriages were condemned by the Hindu Shastras, but such condemnation was according to the best authorities merely moral. There is no text on Hindu law which can be cited to prove that Pratiloma marriages were illegal and the issues of such marriages illegitimate. That is the position according to the Shastras. Inter-sub-caste marriages, as I have said, are sanctioned not only by Shastras, but have been in consonance with general Hindu opinion, and hundreds of such marriages have in fact taken place, but in some decisions doubts have been thrown on the validity of such marriages. With regard to inter-caste marriages of both kinds, courts have held that they are invalid and the issues of such marriages are illegitimate. Now, the object of this Bill is to validate inter-sub-caste marriages as well as inter-caste marriages. In the first place, this Bill will remove the doubt which has been cast on the validity of inter-sub-case marriages; and in the second, it will validate inter-caste marriages. That is the object of this Bill.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"Now, if we look to the history of the marriage legislation, we find that the first Act passed is what is known as the Civil Marriage Act, III of 1872. That Act is really all embracing so to say. To use the words of Mr. Basu 'anybody can marry anybody,' provided both parties make a declaration that they do not profess any of the religions named in the Act, and provided also that the marriage is registered. The two conditions necessary are that there should be a declaration and there should be registration of marriage. These two conditions being fulfilled a Hindu can marry a Muhammadan, a Muhammadan can marry a Christian, a Christian can marry a Hindu, and so forth. Then, a few years ago, was passed the Sikh Anand Marriage Act. Under that Act parties may declare themselves Sikhs and go through the Sikh marriage ceremony called Anand. Such marriage is good and valid in law and the issue of such marriage legitimate. Later, an attempt was made by my friend Mr. B. N. Basu to have a law doing away with the declaration required under the Civil Marriage Act. He in fact wanted that parties could by mere registration and without renouncing their faith, enter into a valid marriage. But that attempt of his failed. His Bill was, as I have stated, all embracing. Under its provisions it was open to a Hindu to marry a Muhammadan, or a Christian or a person of any other faith. My Bill follows the line of least resistance. I want to confine it only to Hindus. I do not include within my Bill any other community. What is more, I want to see that the sacramental character of the Hindu Marriage is retained. I do not wish to engraft any new principles not sanctioned by Hindus on this marriage. I wish a marriage under my Bill should be essentially a Hindu marriage, not a civil contract. Having said this much I now wish to emphasise the fact that in taking up this Bill at this Session we are not rushing through in any sense this legislation. The Bill was introduced as early as September 1918, 18 months have passed and ample opportunities have been given to the public, to those interested, to the Local Governments and to various public bodies and associations to agitate the question, to formulate their views and submit them to the Government of India. The whole record is now complete. We know what Hindu opinion is. No question of deferring further consideration of this measure can, therefore, arise. We are not rushing this Bill through the Council. For the purposes of my argument, I divide the opinions received into three classes—

(1) the opinions of Local Governments;

(2) the opinions of the highest Judicial officers, i.e., of High Courts, of Judicial Commissioners, and of Chief Courts;

(3) the opinions of the Hindu community to whom this Bill is intended to apply.

"I take the first class of opinions, namely, those of Local Governments. I find on a careful study of these opinions that the Chief Commissioner of Delhi says that the Bill should not be supported by Government, he does not go so far as to say that the Government should oppose it; the Chief Commissioner of Baluchistan is not prepared to express any opinion; the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma advises that the Government of India should hesitate before giving sanction to this change; the Chief Commissioner of Coorg is entirely in favour of the Bill; the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province puts two sides of the case and expresses no opinion of his own; the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab advises that further consideration of the Bill should be deferred. The United Provinces Government strongly supports the Bill. The Government of Bihar and Orissa is of opinion that non-Hindu Members should not vote. The Chief Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara is of opinion that the Bill should not receive official support. The Assam Government is of opinion that the Government should oppose the Bill unless it is clear that the opponents are in an insignificant minority. The Central Provinces Government thinks that the Government should remain neutral and leave the decision to non-official Members. The Bengal

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur; The Vice-President.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

Government says the voting should be confined to non-official Members or that the Bill should be deferred, the Madras Government would like to see the Bill deferred, so also Bombay. I have analysed these opinions and my analysis is this. There are two Governments who seem to hold the view that the Government of India should oppose the Bill, unless it is proved that there is a great majority in favour of the Bill—they are the Government of Assam and the Government of Burma. There are two Governments who feel strongly that the Government of India should support the Bill; they are the United Provinces and Coorg. There are two Governments that desire to express no opinion; they are Baluchistan and the North-West Frontier Province. There are three Governments who would like to see this Bill deferred; that is the Punjab, Madras and Bombay. There are five Governments who consider that officials should not vote on this Bill; they are Bihar and Orissa, the Central Provinces, Bengal and Ajmer-Merwara and Delhi. I may say here that the Bengal Government have suggested that either the non-officials alone should decide the fate of this Bill or that the Bill should be deferred. So, generally speaking, it is clear from the analysis I have just given that there are only two Local Governments who are opposed to this Bill. There are two Local Governments who are entirely in favour of the Bill. There are two Local Governments who express no opinion. There are three Local Governments who are of opinion that the Bill should be deferred, and there are five Local Governments who think that officials should not vote on this Bill. That is, so far as I could gather, the result of the opinions of the Local Governments. I want to place my case as fairly before the Council as possible, and if in doing so I quote any opinion which any Hon'ble Member thinks is incorrect, I hope he will pardon me and not think that I have any desire to mis-state the case . . . .

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur :—" May I interrupt you? Most of the opinions you have quoted are against the Bill, especially Bengal, Madras, Burma and Assam . . .

The Vice-President:—" May I ask if the Hon'ble Member is making a personal explanation?"

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" Now, I come to the second class opinions, namely, the opinions of the Judicial officers, particularly of the High Courts, the Chief Courts and the Judicial Commissioners. I may say at once that the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay say that they have no criticism to offer. Then I take the High Court of Allahabad. The opinions of the Judges there are, generally speaking, in favour of this Bill. This is the letter of the Registrar, High Court of Judicature, Allahabad.

" Sir, In reply to your letter . . .

The Vice-President :—" I should like to remind the Hon'ble Member that it is not the practice here to read long extracts to the Council, but to quote from them as shortly as possible."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—" The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Walsh has no criticisms to offer. Almost all other Hon'ble Judges have given favourable opinions in regard to this Bill The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bannerjee's opinion is very important. It is only a few lines and I will, with your permission, Sir, read it. ' The proposed measure seems to me to be unobjectionable. It is only an enabling one. Under the strict Hindu law inter-marriage between persons belonging to different castes is not wholly interdicted, but entails degradation. In modern times among some advanced people such inter-marriages have taken place. It is desirable that the issue of such marriages should be declared to be legitimate. Many of those who have contracted marriages of this description are not prepared to make the declaration required by Act III of 1872. They are entitled to relief. The proposed legislation will not affect the general Hindu community'.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Tudball says, 'I approve'.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Rafique says ' . . . Speaking personally, I approve of the provisions of the Bill and think that it is a move in the right direction'.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Piggott thinks 'that he would recommend that such advance should take the shape of some amendment of Act III of 1872, making it possible for persons to avail themselves of its provisions without declaring themselves not to be Hindus'.

"Generally speaking, as I say, the opinions of the Judges of the Allahabad High Court are in favour of the Bill.

"Then I take the opinions of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces. I may say that the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces concurs with the opinions of the two Assistant Judicial Commissioners under him. He quotes their opinions which are in favour of this Bill and says he also is of the same opinion.

"Then I take Madras. In Madras some of the Judges express no opinion, while about six Judges who express opinion are in favour. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Shastri is against. I will read the opinion of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sadashiv Iyer which is very important. He says:—'I entirely agree with the Bill and the Statement of Objects and Reasons. Under the Vedic Hindu Law such marriages between members of different castes were clearly valid, though they were (as in western countries even now as regards marriages between members of different classes in society) socially disapproved of, and in later times even moral stigma was attached to the parties thereto. Exceptionally they were always allowed and even approved by social opinion, especially in the case of kings and nobles who were freely allowed to take wives from inferior or superior castes. The legal prohibition is a custom of very recent origin being based upon what I believe (with the greatest respect to those who differ) the erroneous view that even what might be called a negative custom (that is, the absence for a long time of what was an undoubtedly a legal practice according to the Shastras) is binding as law now, especially if a forged text or a recent unscrupulous commentator enacts that the practice is prohibited in the Kaliyuga'.

"Sir, I am not going to quote other opinions and trouble this Council, but this particular opinion is so important and is so well reasoned that I should like to read one more paragraph from it.

'As regards public opposition to the Bill, we must expect much noisy opposition from the ultra-orthodox Hindus belonging to all kinds of political parties. Radical politicians like the Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar, advanced congress politicians like the respected and influential Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya, influential wealthy Brahman and other noblemen like the Maharaja of Darbhanga, wealthy educated reactionaries with high University degrees (especially if they have been "good fellows" and unbelievers in their youth and have reacted to orthodoxy), even influential non-Brahmans like Diwan Bahadur Rajaratna Mudaliyar, C.I.E. (though they are anti-home rulers and anti-Brahmans as they opposed even Mr. Basu's Bill), and most Hindu Matadhipatis whose influence is, however, waning, will all be found ranged together in opposition. But on the other side will be found most of the influential Hindu Theosophists, the Arya Samajists, the Hindu Social Reformers, the members of the Brahmo and Prarthana Samajes and their sympathisers most of whom are within the Hindu religious fold, the Ramakrishna and Vivekananda mutts and their sympathisers, the majority of the younger generation of the educated Hindus (and this, in my opinion, is very important). The great majority of illiterate Hindus will be really indifferent, though, through natural conservatism, they might attend in large numbers the meetings convened by the influential opponents of the Bill. With the safeguarding provisions which I have ventured to recommend the agitation will be mostly artificial and innocuous. Permissive legislation (like the Widow Re-marriage Act) and even prohibitive and substantial legislation like the Acts relating to the abolition of Sati, the age of consent and the removal of native converts' disabilities were accepted by the Hindus whose national characteristic is tolerance and who are intuitively non-aggressive towards permissive and even positive legislation when it is really in consonance with justice and equity and with the spirit of the ancient Shastras though against the hydra-headed custom which differs in different places and different centres and hence has not got the strength of unity for the purpose of sustained effort against good legislation. May I, in conclusion, very respectfully suggest that just as the Government was not afraid in the olden days to range itself on the side of Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar, M. G. Ranade, K. T. Telang, R. Raghunatha Rao, Sir Sankaran Nair (in connection with the Malabar Marriage Regulation) and other sober, religious and social reformers against unreasonable opposition to beneficent social legislation (opposition led by gentlemen even of the influence and standing of Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter, Sir T. Madhava Rao, the Editor of the 'Amrita Bazar Patrika,' etc.) it is their duty to actively support this permissive legislation introduced by the Hon'ble Mr. Patel which is so long overdue but whose need is almost urgent in these days when social changes have to be made pari passu with political changes if a genuine Hindu nationality as a valuable and not an obstructive element of a larger Indian nationality is to be built up?'

"So far, Sir, about Madras. Then, again, the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh is entirely in my favour, and the Judges of the Patna High Court are generally speaking, in favour of this Bill. The Bill is further strongly supported by the Chief Court of Burma. Thus you will find that as a matter of fact there is no High Court, or Chief Court, or Court of Judicial Commissioner which is opposed to the Bill. Excepting the Bombay and the Calcutta High Courts, who do not express any opinion, all other highest judicial courts in India are in favour of this Bill.

"Now, Sir, I come to the third class of opinions, namely, the opinions of the Hindu community as a whole. In this connection my contention, Sir, is that the Bill has found support from a very very great majority of the Hindus numerically speaking. You must remember this fact that the Hindu community does not consist of one class or community. The Hindu community consists of several classes and communities, and if you analyse the opinions in connection with this Bill as expressed by all these classes, you will find as a result of your analysis that a great majority of the Hindu community, numerically speaking, is in my favour. I may say at once that the whole community of my Sudra brothers and sisters is entirely in favour of this Bill, and I can say without fear of contradiction, Sir, that almost the entire non-Brahmin community is in my favour. Having in my favour the non-Brahmin community and the Sudra community (and in non-Brahmin of course I include the Kshatriyas and the Vaishyas) there remain only the Brahmin community. As I have said, I do not wish to lead any attack on any particular community. I quite realise that it is only human nature that one who is in possession of power does not like to part with it so easily. I also recognise this fact, Sir, that a great many supporters as you will see from the voluminous opinions that have been received on this Bill are from the Brahmin community, and I am sure the whole country is indebted to those liberal-minded members of the Brahmin community who have come forward openly to help this noble cause. But I cannot lose sight of the fact that the opposition to the Bill mainly comes from that community. Therefore I submit, Sir, that this Council has no business, and the Local Governments have no business, to say that the majority of Hindus is against this measure. You may say with some justification that the majority of the Brahmins is against my Bill, and I am perfectly willing to accept that statement, but I cannot understand how any one can say that the majority of the Hindu community is opposed to the Bill. Then, Sir, the opposition to this Bill is nothing compared with the opposition that you had in connection with social reform legislation in days gone by. When the Suttee Bill was on the anvil you had a solemn memorial signed by very very influential Hindu gentlemen submitted to Government stating that marital rites of the Hindu community would be jeopardised, that chastity among women would be an unknown quantity, that husbands would be poisoned and murdered, and that social life would be intolerable. That was the state of Hindu feeling then. In spite of such opposition that Bill was passed. Then you had a tremendous uproar and excitement in the Hindu community when the Age of Consent Bill was put on the Statute-book. Then, again, when you had the question of widow remarriage under consideration, the feeling was that the whole of the Hindu society was going to be upset and the purity of the Hindu widow was going to be destroyed. That was then the feeling among the Hindu community, and when the Removal of Disabilities Act was passed almost the whole Hindu community was up in arms against the Bill and charged Government with having introduced legislation for the purpose of encouraging Christianity. I may say, Sir, in view of all this, the opposition to my Bill is not even one-hundredth part of the opposition that you had to face from time to time in the matter of social legislation in the past.

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

"When I say that the opposition mainly comes from one community I am bound to give this Council some proof in support of this sweeping statement. The Chief Court of Burma supports this Bill, and the Registrar of that Court in his letter to the Government of India states :—

'I am directed to state that most of the judicial officers consulted are of opinion that the proposed legislation is desirable. The District Judge of Hanthawaddy and Insein, himself a Hindu gentleman, is in favour of it. Such opposition as there is against the proposed measure appears to emanate from Brahmin circles'.

"I am sorry, Sir, but that is the opinion of the Chief Court of Burma.

"Then, Sir, I will refer this Council to the opinion of the Bombay Government. The Bombay Government referred this Bill to the non-official members of the Legislative Council and received their opinions The following is the summary of those opinions :—

'The opinions of the Hindu non-official members of the Legislative Council follow much the same lines. The Bill is unconditionally supported by the Hon'ble Mr. Chunilal Mehta, a Gujrati Bania, the Hon'ble Mr Lallubhai Samaldas, a Gujrati Nagar Brahmin, the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur Tekchand Udhavdas, a Sindhi Amil, and the Hon'ble Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, also a Sindhi Amil. The Hon'ble Mr. R. P. Paranjpye, a Chitpawan Brahmin, the Hon'ble Mr. G. K. Parekh, a Gujrati Bania, the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur Rao Saheb Harilal Desai, a Gujrati Patidar, and the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. S. Naik, a Dharwar Brahmin, (probably a Desasth) also support the Bill with certain modifications. Against the Bill are the Hon'ble Mr. P. A. Desai, a Brahmin whose sub-caste is not known, and the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur G. K. Sathe, a Chitpawan Brahmin.

'The conclusion is that the opposition roughly consists of the religious leaders and their following and the more orthodox sections of the Brahmin community ; the supporters are mostly "Reformers", a few Brahmins and educated non-Brahmins generally.'

"It seems clear, Sir, that when the Bill was referred to the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council the only opponents that could be found were the two Brahmins. I do not for a moment minimise the services of those Brahmin members who have supported the Bill, but the fact remains that no non-Brahmin Member has opposed it.

"Then, in the Bombay Presidency of which I can speak with some knowledge, I know that the political conference at Gujrat, besides the social conferences, passed a resolution supporting the principle of this Bill. Sindh is a cosmopolitan division and is not opposed to my Bill so far as I know. It is only where the Brahmin predominates that the opposition is strong. It is in the Deccan that there is this trouble of Brahmins and non-Brahmins, of Mahrattas and Brahmins, of Lingayats and Brahmins, and there you hear a good deal of noise about this Bill. You hear of lots of meetings in favour and of lots of meetings against. The District Judge of Poona, Mr. P. E. Percival, what does he say ? It is only one line, Sir. He says :—

'In view of the strong opposition, especially among the Brahmin community of Poona and elsewhere Government will no doubt decide to be conspicuously neutral in respect of the Bill.'

[Mr. V. J. Patel.] [25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

"I am sorry to have this statement from an eminent judge like my friend Mr. Percival that, because the Brahmins oppose the Bill the Government should remain neutral and neglect the interest of a very large majority of the Hindus. I say again, I am forced to the conviction that the opposition mainly comes from one community, but there it is; the fact must be faced, as I said in the beginning.

"Now, we come to the Madras Presidency. I will just read to this Council the opinion of non-Brahmins expressed in a conference which they held in connection with this Bill. It says:—

'This Conference gives its hearty support and approves the principle embodied in the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill regarding the validity of marriages between different Hundu castes.'

The Secretary of the Conference adds:—

'I should like to draw your attention to the significance of this Resolution. It embodies the considered opinion of a very large section of the non-Brahmin community of the Presidency. Taken in conjunction with the support given to the Bill by the South Indian Liberal Federation, it practically amounts to a full endorsement of the principle of intercaste marriages by the non-Brahmin Hindus. The conference has not expressed any opinion on those questions of inheritance which are intimately connected with it besides giving their adherence to the underlying principle.'

That means, Sir, that the whole of the non-Brahmin community of Madras—and I am sure the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma will support me in this statement—is, generally speaking, in support of this Bill. There is, of course, a keen difference of opinion on certain political questions between the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins in Madras and we know that. But what we are concerned with here is, whether the majority of the Hindus support this Bill or not. The only issue before this Council is, whether the great majority of the Hindu community is in favour of this Bill or is opposed to it Several Local Governments seem to suggest that there is a great majority of Hindu opinion against the Bill. But, if you analyse the opinions, you will find that it is not so. The fact is that it is mainly one community, the vocal community, the community that is in power, who kicks up a row and seems excited, and the Local Governments feel as if the whole Hindu community is against my Bill. That is really not so. I will just quote to you the opinion of the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter.

"The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter writes to the Government of Bengal a long letter, and I will only read the relevant portion.

'Lastly, I desire to point out that out of about 21 millions of Hindus in my province over 10 millions are so-called untouchables. These classes have their peculiar marriage custom and amongst some of these classes inter-caste marriages and, at any rate, inter-sub-caste marriages are permissible. Considering that the Brahmins in Bengal are a little over a million, the Kayasthas about the same number and the Baidyas less than one hundred thousand, it is very unreasonable on the part of some section of the members of these higher castes to oppose a Bill which will ultimately solve marriage problems of the so-called lower castes. With the advance of education and improvement in the economic conditions and social life of the so-called lower castes, the necessity of a marriage law of the type intended in the Bill will become all the greater, and if the so-called higher castes have the well-being of the future generations of the so-called lower castes in view, then far from opposing a Bill of this character they should have toleration enough to welcome it, specially as the Bill will compel no one to marry under its provisions.'

"According to this opinion in Bengal also the opposition is confined mostly to the Brahmin community.

"As I said, Sir, I have my best supporters in the Brahmin community, and I am very much grateful to them, and my non-Brahmin brothers and sisters and my Sudra brothers and sisters will also be certainly very much thankful to them. Even in this very Council you find a good many Brahmin members in support of this Bill; my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea, the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde and the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. All these gentlemen are Brahmins, but they are Brahmins of a different type. They understand the situation, they see which way the wind blows, they see how the world goes; they realize the situation and they say:

[25TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel.]

'Well, if we want a step towards political equality, we must be prepared also to grant a step towards social equality.'

"Now, Sir, I do not wish to trouble the Council with a number of opinions. I had a mind to read some of the opinions which are very weighty, but as you, Sir, have asked me not to read many opinions to this Council, I do not wish to take up the time of the Council I will turn to other considerations. This is a motion for reference to Select Committee. Now any discussion of a Bill must necessarily relate, firstly, to the principle of the Bill and, secondly, to the details. At this stage according to the well-understood practice of the Council, we discuss the principle of the Bill; and if we agree to it we refer the Bill to the Select Committee who settle the details. Of course we suggest for the consideration of the Select Committee certain vital matters of detail during the discussion on the motion, but that is all. So the discussion at this stage must principally be confined to the principle, namely, whether inter-caste marriages should be in law valid or not. That is the main principle of the Bill. As I have said, this Bill will in the first place remove doubts regarding the validity of the inter-sub-caste marriages; that will be one effect; and no Hindu can or will object to this as far as I know; it being in consonance with the entire Hindu opinion. Then, again, if you look at it from the point of view of equity, you know that hundreds of inter-caste marriages and inter-sub-caste marriages have taken place in India, and what are you going to do with these people? What is the status of the issue of such marriages? No doubt the parties live as husband and wife, but they do not know whether the courts of law, Mr. Justice So and So will decide whether they are in law husband and wife or not. So the whole thing is in suspense and doubt. People do not know, although they have been living together for years, they do not know whether they are in law husband and wife and whether their children are legitimate. As a matter of fact, so far as inter-caste marriages are concerned, it is practically certain that such marriages are invalid and the issue illegitimate. So far as inter-sub-caste marriages are concerned, it is all doubtful; in some cases the Council will see that the parties were absolutely innocent. They did not know the state of the law; perhaps they were minors when they were married, and in all cases certainly the issues are absolutely innocent. Are they to be allowed to suffer? That is the question. Are you not going to give a helping hand to these people who are innocent, who for no fault of their own have to suffer? So as I say equity is also in my favour; you have got to take some step to validate these marriages. In some cases of course the parties believe that inter-caste marriages are allowed by the Shastras and no one has any business to say that they should not follow the Hindu Shastras. They bonâ fide believe, and rightly perhaps that the Hindu Shastras do allow such marriages, and they want to follow the Shastras. Why should you now, why should courts of law interfere and say 'No; though your shastras allow, we shall not recognise these marriages.?'

"Then there is a small minority of the non-Brahmin community that here and there join hands with the great majority of the Brahmins in opposing this Bill; they have done so really from some sort of influence or from want of proper appreciation of the effect of this measure. They do not realise that this Bill is merely a permissive measure; they lose sight of that fact or they are not told about it; they are most of them illiterate poor people; they do not understand these things, the intricacies of the law and so on; and the way some interested and clever people manage to put the case against the Bill mislead them. The fact is that the opposition from that small minority of non-Brahmins is due mostly to my mind to want of appreciation on their part of the provisions of the Bill. The Bill is really permissive; there is no compulsion; no one is asked to marry out of his caste. At the same time, what is to be remembered is this, my Bill preserves the autonomy of the caste which the present interpretation of the Hindu law by the Judges seeks to destroy. I maintain that my Bill is intended to help the autonomy of the caste, to help to preserve the power of the caste; we know it is no shutting our eyes to the fact that inter-caste and inter-sub-caste marriages have been condoned, and I go further and say, in several cases encouraged by the castes concerned. These castes do not mind them, they sometimes welcome such unions, and allow full social intermixture with the parties and their issue, and yet when for some reason the case goes to a court of law the court of law says 'Whatever your caste may do or has done, we do not care; we say that the marriage is illegal; we say that the issues are illegitimate; we say that the so-called wife will not be entitled to maintenance; and so on.'

That is the position the law says one thing; the caste may do another. I say my Bill really helps the caste to preserve its autonomy. There is nothing in my Bill to prevent caste 'hanging' if they like the parties to the marriage; caste may say 'well, you are going against the rules of caste, we do not regard you as a Hindu, or we excommunicate you.' My Bill does not interfere with caste, let castes do what do they like. I want caste to preserve its power, its autonomy, but the law is against us, the judges are in the way, they say 'we do not care what the caste has done.' My plea is that by this Bill you will help caste to keep its autonomy, to keep its power. Let them deal with the parties to these marriages, why should law interfere? It is the privilege of caste to deal with its offending members. I have done. I do not wish to take up any more time of this Council. I will take the opportunity on the third reading of the Bill, if it comes to that stage, to once again emphasise the need for this Bill. I trust my Brahmin friends will excuse me if I have said anything to offend them. I have said what I have felt."

3-18 P. M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—" Sir, I move as an amendment to the motion already before the Council 'that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes and all the non-official members of this Council.' In moving this amendment, I should like to explain the position of the Government in regard to this measure. The Government of India regard the Bill as a liberal measure with which individual members of the Government have every sympathy. It is a permissive measure as I understand it; in no sense is it obligatory upon any person. My own experience is that the best educated Indian opinion I have met, at any rate in the province with which I am familiar, is strongly in favour of the proposals. Many of us indeed feel that it is unreasonable that adult persons who desire to marry should be prohibited by law from doing so because they happen to belong to different castes. Nor am I myself much impressed with the argument that this law will strike a blow at the foundations of the Hindu religion. This argument has been used too often. It was advanced when Sati was prohibited, at the time of the Widow Re-marriage Act, when the Caste Disabilities Act was enacted, and later on when the Age of Consent Act was passed. We are many of us unwilling to believe that the Hindu religion does not rest on some more solid basis than that. I am told also that in some Indian States there is legislation comparable to the Bill before the Council. I have no definite information, however, on the point and speak subject to correction.

"I think the Council will sympathise with this attitude of Government towards the Bill. At the same time, this is a matter in which festina lente is a very good watchword, and it is most important we should have a definite pronouncement of the views of non-official members on the Bill. There is a great cleavage of public opinion on the merits or demerits of the proposal. I cannot myself agree that the Hon'ble Member has presented a very accurate picture of this feeling. I have no doubt that his affection for his own measure has in some way influenced him in overestimating the value of opinions in support of the Bill and minimizing that of those opposed to him. He said he wished to put the matter clearly before us. I am sure that was his intention, but I do not think that any person who reads through these opinions carefully can accept the view that the majority of orthodox Hindu opinion is not at the present moment opposed to the Bill. It is useless enumerating Local Governments as if they were to be counted on your fingers. To cite the local administration of Coorg, as if it was of the same importance as a large Presidency, is not the way in which the value of local opinion is really ascertained, nor do I think, if I may say so, that the Hon'ble Member was correct in his attack on Brahmins as the real opponents of this measure. There are indications that other castes feel very strongly on this point. Then I was told—and I heard this with amazement—that even if vocal opinion was against the Bill Government should neglect this opposition and that they should be guided by the opinions of the silent millions. How often have I been told in this Council that there is one opinion in India, and that that is the vocal opinion of the educated classes. When any official has ever suggested that there is any other opinion, he is told that it is some invention or delusion of his, but now I am asked to neglect public opinion as voiced by Brahmins. Apart, however, from the justice of this attack on the Brahmins, if I had been in my Hon'ble friend's place, I should have avoided it as a matter of tactics. In the first place, my experience of this Council is that many of the acutest Indian intellects have always been Brahmins. I once said a word about Brahmins in the Council on a former occasion and brought a storm about my ears. I roused in truth a hornet's nest and I have avoided doing so again. I assure my Hon'ble friend that this is the most dangerous hornet's nest he has ever disturbed. If there is one thing which Hindu Members in this Council will not bear, it is any suspicion of what they think is an unfair attack upon the Brahmin community. I have now placed before Council the views of Government on the Bill. There is a natural feeling of sympathy with this measure, but, in view of the opposition from the orthodox community, we seek to obtain the advice of non-official members of this Council as to our wisest course, and for this reason I have moved the amendment now before the Council. We shall largely be guided by the opinion of the non-official members who represent largely the educated opinion of the country.

"It is for that reason, and in order to secure an effectual presentment of that opinion, that I have proposed that this Bill should be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes (who, as Hon'ble Members know, is bound under the rules to be Chairman of every Select Committee) and of non-officials Otherwise, indeed, it is very difficult for Government to ascertain the views of individual members.

"I must, however, say that while I propose this course we retain liberty of action, if we think necessary owing to circumstances, either to defer the further consideration of this measure until the enlarged Legislative Councils come into being, or to re-publish it or to take any other line that may appear to us to be most proper in the whole circumstances. I should be glad if this motion is carried, and I may say that it will be carried because I shall use the official majority, and I have reason to believe also that my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel will not oppose it. If it is carried we shall be glad to have the views of the non-official members not only on the details of the Bill—and I am not going to have it said that the Government have accepted the principle of this Bill in the sense that they mean to pass it in the Council—but also on the question whether the non-official members of this Council think that it would be right to pass this Bill at the present juncture, or whether they think that public opinion is not yet ripe for it and that it should be postponed until we have a more representative Council. Sir, I have been criticised because I have included persons other than Hindus in the Select Committee, and I will again explain very shortly my reasons for doing so. I hope I am not detaining the Council too long. To my mind it is carrying the idea of communal representation to an intolerable length to say that Muhammadans are not to vote on a measure of this kind if they so desire. I did not hear it suggested the other day when the Cutchi Memon Bill was introduced by my friend Mr. Jaffer, that the few Muhammadan Members alone in this Council should vote on it. Such a thing was never suggested; in fact, I believe, the Bill received some support from a particular Hindu Member. There are also some Muhammadan Members in this Council, and other non-Hindu Members who represent mixed constituencies—constituencies partly consisting of Hindus. Would it have been right for the Government to say to deprive these constituencies of their right to discuss this important question because they have chosen to elect a Muhammadan to represent them in this Council? Have not Government also often been told that Members of this Council are in the first place Indians and not merely Hindus or Muhammadans and that they are in closer touch with their own people than any of you officials can be? Is there not any truth in this argument? I admit the Muhammadan and the Hindu in this country may in many cases have more intimate knowledge of social matters affecting Indians than any of us can have. In any case, however, I do not seek to force any Muhammadan to sit on this committee. I merely give him an opportunity of doing so. I hope that many will serve on it, and that they will give the Government the benefit of their views on this question, of their knowledge and their experience. We have no power, however, to force them to do so and if the conscience or feeling of any member prohibits him from sitting on this committee, let him abstain from it. The Government will lose the benefit of the assistance they might have rendered, but this will be a matter of regret; we cannot in any way enforce our wishes.

"Finally, I wish to make it clear that, while the Government are referring this matter entirely to the non-official committee, they quite realise that the responsibility for the ultimate decision will rest with them. So long as the present form of government remains, it would be idle for Government to attempt to get rid of responsibility in this matter. But what we seek in this matter, is the advice and help of all the non-official members of this Council, on a question of very great difficulty, the difficulties, the intricacies and the perplexities of which we, as Europeans, possibly cannot understand as fully as many Members of this Council.

"There are at least one or two official Indian Members on this Council, and I have been asked why I did not include them on the committee, but the answer is very simple. We seek in this matter to obtain non-official opinion. I am, however, prepared in this case to ask any Indian officials there are, should the committee so desire, to sit with them and assist them in any manner possible with their advice and co-operation and that, I hope, will meet the views of those who think that Hindu officials should be put on this committee. Sir, I hope that the amendment which I have moved will commend itself to the Council."

3-32 P.M. The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:— "Sir, at the express desire of my Hon'ble friend, I wish to withdraw my * amendment, but before I do so I wish to clear the position of my community towards the Bill . . . ."

The Vice-President:—"I only called upon the Hon'ble Member to move his amendment. If he does not desire to move it, he cannot make a speech now."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ebrahim Haroon Jaffer:— "I withdraw the amendment, Sir."

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Member does not move his amendment."

3-33 P.M. The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi of Kassimbazar:—"Sir, I had an unpleasant duty of opposing this Bill when it was introduced in Council in September 1918, and I have unfortunately the same unpleasant duty of opposing it to-day. I know, Sir, that the Bill is not a compulsory one, and is only a permissive measure; yet I have very great fears that, as soon as it gets into the Statute-book, it will begin to disorganize Hindu society and make a wreck of its existing organization. Of the eight different kinds of marriages known and sanctioned by the Hindu Shastras, many have now ceased to exist and hold sway, and I have reasons to believe that the operations of this Bill will undermine the sacramental character of those that still remain. Once this wedge is driven into the economy of Hindu social life, the observance of all traditional Hindu customs and the elementary principles of our domestic organization will begin to crumble to pieces in no time. The Hindu community still consider the caste system as the foundation of the whole Hindu social edifice, and inter-marriage among castes, especially among superior and inferior castes, is regarded by them as an encroachment on their religious system, as the Hindu domestic ceremonies and social customs are based on religion, and the religious and social system of the Hindu are so linked together, that it is impossible for a Hindu to marry outside the caste permitted by Hinduism and still remain a Hindu. It is impossible to effect the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's object by a Bill containing a single declaration and providing for no procedure. The Bill provides for no ceremony and no form of marriage, either religious or civil. A religious marriage between persons of different castes cannot now take place under the Hindu law, and a civil ceremony can only be provided in the circumstances laid down by the existing Act, namely, upon a declaration of parties that they are no longer Hindus But without prescribing some form of ceremony there can be no legal marriage, and, as it stands, the Bill would be either ineffective or introduce, at best, a sort of marriage that would neither be welcome nor desirable in good society. I hope, Sir, the present Council will be no party to such a measure of a revolutionary character, and that it will not be referred to a Select Committee at all."

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh:—"Mr. Vice-President, 3-37 P.M. I desire to oppose both the motions with regard to the Bill going to the Select Committee stage, but before doing so, I should like to make an observation of a personal character. Sir, some of us, I may better refer to myself, have to labour under a peculiar difficulty of which I desire to make a confession before the Council for its due appreciation. While addressing the Council I, in common with others who are deficient in public speaking, have to perform at one and the same time three-fold duties :

Duty No. 1. To control myself from natural nervousness due to being unaccustomed, owing to several causes, to such ordeals. The legs tremble and the heart throbs though the tongue speaketh by pressure from within.

Duty No. 2. To develop ideas and thoughts systematically. This is not at all difficult if the debate is a congenial one and I am well conversant with the subject-matter under discussion.

Duty No. 3. To translate those ideas and thoughts into foreign language which forms the medium of giving expression to them. This last duty is arduous and very trying.

"It is for these reasons that I have to lean upon manuscript speeches about which to insinuate that they are written by some one else is simply extremely unbecoming, to use a very mild term. If my Hon'ble colleagues, the official members, had to face half of these difficulties and if the performance of even half the duties mentioned above were to fall on them, I would certainly give them credit if they could carry on the debates with as much eloquence as they do now. But in that case there is one thing of which I am quite certain. None of them would have ventured to liken me to a gramophone entertaining the Council just as the records might be put into the machine. . .

The Vice-President:—"I would ask the Hon'ble Member to address himself to the motion before the Council; I have heard nothing relevant to it yet."

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh:—"I could not catch what the Hon'ble the Vice-President said."

The Vice-President:—"I asked the Hon'ble Member to confine himself to the motion before the Council"

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh :—"It is only a personal matter."

The Vice-President :—"We are not discussing gramophones."

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh :—"The Bill which it is proposed to refer to a Select Committee cannot claim my sympathy. There are special misgivings as to the questions of succession and inheritance, and it is due to that, that great opposition has been raised against the Bill. If the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, who has introduced this Bill, would kindly re-draft it and clear up such points, I think there might not be so much opposition as there is at present. Hindu society, we know, can no longer remain knit together in the trammels which the society provided for itself to remain compact in ancient times or much later, as the case may be. It is no good to go into that controversy. It is true that in ancient times the society survived inroads upon its social structure by the artificial measures which it adopted, but now the civilizing Western influences are too great and forcible to let that structure remain intact in its former or present-day condition. I fully admit that certain very important changes in its social usages and practices are highly imperative. These changes are already taking place imperceptibly, but surely. My submission is, is it at all proper and expedient to rush this measure and cause a shock to the community? In my own humble way, I am also a social reformer, but not a too enthusiastic and head-long reformer such as would cause an eruption in society. The rural population, which is the main population of India, is still quite ignorant of this Bill. Go to a village and inform the elders that such and such a Bill has been introduced into the Council, and I am sure the very information will be treated by them with contempt. What will be their state of feelings when in course of time they will come to know of its effects? The Bill will touch small and big properties whose proprietors and owners, as well as their collaterals, have always prided themselves upon their blue blood. They may be wrong or they may be right, but that is another thing. The question is, will not this measure be shocking to their sentiments and instincts?

"Well, Sir, it has always been our complaint, and to a certain extent, justly, that the present day Councils do not represent Indian public opinion at all. Now we have been granted real and responsible representative institutions. A Select Committee formed from the members of this Council cannot claim to have the weight and representative character as the one that might be formed by the reformed Councils. I ask, Sir, what weight, what influence, what sanction, what authority, will the decision of a Select Committee of this Council carry upon the Hindu mind? I must exclude the official and Muhammadan members because the Bill does not touch them, and their opinions cannot influence the Hindu public in this matter. Does the Council believe that the remaining ten or twelve members are entitled to come to a decision on a question of such momentous importance?

"In this country all the ills to which the people are subjected are attributed to the commissions and omissions of the Government. Is it wise to exasperate the Hindu public mind that a foreign Government has imposed upon them an enactment subversive of the old order of things? The aloofness of the Government of India from the Bill on the words that fell from the lips of the Hon'ble the Home Member when the Bill was introduced or what he has said to-day have not reached and will not reach the ears of the masses and so they, I mean the Government, will have to bear the odium. The news of the grant of a certain measure of Swaraj has certainly reached to a certain extent to every nook and corner of the country. I should think that it would be far better to take up this question when the new constitution is formed. In that case it will carry more weight and authority and people will appreciate its real import owing to its sanction from their own representatives. I believe the Deceased Wife's Sister's Bill took very long before it was passed into law in the mother of Parliaments. England is one of the most advanced countries in the world. Taking that fact into consideration, I hope I will not be thought guilty of recommending dilatoriness for a measure at the importance of which no one can cavil. One year is not a very long time to wait.

"The Hon'ble Mover has, unfortunately, brought forward the Brahmin and non-Brahmin controversy in this connection. I am sorry to say that the Kshytriya community which held sway over this country for a long time, and which even now owns about two-thirds of this country, is bitterly opposed to this Bill. I may remind the Hon'ble Mover that the Hon'ble Raja Moti Chand is not a Brahmin, but he is opposed to the Bill. The Hon'ble Raja Chandra Chur Singh is not a Brahmin, but he is opposed to the Bill. The Hon'ble Lala Sukhbir Sinha, one of the leading members of the Legislative Council of the United Provinces, is also opposed to the Bill. So it is not a question of Brahmin and non-Brahmin; it is a question of the social reform of the Hindu community, and, I think, it would be proper for this Council to take as its guide the public opinion of the Hindu community."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, when this Bill was originally introduced, I supported the principle of it. I adhere to my support of the principle, but I raised certain questions for consideration which do not seem to have appealed to my friend Mr. Patel, and he has not alluded to them at all in the course of his remarks asking for the appointment of a Committee. If the question be as to whether this Bill should be passed into law as it is, I would most emphatically say 'no', although I adhere to the principle of the Bill, because I believe that the Bill as it stands, if passed into an enactment, would do as much harm, as perhaps more harm, than good. We, educated Indians, who foresee what the future of the country is likely to be are naturally extremely anxious to permit those who believe in the tenets of the Hindu religion and are moved by its sublime philosophy to continue to be Hindus and yet live what to them are reformed lives. It is for that purpose, therefore, that we heartily appreciate any movement which tries to encourage the freedom of marriage amongst the various sections of the Hindu community Therein we are at one with the Hon'ble Mr. Patel; but I think, Sir, he has done wrong in thinking that he has the support of the vast mass of the Hindu community or the non-Brahmin community in his favour. If I were to act upon what I believe would be the mandate of my constituency, consisting mostly of non-Brahmins, I should certainly not be prepared to vote for this Bill at all, and I feel certain that if it were to come to a question of taking the view of the community and basing the election of a representative on that view, I should be surprised if very many who were in favour of the Bill would be returned to the Council. But that is not the position which we have taken up here, because we believe that in enabling the passing of this Bill, we would be doing something which would really build up the future structure of the Indian community. Therefore, his remarks about the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins were, I think, rather unhappy. It is the custom and the fashion of the day to explain away any inconvenient positions by attributing all the inconveniences and the difficulties to the Brahmin. And here the Brahmin comes in as a very handy instrument in the hand of Mr. Patel to explain his difficulty about the position of the Hindu community, but the Brahmin gains by this Bill which makes him a present of the girls of all the other communities to choose from in marriage which he has been prevented from doing by customary law for the last three or four centuries. Wherein does he lose? He does not lose anything at all. The Brahmin is monogamous partly because he cannot marry more girls than one in his community owing to the limitations of the sex ratio. In the good old days, the Brahmin married into all the other castes. He never lost caste, he married into all the other castes. The law of inheritance provided a gradation and, consequently, there was absolutely no difficulty in his way. But it was the Brahmin who saw that the Hindu community would not prosper if this unfair advantage were given to him, and he said 'no'. Now, unless this Bill says 3-16 P.M.

that the parties to a contract of marriage under this Bill are to be monogamous, the result may be disastrous to the Hindu community because it would encourage polygamous marriages in future on a large scale since Hindu society and Hindu sentiment do not condemn the association of men of the higher castes with women of the lower castes. A Kshtriya will not lose caste if he marries a Vaishya or Sudra. Consequently, Sir, to bring in the Brahmin caste for the purpose of explaining the opposition seems to me rather unnecessary and useless. I do not go into the statistics of those who support and those who are against the Bill. If I had known that my learned friend would have a fling at the Brahmins I should have collected them, but I know as a matter of fact how the South Indian Federation happened to change its views rather recently. When Mr. Basu's Bill was discussed and I was in Madras, and I heartily supported it, I knew how angry I made many of my non-Brahmin friends there, but some of them now seem to think that somehow the privileges of the Brahmins would be effected by this Bill and, consequently, they have suddenly turned round and have taken a different attitude. But I think they no more represent the non-Brahmins of the Southern Presidency than I represent the Brahmins of the Southern Presidency in this matter. The vast majority of the Brahmins to which community I have the honour to belong, as well as the non-Brahmins of the Southern Presidency would, if a vote were taken on this, be against it; but that is a different point.

"I come now, Sir, to the point I was trying to reach. It was this. Is it open to this Council in the Select Committee to treat merely as a matter of detail very vast questions of principle, namely, as to whether the offspring of marriages under this new Bill, if passed into law, would be governed by the ancient Hindu law which would be revived for the purpose, or whether it would be necessary to make a new law for them?

"What is to be the law of adoption in their case? What is to be the law of marriage ceremonial in their case? It is perfectly true that in the old days anuloma marriages were very common, though public sentiment was against pratiloma marriages. My Hon'ble friend was perfectly right in saying that; they were not treated as unlawful although it came to the same thing, because the offspring of a pratiloma marriage got hardly anything by way of inheritance. The result of our not making any provision by way of rules of inheritance under this Bill would be this. Section 8 of the Mitakshara would in the case of communities, in the Southern Presidency, Orissa and Bihar and other persons also, govern the laws of succession. It says the sons of a Brahmin by a Brahmin wife shall have four shares, by a Kshatriya wife, three, by a Vaishya wife two, and by Sudra one. Out of ten shares, the children by a Kshatriya wife three or two, or one, by a Vaishya wife two; so that if a Brahmin marries into all the four castes the shares would be four or three or two or one out of ten. I do not know whether it is the desire of my Hon'ble friend to perpetuate that law of succession; at any rate I would not be a party to it.

"Then, again, my learned friend conveniently forgets that his Bill would provide for pratiloma marriages, and I should not be a party to a Bill which draws any distinction between Anuloma and Pratiloma marriages. I would equally interpose no legal obstacles in the way of men of the lower castes marrying women of the higher castes; but the law of succession is so precarious that the children of these unions would hardly get anything. What is to be done with them? Therefore, I do think the Select Committee would be bound to go into the question of succession and recommend a rule which would not be the Hindu law rule, which may be a very equitable rule, but which would still not be in consonance with the ancient Hindu law. Therefore, as to whether it would be competent to the Select Committee to make a new law in regard to succession—treating it as a matter of detail—is a question I leave to the official members who will have to dispose of this matter.

"Then the question of adoption will come in. Supposing a Brahmin marries a Brahmin wife and a Sudra wife; if he dies issueless, who is to adopt? Is it to be the Brahmin wife or the Sudra wife or both jointly? Is the Sudra wife to adopt a Brahmin or Sudra boy, or is the Brahmin wife to adopt a Sudra or Brahmin boy? What is to be the law? Among the Sudras illegitimate sons would be entitled to a share, and the rules of adoption are different. What is to be the law in the future?

"Then, Sir, there is the question of adult marriages. We shall have to provide whether it would be competent to the reformers to marry their children when not of age into castes to which they do not belong. That is another point which we shall have to consider; it is not contained in the Bill as it stands at present.

"I think these questions of adoption, succession and inheritance are very vital questions, and as I have put it the question of monogamy or polygamy is also a very important one. If we are to frame new rules with regard to monogamy, with regard to adult marriage, with regard to adoption, with regard to succession, there will be precious little of Hindu law left intact. It will be a new law, and the creation of a new sect no doubt, and I should like to encourage that sect and I hope that sect will in future, greatly absorb the whole community of India. But however that may be, it would hardly be 'Hindu' in the strict present accepted sense of the term, and therefore it would be a question which would have to be left open to the Hindu community again to consider, as to whether they would like to have these vast changes made before they are permitted to marry into other castes. Sir, the question is not so very simple as it may appear on the surface. There are very important questions as to whether a Brahmin woman or a Kshatriya woman—'Brahmin' sounds very harsh in some people's ears and I will avoid all controversy—as to whether a Kshatriya lady can say 'I will not live with my husband because he has married a Sudra woman.' Well, questions of divorce of that character would arise the moment we pass this Bill. The reform has our hearty sympathy, and I do not therefore stand for an indefinite postponement of the question. I do not believe that if this Bill comes before a committee constituted under the Reforms Scheme, it would have the ghost of a chance. I am rather sceptical—I may be wrong, I personally would not like to introduce any obstacles—but I may state clearly that the Government would be thinking wrongly if the views of any of us should be considered to be representative of the communities to which we belong. They are our honest views, which, we think, would be for the welfare of the future community of India, but I do not think we reflect the opinion of the communities when we vote here one way or the other."

The Council adjourned until Thursday, the 26th February, at 11 o'clock.

Secretary to the Government of India,

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915. (5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Thursday, the 26th February, 1920.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C., K.C.S.I., Vice-President, presiding, and 51 Members, of whom 46 were Additional Members.

HINDU MARRIAGES VALIDITY BILL—(contd.)

The Vice-President :—" The Council will now resume the discussion on Mr. Patel's motion regarding marriages between Hindus of different castes." 11-2 A.M.

The Hon'ble Surendra Nath Banerjea :—" Sir, when I was listening to the speech of my Hon'ble friend the mover, it seemed to me as if I was attending a meeting in the Southern Presidency which was the centre of controversy between Brahmins and non-Brahmins so full of anti-Brahmanical spirit was that speech and so little was there of tolerance or charity in it for those who do not worship with my Hon'ble friend in the same temple. My Hon'ble friend assumes that the majority of his opponents are Brahmins and that the majority of his supporters are non-Brahmins. I should like to know what is his warrant for that assumption, except it be the information within the four corners of the papers which have been sent to us by Government, and which do not profess to be complete or exhaustive? May I remind my Hon'ble friend that throughout our long and chequered history the representatives of the Brahmanical community have been the intellectual, the social and religious leaders of the people of India, and that even under British rule, despite its equalising and democratic influences they have maintained their position of pre-eminence. In the middle of the nineteenth century India produced the greatest religious leader of his times, he was a Brahmin, Raja Ram Mohan Roy, the founder of the Brahmo Somaj; his successor was Maharsi Debendra Nath Tagore, he was also a Brahmin, and the father of Sir Rabindra Nath Tagore, the first of our social reformers was Pundit Iswar Chandra Vidasayasagar, who was a Brahmin. The founder of the Arya Samaj movement in the Punjab with which the national life of that province is bound up was Swami Dayanand Saraswati. He too was a Brahmin. Next to Keshub Chandra Sen the greatest religious 11-3 A.M. reformer of the latter half of the nineteenth century was Ram Krishna Paramhansa, who was a Brahmin and whose religious and philanthropic organisations have now spread all over India.

"It seems to me that my Hon'ble friend, apart from the inaccuracy of his statements, is guilty of a gigantic tactical blunder. It serves no useful purpose to alienate the sympathies of the intellectual leaders of India. Nor can I congratulate my Hon'ble friend on the accuracy of the inferences which he has drawn from information that has been placed at our disposal by the Government. My Hon'ble friend seems to think that the bulk of public opinion is in favour of the Bill and that we are in the majority. I am one of his supporters, but it does no good to disguise facts. We, Sir, are in a minority and we have to educate our people and to convert the minority into a majority. That is the present state of things, and I appeal to a statement furnished by the Government of Bengal in confirmation of this view. Sir, out of five divisions of the Bengal Presidency, three divisions are distinctly opposed to this Bill two are in favour of it. In a statement furnished by the Government of Bengal, Lord Ronaldshay says that the newspapers, with exceptions here and there, are all against the Bill, that is to say, that the whole of the vocal section of public opinion is against the Bill. I think we ought to acknowledge the fact and to realise that we are in a minority, and that if we wish to take the people with us, we shall have to convert them to our views.

"Sir, passing now to another aspect of the question, we find that the Bill has been challenged on the ground,—and I think these objections have been brought forward by my Hon'ble friend* to my right,—it has been challenged on the ground that it will tend to destroy the sacramental character of Hindu marriages, that it will imperil the caste system and dislocate our social arrangements. I entirely dissent from that view I contend that it will do nothing of the sort. Inter-caste marriages prevailed in the time of Manu, caste system also subsisted in the time of Manu, inter-caste marriages did not interfere with it in the time of Manu. Are we better Hindus than our ancestors? I do not think so That sacramental character of our marriages was not destroyed, it was not in any way interfered with, it was not in the slightest measure impaired by these inter-marriages in the time of Manu about a thousand years ago. It is said that by the provisions of the Bill, if we accepted them, the caste system would be imperilled. It was not imperilled at the time of Manu; this caste system existed at that time in spite of these inter-marriages. Then the last argument is that it will disturb our social arrangements This is a very old argument. It was brought forward in 1856 when the law regarding the re-marriage of widows was considered. That law has been placed on the Statute-book. Our caste systems and our social arrangements have not been injured; Hindu society is now as vigorous as then. I do not think, Sir, that the fabric of Hinduism will in any way suffer by this Bill. On the contrary, it seems to me that it will receive added strength in consequence of this wholesome change. Sir, let me remind the Council of some of the arguments which my Hon'ble friend† behind me put forward in the course of his admirable speech. He opposed the Bill but at the same time admitted that changes were necessary. Well, Sir, let me remind the Council of a great dictum of the founder of conservative philosophy, Edmund Burke' He says that a system without the means of change is without the means of conservation. Here is this venerable fabric hoary with age, consecrated by immemorial traditions, bequeathed to us by our ancestors. Are we going to preserve it, hand it down unimpaired, improved and enlarged to those who will come after us and bear our names? If we desire to do so, we must introduce changes. The venerable fabric cannot stand without such changes. We must take out a beam here, rafter there, take down a wall elsewhere and thus renew this ancient and venerable structure. Sir, adaptability is the law of life, adaptability to environments has been the saving principle of Hindu society amid many vicissitudes of time and fortune. Confronted with the militant forces of Buddhism, what did our ancestors do? They bowed to the storm. They borrowed a doctrine here and a doctrine there from the Buddhists, fraternised with them, installed Lord Budha as one of the Gods of Hindu pantheon and crushed Buddhism in their fraternal embrace. That was the procedure of the ancient Hindus. Sir, the world is moving. We cannot stand still. Stationariness is impossible in the law of Providence. We must move and if we do not move forward, we must move backward, and it seems to me that political progress and social stagnation are inconsistent and unthinkable. We talk of political progress. We must have social progress along with it, and it seems to me, Sir, that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill is a small instalment towards that progress. His Bill is by no means a revolutionary one. What he proposes is that unions which, in the absence of a law such as this, would be unlawful should be legitimatised and that the children of such unions should be declared to be entitled to the inheritance of their parents. Is not this just; Is not this fair; and are not the natural canons of justice superior to all laws, all ordinances and even the injunctions of the Shastras? For, Sir, do they not flow from the footsteps of the throne of the Supreme and are graven deep on the hearts and consciences of humanity? I support the Bill, in the first place, because it is just; I support it because it will not interfere with the solidarity of the Hindu system. I support it further because it is but a small instalment towards that progressive evolution with which the future of our race is bound up; and, on these grounds, I give my support to the Bill. I will ask the Select Committee which is about to be appointed to look into the points which have been referred to by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma. They are of great importance. What are to be the rites that are to be followed in connection with these marriages; what is to be the law of succession that will be followed in this connection? There will be other matters of detail which will have to be considered.

"Then, Sir, I am entirely in favour of the amendment which has been proposed by the Hon'ble the Home Member. This is undoubtedly and essentially a matter for the Hindu community, but, I think, the advice of our Muhammadan and European colleagues would be helpful. Why should we exclude them? Let us hear what they have to say. The decision of the question will be in our own hands.

"Lastly, Sir, we should all look at the matter not merely from the standpoint of social reform. We are here as legislators making laws for the good of a great country. That is the view-point from which we should regard this question, and it seems to me that it would be preferable if this matter were considered and disposed of by a larger and more representative body reflecting in a truer sense the public opinion of the country, speaking with a voice and authority which does not belong to us. I think that would be the proper solution of the question before us. At the same time I desire to accord my whole-hearted support to the principle underlying the Bill."

The Vice-President:—"I had hoped that after the adjournment yesterday the Council would have agreed to bury the Brahmin question; sufficient has already been said on both sides, and the matter is really quite irrelevant. The motion before the Council is whether the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee or not, and I propose to rule in future that all references to the Brahmin question are out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri:—"Sir, the Hon'ble 11 17 A.
Mr. Patel included me yesterday amongst the supporters of his Bill. He was quite right. I have great pleasure in supporting his Bill, and I also support the amendment by the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent to his motion. I support the Bill mostly because I believe in the promotion of freedom to the individual in matters vital to his welfare. I believe, Sir, that the institution of marriage is just the institution in which it is necessary within limits to accord the utmost liberty of action to the individual. The limits necessary are prescribed in every community and upheld sometimes by the customary law, sometimes by the statutory law of the land. In the case of India it is the customary law that the Courts enforce in respect of marriage. But it is well known that our ancient Shastras and Scriptures advise one course of action, but that custom in recent times, no doubt extending over several generations, has adopted a somewhat different course. I do not mean to say that every departure from the ancient rule has been wrong. I believe that in every change there has been a conformity to the environment. Every change must have been necessary at the time it was made. But at the present moment there is no doubt that the restrictions imposed by custom far exceed those that the ancient law imposed on the institution of marriage, and that these customary restrictions have begun to enslave the community and restrict the freedom of the individual in a most unwholesome manner. I do not believe really, therefore, that there is any danger to the religion of the land. On the contrary, if I venture to make this statement, it will help to place the religion of the land on a higher and purer footing. Nor do I believe that there is any truth in the charge that has been brought against this Bill that it will disrupt the Hindu society or that it will uproot the institution of caste.

"I believe, Sir, like most proposals for reform, this is likely to be operative on a very small scale in the beginning If a change comes over the society of this country, it will come over it in a very slow, gradual and natural and safe manner. If, however, there is a possibility of any revolution being effected, which I emphatically deny, it is because the consciousness of the community has begun to revolt against the unwholesome restrictions imposed by custom. Those who foresee these dangers seem to have in their minds an impression that the community at large has begun to feel the stringency of the restrictions and is ready, the moment the law of the land makes it possible, to overstep the barriers and reorganise the institution of marriage on reasonable and healthy lines. If that was the case, I should no doubt rejoice, but I have no reason to think that that is the case. The community is not going to take advantage on a very considerable scale of the provisions of this Bill. I therefore do not apprehend in the least any revolution in society, anything to justify the grave alarm that has found expression both in this Council and outside. One thing, however, may be said. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel and some of his supporters have claimed for the Bill that it may have the effect of demolishing caste. I do not think it will have that effect at all. It may remove some of the acerbities of these caste distinctions; it points the better way to the community; it is a signpost in the march of the community towards a better order, but certainly it will not do much more than that. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill is brief, attractively brief. He seems to have the idea that if the Bill were confined to a mere declaration of the validity of marriages between castes, it would disarm the opposition of the community; it would show them that the minimum departure from the established practice was contemplated, that it did not try to interfere in any way with the law of succession and inheritance, that it left the ages of the parties where they would otherwise have been, and it left the conditions surrounding a marriage just where they were. I confess, Sir, it seems to me that this is a wrong line to have taken altogether. The very brevity of the Bill is its danger. If the Hon'ble Mr. Patel had taken the advice that has been tendered to him from innumerable quarters and amplified his Bill so as to provide for the many cases of difficulty that arise out of this simple declaration, he would have, it seems to me, diminished considerably the opposition that now finds expression. In this case—more detail, less alarm. I said at the time he asked leave of this Council to introduce this Bill, that I felt the moment that we touch radical institutions like marriage in the light of modern reason, it was necessary to introduce other elements which the enlightened conscience of the modern day connects with the marriage institution. For instance this particular Bill will cause a certain amount of unhappiness, a certain amount of social ostracism to the people who avail themselves of it It will not do to permit parents so to arrange the marriages of their children that those children, when they grow up, may have to face difficulties which they would not themselves have courted. It is absolulety necessary therefore that this reform, which is likely to bring social trouble to those who avail themselves of it, should contain a condition that the parties to any marriage under this Bill should be adults, and should be people that had arrived at the age of discretion. It is necessary too, Sir, in my judgment, that it should provide that the parties to the marriage should be otherwise monogamous, that it should also be clearly made out that while it may be open to people who avail themselves of this Bill to go through the customary rites of marriage before the sacred fire, it nevertheless should be ordained by law that the marriage should have a civil aspect as well, for it is quite likely that a great deal of opposition will be raised to the solemnization of the marriage by the ordinary sacred ritual; and it is possible to contend (I do not believe that it will be correct, but it is possible to contend) that the usual ritual had no application to cases of marriage between a higher and a lower caste. To avoid these difficulties many of Mr. Patel's supporters have advised him to include a provision for registration of marriage. I think it would be well to introduce that element also. I make this recommendation at this moment to the Hon'ble Mr. Patel, because I would respectfully remind him that, while he has numerous supporters on all sides, nearly every one of those supporters has qualified his support by the recommendation that various changes and additions should be made to the Bill, so that it may prove a workable machinery. I may mention Sir Narayan Chandavarkar, the Hon'ble Mr. R. P. Paranjpye, and Mr. Madgaokar, District Judge. Then the Local Governments have done the same. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel yesterday claimed Mr. Percival, District Judge of Poona, amongst his supporters. Sir, at the risk of seeming to disobey a certain rule of yours, I would read one sentence from Mr. Percival's opinion which I commend to the earnest attention of Mr. Patel :—

'In view of the strong opposition, especially among the Brahmin community of Poona and elsewhere, Government will no doubt decide to be conspicuously neutral in respect of the Bill.'

This is for the Hon'ble Mr. Patel :—

'It would also seem desirable to suggest to the Hon'ble Mr. Patel that he would be well advised to travel along the lines of least resistance (as he did in the case of his Educational Bill); that is to say, to confine his Bill to sub-castes, as suggested in paragraph 5 of the report of the Inspecting F. C. Sub-Judge, Poona.'

"Now that does not seem to me to be an opinion which one should have claimed to be entirely in support of the Bill. It is in support of a Bill of much smaller scope than the one before us.

"I conceive then that the Select Committee to which this Bill might be committed in the course of this day's proceedings would have to expand it in various directions and make it a really workable plan, disarming opposition and criticism that has come from all quarters.

"Now, Sir, I want to consider a most important condition imposed by some people on the action of this legislature in respect of matters of social reform. I believe the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent on a former occasion referred briefly, although not on his own individual account, to this condition, that the majority of the community affected by the Bill must be more or less in support of the change indicated before Government could give their sanction to any such measure. Now this condition it is simply impossible, I conceive, to fulfil. I have no desire whatever to enter on any controversy, but I must point out that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel yesterday claimed too much when he claimed that the bulk of the community were in favour of the Bill. Nothing, Sir, is to be gained by exaggerating the support that comes to a measure of this character. The bulk of the Hindu community, both as I read the papers before us and as I know from personal knowledge of feeling all over the country, is decidedly against the Bill. The Hon'ble Mr. Patel pays too much attention to individual opinions, but individual opinions are confessedly individual. Large meetings of the community held up and down the country have protested against the measure, and have memorialised the Local Governments. The Local Governments have only made a selection of the papers which are printed here and communicated to us. The large bulk of opinion, most of it adverse, has not been communicated to this Council. The Maharaja of Darbangha, who presided over a great many of these protest meetings, is referred to both by the Bihar and Orissa Government and the Bengal Government. Now, what did those meetings consist of? They consisted of people of the Hindu community of all castes, Brahmins and non-Brahmins alike. Similarly, meetings, to which the Board of Revenue in Madras refer, consisted also of members of all castes. It seems to me, Sir, that when we set the adverse opinion side by side with the favourable opinion there can be no doubt whatever that the adverse opinion is very much the stronger. That, however, does not seem to me to matter very much in the case of a permissive Bill of this kind. Confessedly, it is for the relief of minorities, and when minorities come and seek relief at the hands of the legislature, it appears to me that the legislature would be imposing a very heavy, almost a prohibitive, obligation if it says 'You go and get the consent of the majority.' The majority are avowedly against a thing of this kind. They do not like sometimes to give the necessary freedom to minorities and to individuals that may be affected. It is a plea on behalf of the minority, on behalf of the individual, that we make to this Council. To claim that the majority are in our favour is to make, it seems to me, a false claim, is to set up, it seems to me, an unnecessary claim. We are a minority; as a minority we come to this Council for relief. But this minority, Sir, is not altogether negligible. It is a considerable minority and the Council need not consider its time and energy wasted if it contemplated a measure that sought to give relief to a considerable minority. I have here a pamphlet, which I daresay other members of this Council also possess copies of, by a certain gentleman named Daphtari, a member of the Bar in Bombay. It is a most instructive pamphlet full of facts and observations which a consideration of this Bill makes necessary. There, it is asserted, and I believe it is true, Sir, that there are great numbers of people, numerous castes and sub-castes, in parts of the country, who have been obliged to transgress the limits of the caste distinctions, who have been obliged, in order to find brides and bridegrooms, to overstep the limits set down by custom. Such marriages are now in being, children have been born, and there is a feeling of uneasiness amongst members of these small communities that if ever a case should unfortunately come to a Court of law a decision may be given against them. It is necessary, therefore, for the protection of people who have already taken bold action to pass a Bill of this kind. Now that, Sir, it seems to me, is a significant commentary on the way in which customs are created. The requirement that the custom must be ancient, must be continual and must be uniform is very hard. It militates against the growth of healthy and new customs. I know, as a matter of fact, that in the case of a requirement of the ancient law which is much more binding and goes to the very root of our religion than the one we are considering, in the case, I mean, of the prohibition against marriages as between people of the same Gotra there are communities that have felt that they could not conform to this requirement. I know of a village in the Tinnevelly District where a community accepted as orthodox people have, however, owing to the stringency of that condition, been obliged to transgress even this rule and marriages there have been contracted during the last thirty years between people belonging to the same Gotra; and they are Brahmins and Brahmins of a very orthodox sect. I know of other cases where this law against sagotra marriages has been transgressed It is necessary that cases of this sort should be protected by an enlightened legislature. We must move with the times and as often as people find it necessary to transgress the limits imposed by custom, take that bold action and come to the legislature for relief. I think it will not be wise to withhold that relief merely because three-fourths or seven-eighths of the community have not yet come to ask for the relief.

"Now, Sir, a word as to the attitude of Government in this matter. Now the attitude of Government, it seems to me, is surrounded by a great deal of difficulty and the Local Governments have not spoken with one voice in the matter. The disparity between the views of Government is well brought out when we consider the contrast between the views of Sir Reginald Craddock in Burma and the views of Sir Harcourt Butler in the United Provinces. They seem to me to mark the utmost limits of the divergence of views of the Local Governments. Sir Reginald Craddock would advise the Government to prevent the passage of this Bill. Sir Harcourt Butler exhorts the Government to take the side of the reformers, to help the people to live up to a better ideal. He would persuade the Government of India to support the Bill and help it on Between these two extremes there lie two views One view is that this Bill had best be considered by the Reformed Council

"The Governments of Madras, the Punjab and Bombay hold to this view strongly, while the other view that the Government must be strictly neutral and leave this matter to be settled by the Hindu members of this Council, being non-official, is held by the Central Provinces, Bengal, Bihar and Orissa and the United Provinces, the last Government coming also under this in case the other view which I mentioned a minute ago should not commend itself to the Government of India. I find it difficult, Sir, to blame the Government of India in the circumstances that I have stated if they refuse to give official support to this Bill. It seems to me that the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent's amendment, therefore, takes the only course that it is open to the Government of India to take. They must leave this matter to be settled by the non-official members of this Council, and that is why I believe that the amendment is cast on the right lines I have great pleasure in supporting the Bill and the amendment of the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent."

The Hon'ble Major Malik Sir Umar Hayat Khan :—" Sir, on behalf of my Muhammadan brethren I rise to say a few words on the amendment, not on the Bill. We have heard very able speakers speaking yesterday and to-day and we have come to know that the matter is very difficult and intricate. Being Muhammadans we know our own law, and we do not know the law of the Hindus so well There is also another difficulty. Just as Government thinks on this occasion it ought to be neutral, we Muhammadans also have got our own difficulties, and we think we ought to be neutral also at this juncture. One of the causes is that we have seen that the community itself is not unanimous on the matter. It is on this account that we ask that we may be kept out of the Select Committee. This is the general opinion of Muhammadans at the present moment. Of course there are all sorts of opinions, and some of us go further than others. We have got our own religious questions; and as we will always be in a minority here, as well as in the Provincial Councils, when we are trying to better our lot and when we bring in such measures, we may be absolutely hampered; I mean the majority may at any time defeat anything we want to do; that is why we say that when we put our house in order, particularly in our religious questions, we should be allowed to be separate; and we want to be separate therefore now in this matter. That is what I have to say on this amendment. We have had a foretaste during the discussion on the Dacca University measure, it has opened the eyes of most of us in Council as well as outside; and that is one of the causes why we want to ask Government that we should be left alone in this matter; and in future when we have a three-fourths majority on any matter affecting us peculiarly, others should not be allowed to meddle with us; that is why we do not want to meddle with others. With these words I do not support the amendment." 11-42 A.M.

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis :—" Sir, my attitude towards Mr. Basu's Bill was determined by considerations peculiar to that period, but surely some such legislation as now brought in is necessary in the new conditions due to advanced civilisation, in order to legalise mixed marriages. The increasing number of such marriages clearly proves the existence of a genuine desire in the society, as a whole, for a change in the rules 11-45 A.M.

which have now been unfortunately crystallized by judicial decision. It would be wrong to disregard the growing sentiment and wishes of the people in such a matter. The rules regarding marriage must be relaxed to suit modern conditions of life. It is of course necessary that the Bill should be carefully examined as regards details in view of the other issues involved, as presently instanced by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. The language has also to be scrutinised in order to prevent unnecessary litigation. If the Bill is sent to a small Select Committee, mostly of expert lawyers as suggested by Mr. Patel it will, I hope, emerge from it in an acceptable form. It is impossible that it should do so from a large committee, as contemplated by the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent. If the Bill is ultimately passed, the Hon'ble Mr. Patel will have the credit of being looked upon as an apostle of Social Reform, which is gradually but surely taking hold of the public mind."

11-47 A.M. The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur :—"Sir, I regret I cannot see eye to eye with some of the leaders and reformers who have spoken in support of the Bill. But before going further I want to know whether these reformers are prepared to carry out into practice the principles involved in these Bills? Are they prepared to allow their children to marry outside their caste? If that is not to be, if they would keep aloof from all these things, then where is the necessity of posing as leaders and giving their whole-hearted and sympathetic support to the Bill? I regret I cannot see my way to support the motion of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Patel.

"As an orthodox Hindu, I consider the caste-system as the foundation of the whole Hindu social edifice; and any violation of that system would undermine the foundation and ultimately demolish the superstructure. As has been pointed out by Mr. Tonkinson that the social and religious systems of the Hindus are so linked together, that it is impossible for a Hindu to marry outside the circle permitted by Hinduism and still remain a Hindu. The principle underlying the Bill is wholly repugnant to Hindu religion and contrary to the time-honoured customs and practices of the Hindus—customs and practices which age has endowed with the sanctity of religious doctrines. The entire social system of the Hindus is bound up and linked together by caste. It has been admitted by an expert of Sir George Birdwood's eminence that the art- industries of India owe their very existence to the system of caste which has preserved them from the corrosive wear and tear of time. The skill of the hereditary craftsmen becomes a second nature

"It has been said that the measure is merely permissive. But as Mahamohopadhya Hara Prasad Shastri M.A., C.I.E. has said 'The Hindus do not want these validating Acts and they fervently pray that the benign Government set their face against these Acts and let the people alone in social matters.' Attempts have before now been made by reformers and philanthropists to have such validating measures passed by the legislature, but they have fallen still-born : and the only result has been the creation of suspicion in the minds of the people. The tocsin of alarm has already been sounded and that by no less a person than Raja Peary Mohan Mukerjee, C.S.I., whose age, intellectual acquirements, position and public services entitle his opinion to respect. Says the Raja 'Assurances have been repeatedly given both by Parliamentary Statutes and by the Regulations and Acts of the Indian Government to the peoples of India that in matters regarding succession, inheritance, marriage, caste and all religious usages the personal laws of Hindus will be respected. The proposed measure contemplates an express violation of these assurances. We venture to hope that Government will be pleased not to deviate from the policy which they have hitherto followed in the administration of the affairs of their Hindu subjects.'

"Even people outside the pale of Hinduism have admitted the difficulties to which the measure before the Council is likely to lead. I quote below the opinion of Mr. B. C. Sen, officiating Commissioner, Bhagalpore Division — 'Though born a Hindu, I am beyond the pale of Hinduism and should like to see the whole of the caste system abolished to-morrow. At the same time I am clearly of opinion that the present Bill is premature, and would remain practically inoperative even if passed into law. There can be no doubt that the great mass of Hindu sentiment is strongly against the proposal, and I cannot say that that attitude is altogether unreasonable. In Hinduism, religion, social custom and civil law are so bound up together, that it is impossible to separate them. They are all based on Hindu religious books. So long as the caste system is recognised as an integral part of Hindu religion, and so long as the laws of Hindu marriage and inheritance are based on Hindu Shastras, the present Bill is bound to be looked upon as an attack on the Hindu religion. There would also be serious practical difficulties.'

"No case has been made out for the measure, and its necessity has yet to be demonstrated. There is no demand for the proposed legislation from a large section of the Hindu community, who think that it would be unwise on the part of the Government to try to force 'reform' down the throat of an unwilling community which seeks solace in the social system of their forefathers and imbibes inspiration from their holy Shastras.

"I do not desire to weary the Council with long quotations, but I may point out that a large section of the community headed by His Highness the Maharaja of Burdwan and His Highness the Raja of Darbangah have submitted a memorial protesting against the passing of the Bill. Even the High Court of Bengal has offered no observations on the Bill. The Government of Bengal is opposed to the Bill and so are most of the Governments that have been consulted. Most of the Governments have requested that it be referred to the enlarged Council. What is the necessity of rushing the Bill? Why not wait for a year for the enlarged Council to take up the Bill in right earnest? There are several questions that require consideration, there is inheritance, adoption, the status and rights of children, all these intricate questions cannot be dealt with in a single-line Bill of this kind. The proposal is to refer it to Select Committee. I do not see the necessity of doing so. If the Bill is to be referred to Select Committee, and if the Bill is to be amplified, modified, or enlarged, then the opinion of the country should be again sought on the new provisions that it is proposed to incorporate. I, therefore, beg Mr. Patel to drop the Bill for the present and to make necessary provisions in it for solving the different problems that have been raised by Mr. Sarma, and then to bring it to this Council. With these words I beg strongly to oppose the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"Sir, I support this Bill, but before stating my reasons I may say that I am in agreement with the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma that it would have been wiser if Mr. Patel could have made the Bill more comprehensive and if it had made provisions, among other cases, for inheritance for instance. There is some difficulty about this question of inheritance. I should like to point out to the Council that it is a similar case in regard to Act III of 1872 which was referred to yesterday, and which made provision for the marriage of persons before the Registrar. This is called the Civil Marriage Act. It is much longer than the present Bill. It has 20 sections and a Schedule. There is nothing said in that Act about the question of inheritance. It may be a difficult question to decide, and I therefore think it would have been better if provision was made in this Bill in regard to it. But I contend that there is no insuperable difficulty about that matter. Surely this is a question that can be gone into by the Select Committee. I agree that it would be wise to make provision for adoption about age. I think that in a matter of this kind men and women who have attained their majority should be allowed to contract marriages under this Bill. The Act of 1872 does not go so far. It provides that in the case of persons who have not attained their majority, they would have to obtain the consent of their guardians. I think it would be better if we confined the provisions of this Bill to those who have attained their majority. Similarly, I think that there ought to be a provision that marriages under this Bill should be monogamous. No person, man or woman, who has a wife or husband alive at the time should 11.58 A.M.

[Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda.] [26TH FEBRUARY, 1920.]

be permitted to contract a marriage under this Bill. Then there is the question of Divorce and Registration. In this matter I do not think there is any necessity to incorporate any provisions in the Bill. This is a matter that should be considered in Select Committee. With regard to the objections that have been raised by the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray, I should like to answer him. In the first place, Sir, I think it is recognised by everybody that this is purely a permissive measure. It only enables a Hindu to marry out of his caste; it compels no one to do so. It is absolutely optional; it is purely a permissive measure. It is therefore difficult to understand how a measure like this will be aiming a blow at the Hindu religion or custom. All that it seeks to do is to remove certain of the disabilities in the way of the issues of such marriages, because the issues of such marriages, unless legislative sanction is given to such marriages, will not be legitimate. That is the disability which this Bill seeks to remove. Then, on the other hand, while it enables a Hindu to marry out of his caste, there is no obligation on the part of any other Hindu to have anything to do with such marriages or to deal with the party contracting such marriages socially or hold social communion or association with him. Every one is perfectly entitled to treat the parties contracting such marriages as non-Hindus, to excommunicate them or to outcaste them. I do not see, Sir, how, under these circumstances, it can be said that if you pass this measure it will strike at the root of Hindu religion or custom. If you say that by removing the difficulties which at present exist, you are creating facilities for such marriages, put a premium on such unions and thereby in an indirect manner strike at the root of Hindu religion or custom, my answer is this. It may be so to some extent, but then it is not making an innovation. If there is danger in that way to Hindu religion or custom, it already exists in the existing legislation. Under Act III a Hindu can marry anyone he likes, he can marry not only a Hindu girl, but a non-Hindu girl, a Mussulman or a Jew or a Christian girl if he likes. All that he has to do is to sign a declaration that he is not a Hindu. What does this Bill do? It will enable him only to marry a Hindu girl. But what is wanted is to remove the restriction which you at present impose on him. At present he is bound to declare before contracting such a marriage that he is not a Hindu, but in case he has any conscientious objection to doing so, why penalise his conscience? That is the only difference between this Bill and the existing legislation. I do not think, therefore, you can possibly say that you will be disintegrating the Hindu social fabric by passing this Bill. Whether the policy of Act III, 1872, whether the policy of the suppressing Sati, whether the policy about the law about re-marriage of Hindu widows is sound or otherwise, it is too late in the day to discuss this question. But I submit, Sir, if you pass this Bill there will be no such apprehension that you will be doing something grave to jeopardise Hindu religion or custom, and there is strong argument in favour of my contention in the fact that orthodox Hindu States like Indore, Kolhapur and Nepal have a law legalising and re-exposing such marriages. It is a cruel irony of fate, Sir, that while such marriages have validity in Indian Hindu States, British Courts do not recognise such marriages. There is a reported case, Sir, in the Indian Law Reports, 28 All, p. 458. A Brahmin married a Rajput girl in Nepal where such marriages are not prohibited by law. The man died. After his death there was litigation about the property. His son and his widow claimed the property, but the Allahabad High Court held that they had no right to the property because the marriage between the deceased and his wife was not a marriage in law as they did not belong to the same caste. As I said, it is an irony of fate, Sir, that while such marriages are allowed in orthodox Hindu States like Nepal, they are not recognised under the British Government in India. I submit, Sir, there is everything in favour of this measure, and the difficulties which exist and which have been alluded to by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Sarma, can surely be removed in the Select Committee.

"There is one other point that I should like to refer to. My Hon'ble friend, Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur was saying that the Hindu society would come to pieces if this Bill is passed. I ask him if it is not a fact that inter-caste marriages are at the present moment prevalent in East Bengal? Now there is a community called the Sahais which is a very wealthy, very respectable and influential community in Bengal, but this community has no social equality of status with Brahmins or Kayasthas or Baidyas. None of these castes will take water or food at the hand of Sahais . . .

The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur:—"They are practically outcasted."

The Vice-President:—"Order, Order."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"If the Hon'ble Member will wait for a moment I will tell him what it is. There is a practice, there is a custom amongst these wealthy Saha castes of having bridegrooms or brides from poor Kayastha or Baidya families in Eastern Bengal. What happens? The boy or the girl who is thus taken in marriage in a Saha family outcasted is not taken back by his or her parents, but the marriage is valid, the issue of such marriage is legitimate. Has the society come to pieces on account of the existence of this custom? In the last four or five years a number of such marriages have taken place in Calcutta where a Saha has married the daughter of a Kayastha of Calcutta. Now, are these marriages valid or invalid, or has society come to pieces on account of this? I think, I may say, Sir, in passing that it is difficult to say what would happen if the Calcutta High Court took the same view as the Allahabad High Court that Kayasthas are Kshtriyas. Kayasthas according to the Calcutta High Court, in a case reported 10 Calcutta Series, are Sudras and not Kshatriyas, but the opposite view is taken by the Allahabad High Court. If this view obtains in Calcutta, then I do not know, Sir, if the marriages I have spoken of would be valid. I therefore think on all possible grounds there is no reason why this Bill should not be supported by this Council. I say defects there are in it, but they might be easily rectified in the Select Committee. With these few words I beg to support the motion before the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"Sir, I do not propose to take up much time because the matter is fully discussed. I have only to submit a few considerations which, I think, will help Hon'ble Members to make up their mind and I believe in a manner so as to support this Bill. When it was first introduced at Simla, I stated my views and those were that the Hindu religion being an Imperial religion tolerates nearly everything, and so it matters very little if these gentlemen now come forward and desire some extension of the laws of marriage. At the most it will create another caste, but that will not uproot real Hinduism at all, and what is of great importance, and to which I also attach great importance, is that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel in introducing this Bill yesterday mentioned that he did not attack the caste system. He also said that he wished to maintain the sacramental character of the Hindu marriage. He also said that he does not wish to introduce or engraft a new principle on old Hindu law. Within these three limitations I think the Bill will be very suitable. What the mover seeks to do is to legalise these marriages; he has not even gone so far as to say what the inheritance of the children would be. I myself said in Simla that these matters would have to be provided for, and I qualified my support by saying I would consent to it if these matters, which have been left out now, were brought in, and no matter how, but they must be settled beforehand. If they are not settled there will be a great deal of dispute and probably litigation on the matter. I believe the Select Committee to which the Bill will be referred will be able to deal with these matters, which, after all, I think, are matters of detail, and these matters of detail admit of being discussed and settled and so settled as to be acceptable even to the orthodox community. So there will be no difficulty so far as I can see in this Bill being referred to a Committee, and if it is proposed to enlarge that Committee so much the better. The more of us that put our minds to it and use the past experience and wisdom that we have acquired the more will it be to the good, for after all we have to give certain marriages that have taken place between different castes a status. If we let them alone they might go out of society altogether, and I am anxious that they should be kept in society, and it is our duty to make room for them so as to bring them into proper relations with the rest of India, and, if possible, prevent any kind of misunderstanding or quarrelling or disruption on account of these small differences. In that view of the matter I am of opinion that this Bill should be referred to a Select Committee and these details must be settled. Unless these details are settled, probably the Bill will not be acceptable to a large majority of my countrymen. I therefore submit that this Bill should be referred and I do not object to the Select Committee being enlarged by including all the non-official members of this Hon'ble Council."

12-13 P.M. The Hon'ble Sardar Bahadur Sardar Sundar Singh Majithia:—"Sir, I have been a sort of an interested listener to the debate that has been going on the Bill of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Patel. This somehow or other reminds me of the time when the Anand Marriage Act which I had the honour to pilot through during the last stages of the Council was being discussed and was before the Council. There was some flutter in certain corners of the great Hindu society that that Bill would affect some of the old-established customs. I never thought then that the time would come when the Hindu society, or at any rate certain portions of the great Hindu society, would be bringing forward a measure to legalise certain marriages which were being performed in the community, namely, inter-caste marriages. As a Sikh I welcome the measure because it gives an opportunity of very necessary reform to do away with some of the rigidity of the caste system among the Hindu community. I find on the other hand that a great majority of the orthodox section of the Hindu community is against the motion of my Hon'ble friend, and naturally too, as there are many difficulties which have to be contended with. There are difficulties, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma pointed out, about the children succeeding to the estate, and about the provisions to be made where there are more than one wife. I personally think, Sir, as the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri said, that something is necessary to be done to give effect to the measure, to improve it in such a way that it should apply to persons who have attained the age of majority, and should not be allowed to apply to persons who are still minors and cannot decide for themselves. I, however, think that the measure has got great possibilities, and there is room for many improvements to be effected in it. In the Select Committee that the Hon'ble Home Member has suggested I think those difficulties could be met, and in giving support to a proposal for reform, as the Bill is evidently intended to be, I hope the Government of India will give their consent to the measure being referred to a Select Committee. With these few remarks I support the motion."

12-16 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar:—"Sir, I quite endorse what the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri said that Mr. Patel was wrong in saying that the majority of the Hindus are in his favour while the Brahmins alone oppose it. Knowing Mr. Patel as I do I cannot take offence at the strong language and at the loud and emphatic manner in which he put forth his case yesterday and condemned a certain section of his countrymen for being prominent in opposing the Bill. Had Mr. Patel been apprised of the honest and pure intentions of the class of people who oppose the Bill and who are used to voice forth the feelings of the country in all subjects concerning the welfare of the country, and had he been made aware of the spurious and got-up nature of the confederations and leagues on whose authority Mr. Patel relied to base his opinions that Brahmins oppose the Bill while the non-Brahmins support him . . . .

[26TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [The Vice-President; Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar; Mr. V. J. Patel.]

The Vice-President :—"Order, order, I will not allow the Hon'ble Member to go into the Brahmin question."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—"Mr. Patel based his arguments on this point that the majority of the non-Brahmins support his Bill and I have to meet them."

The Vice-President :—"The Hon'ble Member must obey my ruling; he must either obey my ruling or resume his seat."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—"Had Mr. Patel been apprised of the real nature of these institutions then I am sure he would revise his opinion and not attach much importance to the opinions of those associations. My Hon'ble friend, when he represented the Indian views on political aspirations before the Joint Committee in England, had taken a diametrically opposite view of the very same institution which he said yesterday represents the majority of the Hindus . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"Which institution?

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar :—"The very same Madras league which he said yesterday supported his Bill. My friend cannot maintain his position if he should really think that that institution represents the majority of the Hindus. In these days people far away from the scene of activities are led away by reports and misrepresentations, and I may venture to suggest to Mr. Patel to take his co-members into confidence before arriving at any conclusion as to what these institutions are really worth. I am happy that the Council has been enlightened by the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent on the hollowness of the charges brought against the upper classes.

"To come to the point. Mr. Patel through some process of reasoning or other has come to the conclusion that the majority of the Hindus are for his Bill and I would not admit the truth of this assertion. The majority are not for this innovation and the most violent of social reformers would admit the accuracy of my statement. I may even say that the question of majority or minority does not arise at all as the people pressing for this reform form only a microscopic section. The only method of settling this contention of Mr. Patel is to take a referendum on this question. When the new electorates are formed it will be very easy to take a referendum and this subject may be the first to be dealt with in that way. I agree with some one member who urged that this Bill may wait till the new Councils are formed not because that would be a better assembly with more conservative elements than this to discuss this question, but because the voters will be many and a referendum may be easily made.

"The peculiar structure of the Hindu society rests on its social features and on the members of the society having faith and paying willing obedience to the masters who founded it and laid the basic rules for the guidance of that society. I cannot understand why any one should profess to belong to a society not being able to loyally follow the rules of that society. If Mr. Patel should attempt to define the term 'Hindu' correctly, then he would not, I think, force his Bill. It is one thing to find out texts or to interpret the texts of the founders of the society according to our own purposes, but it is quite a different thing to say that this Bill validates marriages, whatsoever be the texts or interpretations of them to the contrary. Let Mr. Patel attempt to found a new society as Buddha or Dayanand had done and I will support him in all rational laws that he may frame for his institution. The common law is that a resident of one geographical unit should be loyal to its temporal authority so long as he remains in it, and he should be naturalised and declared as the subject of any other country before he wishes to transfer his loyalty to it as being more comfortable. This principle holds good not only in political but other spheres as well.

"In my speech, when this Bill was introduced, I quoted chapter and verse from Manu to show that he is against inter-caste marriages. There are some texts which show that Anuloma marriages were in vogue, but my quotation definitely preventing inter-caste marriages is there; but it has been explained away by the learned Law Member that Manu's Code is a conglomeration of different smritis. The Hindus do not believe that it is so. Manu was a law-giver. If a rare eventuality of an Anuloma marriage should be taken into account by him for the purpose of defining the share of inheritance in such cases, it should not be concluded that the text I quoted was borrowed by Manu from some other smritis. I have not the least objection to follow Manu in whatever he has said about the subject and the whole of my contention is to follow him.

"There are so many difficulties about the law relating to succession in Pratiloma marriages and the law relating to adoption, as pointed out by Mr. Sarma. One other difficulty struck me and I put it before Mr. Sastri yesterday. The Dwiyas or the first three classes select their brides from a gotra different to their own gotras or clans, and Sa-gothra marriages are illegal. Some castes have lost their gotras and how could marriages be allowed between those with defined gotras and with those who wave lost the connection and who, if traced, might belong to the same gotra? Members of the same gotra are supposed to be brothers and sisters, and among Hindus it is considered as something like the worst form of incest to wed with one of the same gotra. Mr. Sastri says that law should also be amended to permit Sa-gothra marriages, I cannot treat the subject as lightly as Mr. Sastri does. Even if it is contended that the fourth caste has no gotra then how to solve the present existing custom about marriages being performed in the gothra different from one's own? What is to be the Varna of the progeny?

"I am one of those who think that the Bill is conceived on fundamentally wrong basis and nothing but dropping it would meet the wishes of the majority of the Hindu community. It cannot at all be amended in the Select Committee. As a pandit put it yesterday it is as impossible to straighten a camel's back as to amend the Bill. Further, as one who opposes the principle of the Bill, I am not sure if it is consistent for me to accept membership of the Select Committee which is intended only to improve the Bill."

12-25 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy:—"Sir, yesterday while moving his amendment, my Hon'ble friend the Home Member made a reference to the Muhammadan members of this Council who represent both Hindus and Muhammadans. Therefore, I wish to make my position clear. As a Mussulman, I would not like to serve on this Committee and discuss this question, firstly, because it is a purely Hindu question, and, secondly, the Hindus themselves are divided on this question, as we have seen in the debate in this Council for the last two days. If we as Mussulmans serve on the Committee, and if we decide to side with the minority, I think it will not be fair to the other part of the Hindu members that we should mix up and discuss this question and decide it with a Muhammadan majority. It will not be in the interests of either Hindus or Muhammadans, when their religious questions are discussed and when they are divided amongst themselves, that we should be the medium of deciding the whole factor.

"Then, again, it is my opinion that this Bill seems not to be complete because, as my friend Mr. Sarma told us yesterday, the question embraces difficult consequential changes of law in regard to succession, inheritance, adoption and perhaps divorce. We have fortunately got eminent Hindu lawyers in the Council who can do justice to this question, and, I think, it would be a fair thing if the Hindus themselves go into the Committee and decide that question. But, in deference to the wishes of my friend the Home Member, I have asked my own Chamber to express their views and I will abide by those views."

[26TH FEBRUARY, 1920.] [Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur; Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha.]

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill concerns Hindus, and Hindus only, and opinion is divided among Hindus themselves as to the practicability of the measure. Personally speaking, I am in sympathy with the principles of the Bill. For the proposed measure aims at a greater solidarity among my Hindu brethren. With the Hon'ble Mover's optimism on the one hand and with the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's pessimism on the other, we, Mussalmans, find ourselves in a delicate situation, and feel we are hardly competent to pronounce a sound opinion on the measure. Hence it is both inadvisable and undesirable that Mussalmans should be called upon to sit on the Select Committee. Further, no precedent should be created whereby any piece of social legislation affecting a particular community, especially when it is interwoven with religious customs and usages, may come under the review of the representatives of other communities in the Council, except perhaps when the proposed measure is of such a general character as to concern all the Indian communities. For these reasons I rise to oppose the Hon'ble Home Member's amendment, and if the amendment were carried, I shall have respectfully to decline to serve on the Committee." 12-28 P.M.

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Sir, I rise to give my adherence to the principle of the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's Bill and also to support the amendment of the Hon'ble the Home Member that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee of all the non-official members of this Council. I hope I shall speak loud enough to be heard even by the Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur. It has been said that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel's name will go down to posterity as an apostle of reform, if the Bill be enacted; whether it will be so I do not know; but I congratulate Mr. Patel on having brought forward a measure which has had the unique effect of galvanising into very vigilant activity my friend, the Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur, who since yesterday has been very alert, indeed, to express his opinions on this Bill and who has conveyed that impression to the Council by means of his interruptions and bobbing up and down in his seat a number of times to catch the President's eye. You will pardon my saying, Sir, that it seemed to me you were rather unkind to the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur in not giving him a chance in the first onrush of his enthusiasm, when he might have said even more interesting things than he did to-day, after his ardour had cooled down slightly. Now, I have always thought that there was some justice in the observation that the civilisation and culture of our friends in Bengal was more of a veneer than substantial or real, and the fact that the presidency of Bengal should have, through the mouths of two of its representatives, the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Kasimbazar and the Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur, opposed the Bill does seem to me to support that view. But I take strong exception to the exaggeration of the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur when he said that in Bengal nobody who is anybody is a supporter of this Bill. When I heard that, I asked myself whether it had come to this that, in this Council anybody from Bengal could say so in the face of my leader, Mr. Surendranath Banerjea. Is he nobody in Bengal? Mr. Banerjea occupies a high position in our public life, not only in Bengal, but throughout the whole of India, and has done so for the last thirty years; and his support, speaking as a Brahmin and as a leader, should surely carry weight with this Council as against the views of the Maharaja of Kasimbazar and the Rai Bahadur. I have known the Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur to enjoy a high reputation as a financier, but never as a social reformer, nor as a gentleman who could enlighten this Council on such questions. He read out a great deal of quotations for which he apolgised. I am sorry that in spite of my sitting so close to him I could not catch all that he said; but the few words which escaped through his mufflers gave me the impression that he was opposed to this Bill on the very old grounds of 'religion in danger,' 'society going to pieces,' and such other things. Now, I think, it is time that such frivolous objections were not placed before this Council, except on very substantial grounds, and I venture to say that he advanced to-day no substantial argument in support 12-29 P.M.

of the contention that this Bill should not be referred to a Select Committee. It may be that the Bill is not so comprehensive as it should be; it may be that the Bill leaves various important matters without incorporating them in its text, and I hope that the Select Committee, after careful consideration, will make provision for the matters referred to in the speeches of the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma and the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri. The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur went on to say that the Bill was so fundamentally wrong that it should not go before a Select Committee at all. It seems to me, if I may say so without impertinence, to be making a preposterous suggestion to this Council. I do not think I need detain the Council with regard to the observations of the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Kasimbazar. He is a gentleman who is held, not only in Bengal but even outside it, in high regard for his generosity and public benefactions; but he is unfortunately one of those 'birds of evil presage' who think that the whole society is going to pieces when the least change is going to be made in the social customs of the country. That view certainly is absolutely wrong, and I hope in this particular matter we shall be guided, so far as Bengal is concerned, not by the views of the Hon'ble Maharaja or the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur, but by those of so veteran a leader as the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea. As for my friend, Mr. Ayyangar, he is one of those gentlemen who are home-rulers in matters political but non-home-rulers, I suppose, in all other matters. If it comes to ousting the jurisdiction of the Government and encroaching upon their preserves he is, I am glad to find, the first in the field; but when it comes to making any concession to his own people, some little privilege being conferred on them, he stands up and contends that it is fundamentally wrong, so fundamentally wrong that he would not feel justified even in joining the Select Committee . . . .

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde:—"On a point of order, Sir, is it permissible to any Hon'ble Member to make these personal remarks? That is all that I want to say."

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Member, I think, understands the question of non-parliamentary language very well; that being so, I will only say that until now the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha has said nothing 'unparliamentary.'

The Hon'ble Rai Sita Nath Ray Bahadur:—"We are not here to hear sermons on personal matters."

The Vice-President:—"I greatly regret that I did not hear what the Hon'ble Member said."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"Have I your leave now to go on, Sir?"

The Vice-President:—"Certainly."

The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha:—"To my mind, Sir, this Bill is a very small instalment of reform which has been long overdue. To begin with, it is a purely enabling and permissive measure; it does not compel anybody to do anything against his wishes. The Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur thought that he was putting forward a most crushing rejoinder against those in support of this Bill when he said 'Oh! you gentlemen approve of this in theory; but are you prepared to carry it out into practice by marrying your children outside your caste?' I hope I am quoting correctly the substance of what he said. Now, I do not desire to say anything about children, as my only child is two years old, and I do not suppose that even the Rai Bahadur can say that he should be married at the present moment. But, speaking for myself, I am quite willing to marry him outside my caste, if the Rai Bahadur will help me in that matter. My marriage was the first inter-caste marriage among the Hindustanee Kayasthas, and I am prepared to go farther with regard to my child. I think there are many people here who are not only mere theorists in this matter, but who are desirous of taking a step in advance by marrying outside their caste. I do not think that, therefore, it is a fair argument to put forward that everybody, who supports the Bill, is a mere theorist and is not willing to carry out his theories into practice.

"Now, Sir, I am the only member, besides perhaps the Hon'ble Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan, who was in this Council before when Mr. Bhupendranath Basu introduced his Bill. That Bill, as we know, went much further than the present one. I was one of the strongest supporters of that Bill through all its stages. Naturally, therefore, to my mind, this Bill is a very diluted measure, a very meagre one. I wish it had gone much further; but I have always been a most moderate man (I do not yield in moderation to anybody, not even to my leader the Hon'ble Mr. Surendranath Banerjea), and as an exceptionally moderate man, although personally I would go much further than this Bill, I am prepared to support it cordially. I have always believed in acting up to the principle inculcated by Cardinal Newman in his famous hymn—

'Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom, Lead Thou me on;
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead Thou me on.
Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see,
The distant scene: one step enough for me.'

"I believe that in all matters, whether political or social, one step in advance is a great thing to have; and that is why, although personally I think that this measure is not so advanced as it might have been, I am prepared to vote for it.

"Under your ruling, Sir, I am not to say anything about Brahmins and non-Brahmins and I shall loyally abide by it. I shall only say that in the province which I have the honour to represent here, Bihar and Orissa, there is fortunately no such thing as the Brahmin and the non-Brahmin question; but I am glad to find that in this Council the support given to this Bill is not based on any such consideration as that of Brahmin and non-Brahmin. My friends, Mr. Sarma, Mr. Sastri and Mr. Banerjea, who are all Brahmins, have supported the Bill; whereas the objection curiously has come from the Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh, the Maharaja of Kasimbazar and the Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur who are non-Brahmins. I do not think, therefore, that their objection is an important matter to be taken into account. I frankly say that the vast bulk of the community, at present, is against the Bill; and if I give it my support I do so as my own personal view, and I do not say that I represent in this matter the views of the vast bulk of the people in Bihar and Orissa. At the same time, I do not concede that because that is so, I have no right to vote for this Bill being enacted. The Hon'ble Mr. Ayyangar propounded certain views which seemed to me rather curious and untenable. He contended that a man who lived in a certain society or under a certain system of administration, social or political, must subscribe to all its rules and regulations, without making any effort to have them improved or amended, or he should go out of it. That is a proposition which I do not at all accept. On the contrary, I think it is the bounden duty of every human being to try to improve his conditions and surroundings, whether political or social, or moral and to advance further and further to higher ideals. It has been my settled conviction that the reason of the phenomenon that, while all the old Empires, Assyria, Babylonia, Phoenicia, Greece, Rome and others have perished, India has survived cataclysms and vicissitudes, and even now after thousands of years is still a vigorous nationality, producing great scientists, orators, legislators, speakers and public men distinguished in all walks of life, is that Indian society has always possessed and displayed most marvellous powers of adaptability to environment. It is that which has saved India from extinction, while all the other great Empires of old have decayed and disappeared. We have got even now the country called Greece, but as Byron said. 'It is Greece, but living Greece no more.' So about Rome, and so about other great Empires in the ancient world. It is, therefore, I think, that those gentlemen who stand against some little progress being made are not the best friends of the people, but they are really those who, not knowing it perhaps, do a great harm to the best interests of the country. I should like to refer for a moment to the question raised by my Muhammadan friends as to whether it is right for them to take part in the proceedings of the Select Committee. It was the view of a very high official, Lord Morley, and, I believe, Mr. Asquith also made certain statements at the time the Minto-Morley reforms were under consideration, to the effect that the differences between Hindus and Muhammadans cut so deep and were so radical that it was impossible for them to act together or for the Government to ignore them. Remembering these, I would congratulate the Hon'ble the Home Member on the observations that he made yesterday on this question. He said it may be that there are differences between Hindus and Muhammadans, but after all they have to live together in the same country; they are under the same conditions of life, and they are more likely to know what are the interests, the grievances, and the requirements of each other than an official from England. I hope I have quoted substantially the observations of my Hon'ble friend, with which I entirely agree. Why should not Hindus give their advice on a question affecting Muhammadans or vice versa? Some years ago Mr. Jinnah brought in a Wakf Validating Bill. I was one of those who gave it my support. I did not feel justified in refraining from doing so because it was a matter that primarily concerned Muhammadans. This is a question on which, if I may say so without impertinence or disrespect, the Muhammadans are taking what does not seem to me to be a correct view. I gather from what Sir Umar Hyat Khan said that he is afraid that this will create a precedent for putting Hindus on committees considering questions that concern Muhammadans. I am confident that if ever Government put Hindus for considering a measure particularly affecting Muhammadans, the Hindu members would work loyally with the Muhammadans and would not act in any manner detrimental to their interests. For similar reasons we shall most heartily welcome co-operation on the part of our Muhammadan friends, and I am sure we may expect to benefit from their sound advice. With these observations, I strongly support the motion of the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent."

12-46 P.M. The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyed Nawab Ali Chaudhri:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent has moved the amendment that all the non-official members of the Council be included in the Select Committee, and has exhorted Mussalman members to join and work in that Committee. This compels me to rise up and explain our attitude with reference to the Bill and the inclusion of the Mussalman members in the Select Committee. I regret to differ from Sir William, but I feel that I have no right to interfere with the religious custom, usage and the law of inheritance of other communities just as I resent being interfered with in mine. It has been admitted even by Mr. Patel that the orthodox section of the Hindu community is against the Bill, while the liberal elements are amongst its enthusiastic supporters. I confess I am no judge of liberalism and orthodoxy in Hindu religion, and I have no desire to thrust my opinion in a controversial question that purely concerns the Hindu community. My Hon'ble friend Raja Sir Rampal Singh has challenged the representative character even of the Hindu members of this Council and has questioned their right to represent the religious Hindu opinion. Whatever may be the justice and propriety of his remark, the Muhammadans, at any rate, have no locus standi there. Let orthodoxy and liberalism fight out their battles in the Select Committee where our amateur advice, I feel, will be more of a hindrance than an assistance. 'Do as you would be done by', says a popular adage, and I cannot tolerate the idea of a legislative measure concerning the religious convictions of Mussalmans being rushed through under the advice and guidance of other communities. But our presence in the Select Committee imposes on us the obligation of acquiescing in the presence of non-Moslim members in committees that shall have to deal with the religious questions of the Mussalmans. This reciprocity of the rights and duties is the first axiom of natural justice, and we cannot insist on any right while we shirk the corresponding duty. Under these circumstances, I regret I am compelled to oppose the inclusion of the Muhammadan members in the Select Committee."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I should like to advert first to the criticism of Mr. Sastri on the attitude of Government in this matter. As I understood him, he said that the Government insisted that a Bill of this character should be supported by a large majority—I hope I have interpreted him correctly—before it could be accepted. I think he has gone, if I may say so, a little beyond anything that I have said in the course of my tenure of office, although I remember, if my memory serves me correctly, an observation of my predecessor which gives some colour to what he said What I said when this Bill was introduced was that the Government would be largely guided by the opinions of those primarily affected by the measure in dealing with it at a subsequent stage. That I conceive to be a very reasonable attitude on the part of Government. You, Sir, at a subsequent stage of the debate said 'that the Government will be guided by the opinions they receive and the views they hear is quite certain. But my Hon'ble colleague Sir William Vincent did not say that the fate of the Bill would depend upon the majority of the opinions received. All that my Hon'ble colleague said was that Government would be guided by the opinions they receive'. I think I ought to make the facts clear. Our position in regard to this Bill is one of great difficulty; we are very anxious not to throw out by an official majority what seems to many of us at least to be a liberal and right measure. At the same time, we are anxious not to force upon persons, a majority of whom possibly do not want it, a Bill which affects their social life so closely. I think the Council will admit that that is a difficult position for the Government to be in, and it was for that reason that we seek now to obtain the assistance of non-official members. 12-49 P.M.

"I notice with regret, if I may say so, that many of the Muhammadan members of this Council, whose opinion is entitled to great weight, feel strongly in this matter, and being unwilling to serve on this Select Committee object to the line Government has taken.

"My answer is very short. We cannot in any way insist on their sitting on this committee, nor was it my intention to put any pressure upon them to do so. What I intended was to give those Muhammadan members who desired to do so, particularly those who represented mixed constituencies, an opportunity of sitting on the committee if they thought fit. Further, if the Select Committee had been confined to Hindu Members, it would have meant excluding various members who are not Hindus and yet are not also Muhammadans, but whose opinions would be of great value. I want to make my point quite clear. We do not in any way want to force my Hon'ble friend Nawab Ali Chaudhri, for instance, to act on this committee if he feels that his conscience does not permit him to do so. That is far from our desire, and I am quite sure, far from Mr. Patel's desire too, but we hope that those who think that they can assist in a matter like this can give the committee the benefit of their advice.

"I said a moment ago that this was a liberal measure and for that reason individual members of the Government have great sympathy towards it, and I should like to refer in that connection to what my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea said on the danger of excessive conservatism in Hindu law, and to cite from the letter of the Government of the United Provinces on this point as the argument is of great weight and indicates that this conservatism has been accentuated since the British administration. The Lieutenant-Governor clearly points out how under the strong and stable British Government case-made law prevailed, crystallising superannuated customs and preventing new customs from growing. I agree with what he says and think that this is one of the great dangers of the present Government.

"I turn now to the speech of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma, and I must confess to being much impressed by many of the arguments that he put forward. He supported the Bill, but at the same time he put forward practical difficulties which must have appealed to every member of this Council, to minimise which would be idle He referred, for instance, to the difficulties about inheritance, adoption and legitimacy. Then we had the question raised by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri as to the necessity of registration, and confining this law to monogamous marriages,—and raised the question whether such marriages should only be permissible to those who have attained majority. And while I am speaking of monogamous marriages I am quite sure that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel does not endorse the suggestion made by the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda on this matter. Mr. Chanda apparently had in his mind not a system of polygamy but of polyandry, for, if I understood him correctly, he referred to a suggestion that no man or woman should be allowed to marry outside his or her caste if he or she had a wife or husband living. This was, I think, a mistake of the Hon'ble Member. I cannot think that the Hon'ble Mr. Patel contemplated any legitimatising of polyandry.

"All these are, however, matters of detail which will have to be considered by the Select Committee, and if the committee think it necessary to alter the Bill very much in these respects the question of re-publication and inviting public opinion on the new provisions will have to be considered as was suggested by the Hon'ble Rai Sitanath Ray Bahadur. Many of the questions involved are of great intricacy and complexity. We are, speaking as a Government, in no way anxious to press a measure of this kind on an unwilling people We are also well aware of the force of the remarks made by the Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampalsingh that whatever people may say or do now, in the end it is the Government which will be made responsible for the measure. If there is any odium excited, Government will have to bear it, and Hon'ble Members who support the Bill in the Council will escape the responsibility which must attach to Government in such a matter. What we want at first is to get the Bill referred to a Select Committee, where it will, I hope, be examined with the greatest care. If the committee think it ought to be re-published, then we are prepared to re-publish it. If they think that material additions are necessary to provide for the difficult questions raised by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma, then we shall pay the greatest attention to the wishes of the Select Committee, but I hope for the present that Hon'ble Members will accept the amendment which I have placed before the Council."

12-57 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"May I rise to make a personal explanation, Sir?"

The Vice-President:—"Certainly, only a personal explanation."

The Hon'ble Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda:—"I wish to say that I had the following clause in Act III of 1872 in mind when I made the observation:—

'Neither party must at the time of the marriage have a husband or wife living. I thought it is better to provide for a possible contingency on the lines of Act III.'

12-58 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"Sir, I am indeed very much obliged to the Hon'ble Members of this Council. I have no reason to complain. The motion has been received very well by a great majority of my Hindu friends and, I may say, has been sympathetically treated by the Government. I must say that I have been attacked on all sides for other reasons, but I do not mind the attack because the Bill has received support from those who attack me personally. Perhaps it is my own fault. I invited the attack, and I got it, and I am not sorry for it. My Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea thinks that I made a tactical blunder. And he also stated that I was not right in saying that the great majority of Hindus were in favour of the Bill, but in any case he said that I made a tactical blunder in criticising a certain section of the community. Well, I plead guilty to the charge. Perhaps I did make a tactical blunder; I do make tactical blunders now and again. That is my weak point always. I very often speak bluntly, sometimes feelingly too. But that cannot be helped, that is my temperament. I cannot, however, agree to the proposition of my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea and supported by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri, that the great majority of Hindus are not in favour of the Bill. I am not prepared under any circumstances to take that view. The evidence does not justify it. What are the propositions that I submitted in my opening speech in connection with this motion. I said the great majority, if not the entire Sudra community, the great majority of the Sudra community was in favour of my Bill. The second proposition that I submitted was that a great majority of the non-Brahmins were in favour of my Bill, and the third was that a great majority of Brahmins were against my Bill. These were the three conclusions that I drew from the heap of materials placed before this Council. Now let us analyse each. Is it or is it not true that the majority, and a very great majority, of the Sudra community, is in favour of my Bill? I challenge any member of this Council to prove that the majority of the Sudra community is not in favour of this Bill. Why, for the matter of that, out of 20 millions of Hindus in the Presidency of Bengal from which my Hon'ble friend Mr. Banerjea comes, more than half, I think, about 11 millions are Sudras. All of them are in my favour. How can you possibly say then that the majority of the Hindus of the Bengal Presidency are not in my favour, unless you are prepared to say that Sudras are not Hindus, which you dare not If the Brahmins are prepared to say they do not count Sudras among the Hindus, then I can understand it. Under these circumstances, I do maintain, and I am sure every member of this Council will agree that a very great majority of the Sudra community of this country is in my favour. The second proposition is that the non-Brahmins by a majority are in my favour. I do admit that there is a minority of non-Brahmins against this Bill, but I cannot persuade myself to accept the view which my friends state that the non-Brahmins are by a majority against my Bill. I see no evidence in the heap of papers that have been placed before this Council that the majority of non-Brahmins are against my Bill. We were told by my friends Mr. Sarma and Mr. Rangaswamy Ayyangar that the associations that I referred to and on whose opinions I relied were really not representing the non-Brahmin opinion in Madras. That may be so. I do not know the inner intricacies of the working of these Brahmin and non-Brahmin institutions in Madras. I do not profess to know these things. I bow to the superior knowledge of my friends; but may I ask what associations in Madras represent the Hindu opinion? Does the Mahajan Sabha of Madras represent the Hindu opinion? Well if it does, there is an opinion in the papers here from the Mahajan Sabha, Madras, of which my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma is the President. That Sabha sends an opinion to the Government of India that the Hindus are in favour of my Bill, and that opinion has been signed by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma. . . . .

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"That the Sabha is of that opinion."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"The question is whether the Sabha represents Hindu opinion or whether the non-Brahmin Association represents Hindu opinion. Take them together if you like. If those two Associations together do not represent Hindu opinion, what Association in the Madras Presidency really represents the Hindu opinion, may I know from these two gentlemen? Under these circumstances, I am not prepared to accede to the view that the non-Brahmins are by a majority against my Bill. I am still strongly of opinion, from the evidence before me, that the non-Brahmin by a majority are in favour of my Bill. So there is the proposition that Sudras are by a majority in my favour and there is this further proposition that non-Brahmins by a majority are in my favour. There then remain only the third and the only other class, namely, the Brahmins, and I agree that the Brahmins by a majority are against me. Is any one prepared to challenge that statement of mine? I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong, but I am quite sure they are not prepared to say that the Brahmins are not against my Bill. Perhaps it may be said that the majority of the Brahmins and great minority of non-Brahmins are against, and therefore the great majority of the Hindus are against my Bill. That is not so. I am glad my friend Mr Sastri referred to a pamphlet by an eminent legal gentleman from Bombay of the name of K. R. Daphtary, in regard to the majority and the minority opposition to my Bill Mr. Daphtary says:—"

'It is impossible to say that the opposition to Mr. Patel's Bill is in the majority. If you deduct out of the 22 crores of Hindus the untouchables and Sudras there remain only 9 crores! Of these, the Rajputs, the Marathas, and many other castes have allowed intermarriages with other castes, though in individual cases, it may be difficult to prove a custom in the Courts of law. The same may be said of Vanias and Vaishyas and some Brahmin castes. You have then to take out the Jains, Buddhists, Sikhs, and those religious sects and samajs and institutions, which have seceded from Brahmanism or which have as their object the removal of the present differences and distinctions of caste. A vast majority of the educated people sympathise with the Bill. What remains is an insignificant minority though on account of its present position it may make somenoise.'

"Well. Sir. I am not alone in taking the view that only an insignificant minority oppose the Bill. However, as one Hon'ble gentleman pointed out, and very rightly too, it is not a question of majority or minority. The Bill is intended only for those who want to take advantage of it; it is certainly not intended for those who do not want it.

"Now I come to the discussion in this Council by Hon'ble Members on the provisions of the Bill. In the first place, there are those who oppose the very principle of the Bill, on the ground that the whole Hindu religion is in danger. That is an old cry, we know, and I do not propose to reply to that argument as other Hon'ble Members have already answered it, but I must try to answer those Hon'ble gentlemen who point out certain defects in the Bill. Well, I do not claim that my Bill is perfect. I certainly claim simplicity for the Bill. It is as simple as it possibly could be, but I have not claimed perfection for it. The points raised are mainly whether this Bill should not be restricted only to monogamous marriages, and whether it should not be applied only to adults, and whether any provisions regarding inheritance and succession should not be incorporated in it. Well, when I drafted the Bill, I considered all these points, and with regard to the first two I thought it would be much better if I proceeded on the lines of least resistance. As I said in my opening remarks, I do not desire to engraft on the Hindu marriage any new principle not yet recognised by the Hindus. I thought the Bill would be opposed if I attempted to do so. In fact, I am perfectly at one with my Hon'ble friends who put forward these points, but may I point out to them that they go further than I propose, and they must consider whether they will not provoke more opposition from the Hindu community by trying to engraft these new principles on to Hindu marriage.

"My Hon'ble friend Mr. Sastri referred me to the opinion of Mr. P. E. Percival, the District Judge of Poona, for whom I have very great respect. What did he refer me to that opinion for? He referred me to that opinion by way of caution that I should proceed on the lines of least resistance. Well, I am perfectly prepared to do so, but my friend says that this Bill should apply to monogamous marriages only and that the parties to them should be adults. Personally, I have no objection, but is it consistent with his advice to proceed on the lines of least resistance? I am perfectly at one, as I have said, with my friends who criticise my Bill on these grounds, and am quite prepared to incorporate these points in the Bill. In fact that great social reformer, Mr. Natarajan, the Editor of the 'Social Reformer,' had criticised this Bill on these two grounds and I had a talk with him when I told him that, so far as I was concerned, I was perfectly willing to go forward on the lines suggested by him. In fact, I stand out for social equality of all communities. I hate the social domination of one section of the community by any other as much as I hate the political domination of one nation by any other. That is the reason why I have brought this Bill, but, as I said, I want to proceed on the lines of least resistance, and I should certainly like to incorporate these provisions in the Bill if the majority of the Select Committee so desire.

"Then I come to the difficult question of inheritance and succession. I must say . . .

The Vice-President:—"I would ask the Hon'ble Member not to discuss those questions now. They are purely questions for Committee."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"That question also I had considered at the time and thought that the difficulties regarding inheritance and succession were really solved by the Removal of Caste Disabilities Act I find there are many people who think similarly. Sir P. K. Bose of the Central Provinces is of the same opinion, so is Mr. DeSouza, a District Judge of the Bombay Presidency. They think these difficulties do not arise because of the provisions of the Removal of Caste Disabilities Act. Therefore, I did not think it worth my while to incorporate any such provision, but if the Select Committee think that these difficulties are still there, I am sure they will make the necessary amendments. It is a question more for the lawyers to decide. I do not claim to know much about these legal technicalities, though I do not think that the point made by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma is so strong that a provision must find a place in the Bill; I am inclined to agree with the other view.

'Then, Sir, the motion that stands in my name is a motion for reference to Select Committee consisting of six non-officials and five officials. The motion of my Hon'ble friend the Home Member is a motion for a Select Committee of all the non-official members. I do not know really what to say . . .

The Hon'ble Major Malik Sir Umar Hayat Khan:—"Leave out the Muhammadans."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel:—"But I do feel that the Government should have decided its attitude in this matter. To my mind the duty of the Government is absolutely clear. We are out for responsible government When Mr. Basu's Bill was on the anvil the position was quite different. You are committed now to the introduction of responsible government; we all want it. You believe, rightly or wrongly, that these castes and these creeds and these differences of opinion and divisions and all sorts of things are an obstacle to the attainment of responsible government. You never make a secret of your views; you have been saying that times without number. The whole Montagu—Chelmsford Report—the Chapter on Difficulties of the Problem—is full of these things. Now, if you honestly believe that this is one of the obstacles to the attainment of responsible government in India, is it really not your duty to help those of us who want gradually to get rid of these obstacles? As I say the times have changed; we have adopted a different policy. His Majesty's Government has announced that responsible government is the goal and that you are asked to co-operate with us. There is a mandate from His Majesty the King-Emperor. How are you going to co-operate if you do not help us in removing what in your opinion are obstacles? Why do you assume a neutral attitude? Is not such attitude likely to be misconstrued by men like me? This is a question which the Government has got to consider. I would like here to refer to the attitude taken years ago by the Government of India in matters of social legislation. Sir Fitzjames Stephen as Law Members years ago, said—

'That English education in all its forms leads straight away from all forms of Native orthodoxy, is a proposition which I have never yet heard disputed. How can we sow the seed and refuse to recognise the crop?'

"Then again, Sir, when the Hindu Widows Marriage Bill was on the anvil, Mr. Grant, afterwards Sir John Peter Grant, in the course of the debate on that Bill said the following words which are applicable with equal force to-day:

'It was said that this measure would interfere with the Hindu religion and it was also said that this measure, though in outward appearance merely a permissive law, was in point of fact a coercive law.

'There was no foundation whatever for the first of these objections. The Bill left every Hindu free to act in accordance with his own religious views, but it would be an interference with Hindus in their religious concerns if the Council should refuse to pass this Bill . . . . If when 5,000 Hindus came forward and asked to be relieved from the operation of a Municipal Law which prevented their acting in this matter according to their convictions, the Council allowed that Municipal Law to remain in its present state then indeed would it be interfering with the religion of a large body of Hindus; but if it did relieve the petitioners, and all who think with them, from the restriction of the Municipal Law of which they complain he denied that this would be an interference with the religion of any human being.'

"Sir, there is no question of interference with any religion. I do not ask you to help me in making a law for the equality of all classes of the Hindu community, but I want you to help me in unmaking a law which imposes inequalities. I want you to help me in unmaking the Judge-made law which imposes disabilities. I want you to leave the caste free to deal with such matters. However, as my Hon'ble friend the Home Member has already stated, the matter has not yet finally been decided by the Government and their attitude will be determined later on. At present the Bill goes to the Select Committee. I should very much like that committee I have proposed be appointed, but I know that as my Hon'ble friend has his own motion down my motion stands no chance, I would, therefore, rather accept his than lose both."

The Vice-President:—"I propose to put the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent's amendment first. The original motion is that the Bill to provide that marriages between Hindus of different caste are valid be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes, the Hon'ble Sir William Vincent, the Hon'ble Mr. Muddiman, the Hon'ble Dr. Sapru, the Hon'ble Mr. Chanda, the Hon'ble Mr. Sastri, the Hon'ble Mr. Khaparde, the Hon'ble Mr. McPherson, the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha, the Hon'ble Mr. Kincaid and the Hon'ble Mr. Patel.

The amendment moved thereto is that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of myself and all the non-official members of the Council."

The amendment was put and agreed to.
The Council adjourned till Monday, the 1st of March at 11 o'clock.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Monday, the 1st March, 1920.

PRESENT:

His Excellency BARON CHELMSFORD, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.C.M.G., G.C.B.E., Viceroy and Governor General, presiding, and 56 Members, of whom 48 were Additional Members.

OATH OF OFFICE.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Kurma Venkata Reddi, Nayudu, made the prescribed oath or affirmation of allegiance to the Crown.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar asked 10-55 A.M.

Employment for discharged Indian Army clerks.

1. "(a) Is it a fact that Indians were enlisted as combatants for the Indian Army for service as clerks in Indian regiments and other military offices of the Military Departments, after a course of training for which two schools have been in existence, one at Kamptee (Central Provinces) and the other at Rawalpindi?

(b) Do Government propose to advise the Government of the provinces to which they belong to instruct heads of departments definitely that the cases of such clerks should, on their discharge from military service, be considered favourably, and that they should be given clerical appointments commanding fair salaries?

(c) Do Government propose to suggest to the Provincial Governments the desirability (1) of throwing open to enlisted clerks discharged from the Military Department admission to Government institutions for training as Police Sub-Inspectors, Prosecuting Sub-Inspectors, and Revenue Inspectors, and (2) of placing the said clerks, after training on probation under Prosecuting Inspectors and Tahsildars for a reasonable time to be fixed by Government within which the candidates should qualify themselves for these posts?

(d) Do Government also propose to relax some of the physical and educational qualifications in the case of discharged combatant clerks who may be a little below the standards prescribed for such posts?"

"In view of the heavy demands for, and difficulty in, obtaining trained Indian clerks for employment, both regimentally and departmentally, in India, on the frontier and with Overseas Forces, two training schools were instituted in May 1918, one at Kamptee (Central Provinces), and the other at Rawalpindi. The former has since been closed. When trained, the clerks were employed on liberal terms either regimentally, in which case they were enrolled as combatants, or in military non-regimental offices, in which case they were detailed as civilian clerks. As the outturn from the schools did not commence until July 1918, the large majority of the clerks were employed in India, and very few were sent overseas.

The attention of the Hon'ble Member is drawn to Home Department Resolution No. 1099, dated the 8th August 1919, published in the Supplement to the Gazette of India, dated the 23rd idem, in which announcements were made of the concessions granted in the matter of civil appointments under Government to those persons who have rendered services in the prosecution of the recent war. Copies of the Resolution were communicated to Local Governments and Administrations, and the Government of India do not intend to issue further instructions on the subject."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar asked:—

Increase of pay of subordinates of the postal and railway mail service staff.

2. "(a) Have not Government been receiving numerous petitions from the subordinate Postal and Railway Mail Service staff that their pay should be increased, that the number of working hours should be limited, and that the staff in respective offices should be increased to cope with the increased work?

(b) If so, have Government taken any action to inquire into the grievances and remedy them?

(c) Is it a fact that the responsibilities of the Postal staff are far greater than those of similar clerks employed in the Telegraph Department; while the qualifications of the Postal staff are in no way inferior to that of the Telegraphists, and that on many occasions the postal officials are made to work on main wires?

(d) Is it a fact that Telegraph signal room clerks were granted time-scale pay, with effect from 1st March, 1919, according to local scale telegraphists? If so, has any such scale of pay been granted to those post office clerks who are of the same educational qualifications and do more responsible work than the above-mentioned telegraph clerks?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to say what attendance is required from postal clerks? Is it confined to 8 hours daily as in the case of telegraph clerks? If the attendance is more than 8 hours, is any allowance paid for extra work? If not, do Government propose to take immediate action to regulate attendance hours of the postal clerks?

(f) Do Government propose to introduce a scheme to amalgamate or equalise the two cadres?

(g) Is it a fact that the Audit Branch of the Postal Department and those who were deputed to field service have been given increase of pay, while the Audit Department have had a considerable increase of staff also?

(h) Is it feasible to empower the new commission sanctioned to inquire into the grievances of the Telegraph Department to inquire also into the disabilities under which the Postal clerks are suffering?

(i) If not, will a new commission be appointed for the purpose?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"(a) Yes.

(b) Yes. A general revision of the pay of the subordinate Postal staff up to the grade of Rs. 100 at a cost of about 18 lakhs a year has just been sanctioned by the Secretary of State, while the pay of the Railway Mail Service staff was revised, with effect from 1st March, 1919, at a cost of about Rs. 3,25,000 a year. The question of the introduction of a general time-scale of pay for all Post Office and Railway Mail Service subordinates is engaging the attention of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs.

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [Sir George Barnes; Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar; Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi.]

(c) It is very difficult to compare the duties of postal clerks engaged in signalling work in combined post and telegraph offices with the duties of telegraphists. It is a fact that selected postal signallers work sometimes on main wires, but, as a rule, they are not capable of dealing with very fast traffic. When postal signallers show a capacity for fast telegraph work they are given the opportunity of transferring to the local scale of telegraphists.

(d) No. The time-scale of pay sanctioned for clerks, class II, working in departmental telegraph offices is Rs. 30 rising to Rs. 130 by increments of Rs. 5, whereas the scale adopted for local scale telegraphists is Rs. 50 rising to Rs. 130.

No time-scale has yet been granted to post office clerks, but the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs has under consideration a scheme for a time-scale for all Post Office clerks.

(e) The attendance of Post Office clerks is fixed at 8 hours a day as in the case of telegraph clerks. The staff necessary for a post office is calculated on this basis and is revised periodically as work increases or decreases. No allowance is paid to a Post Office clerk for extra work unless it is outside the course of his routine duties.

(f) No. The cadres are quite different. The duties are only similar in certain respects.

(g) The pay of the Postal Accounts Establishment has been increased and the establishment itself has been, though not considerably, strengthened.

No increased rates of permanent pay have been granted to men deputed to field service.

(h) and (i) No."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswamy Ayyangar asked:—

3. "(a) What steps have been taken by Government to better the pay of the Post Office officials at Delhi owing to increased expenses on account of house rents, etc.? Steps taken by Government to better the pay of Post Office officials at Delhi.

(b) Will Government lay on the table a comparative statement of articles dealt with by the Lahore and Delhi Post Offices, respectively, during the year 1919, and also give the numbers of the clerical staff sanctioned for each office?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"(a) A general revision of the pay of post office clerks up to the grade of Rs 100 has just been sanctioned and the special conditions of Delhi have been taken into account in fixing the cadre of the postal officials of the Delhi head office. The question of revising the pay of postal clerks on Rs. 100 and above and of the postmen and menials is engaging the attention of the Director-General. It is intended to introduce a time-scale for all classes of the staff.

(b) A comparative* statement showing the various classes of articles posted and also the number of unregistered articles received for delivery at Delhi and Lahore during the calendar year 1919 is laid on the table. It has not been possible within the time allowed to collect statistics relating to money orders, value-payable articles, registered and insured letters and parcels received for delivery during the period in question, nor of unregistered letters posted for delivery. The clerical staff of the Delhi office consists of 59 men and that of the Lahore office of 94."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

4. "What are Government's present intentions in regard to controlling inter-provincial movements and export of rice, and what arrangements do they propose to make in this behalf in the different provinces, and when?" Control of rice.

* Not included in these Proceedings.

[Sir Claude Hill; Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"As regards export I would refer the Hon'ble Maharaja to the reply that I made to a question on the same subject asked by the Hon'ble Sir G. Chitnavis on the 18th February. The question of inter-provincial control is under discussion with the Committee of this Council on High Prices."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

Requirements in food grains of the people of the different provinces.

5. "(a) With reference to the reply to my question given on the 15th September, 1919, in this Council, admitting the unreliable character of statistical information at the disposal of Government, will Government indicate the methods generally followed by them in computing the normal requirements in food grains of the people of the different provinces, or of India as a whole, or their exportable surplus at any given time?

(b) What precautions do Government propose to take for preventing serious inaccuracies in these matters in future?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"(a) Government obtain through Directors of Civil Supplies, who take special steps to keep in touch with the position, estimates of the requirements of the Provinces or of the surplus available for export therefrom, in regard to those articles of food which are still subject to control. No attempt is made to frame a quantitative estimate of the normal food requirements of the people of the different Provinces or of India as a whole.

(b) Directors of Civil Supplies have during the past year gained considerable experience in the framing of these estimates, and the Government of India believe that their estimates are sufficiently accurate for practical purposes so far as the present control is concerned. The accepted policy of Government is to remove internal control, as soon as possible, and the need for any such precautions as are suggested by the Hon'ble Maharaja will then, it is hoped, disappear."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

Food situation in the different provinces.

6. "Are Government in a position to make a detailed statement showing the present food situation in the different provinces, with special reference to the sufficiency or otherwise of the present stocks of food grains for purposes of domestic consumption in the respective provinces, and the course of average prices during each of the last three months as compared with the figures for the corresponding periods in each province, together with the reasons for any increase in the same that may be disclosed thereby?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"Government will lay all the information in their possession before the Committee on High Prices appointed by this Council, and I shall also be happy to furnish the Hon'ble Maharaja with any information that he requires, if he will let me know precisely what details he wants."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked :—

Speculation in food grains.

7. "(a) Are Government considering the desirability of making a declaration of future policy in dealing with abnormal conditions brought about by speculators in the food situation?

(b) Have Government any legislative measure under consideration for dealing with speculation and profiteering in food grains and keeping down prices?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied :—

"(a) The question whether any special steps can be taken to prevent speculation in food grains is being considered by the Committee of the Council on High Prices. So far as speculation exists with a view to export Government have already declared their policy of restricting exports of foodstuffs in the press communiqués which were laid on the table on the 18th February in answer to a question by the Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis.

(b) The reply is in the negative."

The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Khaparde asked :-

Prohibition against certain Urdu papers of Delhi entering the Punjab.

8. "(a) Did the Government of the Punjab prohibit the transmission of copies of the 'Congress' and 'Watanpurast,' two Urdu papers of Delhi, into the Punjab by orders dated 20th October, 1919 and 25th November, 1919, respectively, and are the said orders still in force?

(b) If the reply to (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the circumstances under which the said orders were passed? Is it a fact that, though the paper 'Congress' has been in existence for one year, it was never so much as warned, much less held to blame for violent or inflammatory writing, and that the paper 'Watanpurast' had not, at the date of the said order, reached the stage of public circulation?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"(a) The answer is in the affirmative. The order against the Congress has been withdrawn on the re-appearance of the paper with a new Editor. The Watanpurast never reached the stage of publication.

(b) The Congress was excluded from the Punjab on account of its virulent attacks on His Excellency the Viceroy and Government generally; and as the intention of its promoters in publishing the Watanpurast was to substitute it for the Congress, and so evade the order of exclusion issued against the Congress a similar order was passed against it. The Congress started publication on 1st February, 1919. It was not, therefore, in existence one year before the order of exclusion was passed. During that period no warning was conveyed to the Editor, but as the tone of the articles was objectionable, the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, subjected it to precensorship and the Punjab Government followed suit. As stated above the Watanpurast never appeared."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. E. Crum asked :—

Railway Bridge over the River Hooghly.

9. "Will Government be pleased to state what action they are taking, or intend to take, with regard to the proposed railway bridge over the river Hooghly in the neighbourhood of Cossipore?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied :—

"The part of the river in which the bridge is likely to be located has been surveyed by the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta, and their report and recommendations are now under review by the Government of Bengal. Essential preliminary borings at the proposed crossing are also being carried out by the Eastern Bengal Railway, and the results are awaited."

The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis asked :—

Working expenses of railways.

10. "(a) Is it a fact that the percentage of working expenses has increased to an abnormal extent on some of the railways, a return upon the capital of which is guaranteed either by the Secretary of State or by the District Boards? If so, to what is this high percentage due?

(b) Do Government propose to direct that the periodical Director's Report shall contain a full explanation regarding any rise in working expenses and any fall in the revenue of the railways subsidised either by the State or District Boards?"

[Sir Arthur Anderson; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir William Vincent; Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied:—

"(a) Having regard to the circumstances of the times Government are not aware of any increases which could be called abnormal in the working expenses of lines such as those referred to.

(b) The programme of revenue expenditure on such lines is scrutinised by Government before being sanctioned, and any marked discrepancy would require explanation. Government do not propose to issue directions such as those suggested by the Hon'ble Member, but the point raised by him will be brought to the notice of Boards of Directors."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked:—

Revocation of orders against proprietors of printing presses.

11. "Do Government propose to consider the advisability of revoking or securing the revocation of orders issued against proprietors of printing presses and editors and publishers of newspapers requiring them to furnish securities in provinces where it has not been already done?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied:—

"The matter is one in which it is for Local Governments to exercise their discretion, and the Government of India do not propose to interfere with that discretion."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked:—

Annual increase in the expenditure under salaries and pensions in certain services.

12. "What is the annual increase in the expenditure under (a) salaries, and (b) pensions in the several services, Imperial and Provincial, in respect of which orders have been passed by the Secretary of State?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied:—

"(a) The approximate cost per annum of the increases of pay sanctioned by the Secretary of State for the several Imperial and Provincial Services is as follows:—

I will give the details in lakhs.

(i) Indian Civil Service	36,00,000
(ii) Provincial Civil Service	25,00,000
(iii) Indian Police Service	13,00,000
(iv) Provincial Police Service	1,00,000
(v) Indian Medical Service	25,00,000
(vi) Indian Forest Service	4,50,000
(vii) Indian Educational Service	10,00,000
(viii) Provincial Educational Service	6,00,000
(ix) P. W. D. Imperial and Provincial Services	25,00,000
(x) Railway Department, Imperial Engineers	1,00,000
(xi) Geological Survey of India Department	1,00,000
(xii) Indian Mines Department	15,000
(xiii) Northern India Salt Revenue Department	50,000
(xiv) Bengal Pilot Service	20,000

The estimates given above of the cost of the revision of the pay of the Provincial Civil Service and the Provincial Educational Service are no more than very rough approximations, as Local Governments have still to work out their detailed schemes within the maximum limits approved by the Secretary of State.

(b) The increase under pensions is estimated roughly at Rs. 3,00,000 per annum."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked:—

Publication of the Services re-organization Committee's report.

13. "Do Government propose to publish the report of the Committee appointed to consider the question of the re-organization of the Indian Medical Services and give this Council an opportunity of discussing the same before final orders are passed thereon?"

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief; Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir Thomas Holland; Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto; Sir George Barnes; Mr. N. F. Paton.]

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief replied :—

"The Secretary of State has approved the publication of the Report; this will be done as soon as the recommendations of the Army in India Committee on the subject dealt with have been received by the Secretary of State. It is not possible to say at present whether an opportunity can be afforded for discussion in Council of the Report."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked :—

14. "What steps do Government propose to take or to suggest to the Local Governments to take with a view to appoint conciliation boards or boards of arbitration to prevent and settle disputes between labour and capital? Do Government propose to undertake the necessary legislation on the subject?" Appointment of conciliation boards or boards of arbitration.

The Hon'ble Sir Thomas Holland replied :—

"The Government of India have gathered as much information as possible regarding experience obtained in other countries, and this is now under consideration with a view of consulting Local Governments as to the practicability of devising means in India to prevent and to settle labour disputes. It is not possible, therefore, at present to say whether legislation will be necessary."

The Hon'ble Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto asked :—

15. "Do Government contemplate the possibility of opening the port of Karachi for the P. and O. Mail steamers in the near future?" Opening of the port of Karachi for the P. & O. Mail Steamers.

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied :—

"There is no intention at present of making Karachi a port of arrival and departure for the P. and O. mail steamers."

The Hon'ble Mr. N. F. Paton asked :—

16. "(a) Is it a fact that Parliament recently decided against Premium Bonds being issued in England, for the reason that they might inter alia primarily result merely in the transference of large investments in Government securities, etc., already made? Premium Bonds.

(b) Was it represented (1) that there are now about 20,000,000 individual holders of British Government securities, as against 343,000 before the war; (2) that £200,000,000 have been invested in War Savings Certificates; and (3) that the deposits in Post Office and Trustee Savings Banks have increased from under £300,000,000 in 1914 to nearly £1,800,000,000 at the end of 1919?

(c) Have Government considered to what extent, if any, the arguments, which are preventing Premium Bonds in England, have application to India?

(d) Will Government be pleased to say—

(i) How many individual holders there are in India of Indian Government securities;

(ii) How many of these are holders of Post Office War Certificates;

(iii) What is the total sum now invested in Post Office War Certificates; and,

(iv) What is the total sum now deposited in Government Savings Banks?

(e) Having regard to the acting Finance Member's reply in Council to my question on 23rd September last, to the effect that it was probably a fact that very large quantities of silver rupees are being hoarded throughout India, have Government determined on the adoption of any measures calculated to bring into circulation this dormant wealth ?

(f) Are Government now prepared to consider issues of Premium Bonds with the view that our hoards of idle money may be drawn into circulation and that an opportunity for the investment of savings may be given to persons of small means to whom the existing opportunities afford no attraction ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey replied :—

" (a) The reason mentioned by the Hon'ble Member was certainly put forward by opponents of the motion in the House of Commons on December the 1st last, but a perusal of the report of the debate does not warrant the impression that it was the principal ground on which the House acted in negativing the motion.

(b) The figures quoted by the Hon'ble Member do not appear to have been put forward in the debate and Government are unaware whether any such figures were placed before the Select Committee in 1918; but figures somewhat similar to these were quoted in the press at the time.

(c) Government have not specifically considered the application to India of the arguments adduced by opponents to the introduction of premium bonds in the United Kingdom.

(d) The information desired by the Hon'ble Member in respect of points (i) and (ii) is not available. As regards (iii) the balance invested in Post Office Cash Certificates on the 31st January last was 614 lakhs, and as regards (iv) the balance in the Government of India Post Office Savings Bank on the same date was 20 crores and 53 lakhs.

(e) The Hon'ble Member is no doubt aware of the steps taken by Government to popularize its loans and thereby encourage the investing habit.

(f) The Government of India are at present considering the advisability of allowing an experiment to be made in the issue of premium bonds by local bodies and considering the terms on which such issue can be allowed."

The Hon'ble Rai Sahib Seth Nathmal asked :—

New Arms Act rules.

17. "(a) Do the new Arms Act Rules take away from provincial gazetted officers and honorary magistrates the privilege of exemption which they have enjoyed uninterruptedly from the very inception of the Indian Arms Act ?

(b) Is Government aware that this has caused dissatisfaction among such officers and magistrates ?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the question of amending the rules further with a view to continue the exemption to these persons ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

" (a) Yes.

(b) Government believe that some dissatisfaction exists, but it has not been brought directly to their notice.

(c) The attention of the Hon'ble Member is invited to the Government of India (Home Department) Resolution No. 2125-C, dated the 21st March 1919, in which the new policy in administering the Indian Arms Act is stated. One of the essential features of that policy, which was deliberately adopted after consideration of the opinions of Local Governments and the recommendations of a committee of official and non-official Members of this Council, is the rigid restriction of the number of exempted persons. Provincial gazetted officers and Honorary Magistrates are only two among many classes from which the privilege of exemption has been withdrawn by the application of the new Rules, and Government see no reason for making an exception in their favour."

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Marris.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

18. "Do Government propose to co-operate with the people of India and help them in securing development in Indian conditions as early as possible, and if so, how ?" Development in Indian conditions.

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"Government will always be ready to play their part in promoting the political development of India, but they draw the Honourable Member's attention to the expression of Parliament's opinion in the preamble of the Act to the effect that progress in such matters must depend on the co-operation received from those on whom new opportunities of service will be conferred, and the extent to which it is found that confidence can be reposed in their sense of responsibility."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

19. "Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose for the information and guidance of the new Legislative Councils and public generally to lay down, in the rules to be made under the new Act, definite principles governing the revision of the list of the Transferred Subjects from time to time within ten years ?" Transferred Subjects.

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"The Hon'ble Member has apparently overlooked the preamble to the Government of India Act of 1919, in which the principles he desiderates are set out in the clearest possible manner. In this preamble Parliament has indicated that progress will depend upon the operation of factors at present unknown Consequently, the Government of India do not propose to attempt to formulate the rate or conditions of the further transfer of subjects in the rules to be made under the Act."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

20. "(a) Is it a fact that the Government of Bombay have not yet given full effect to the local self-government Resolution of the Government of India, in so far as such effect could be given by executive orders, particularly in matters relating to the increase in the number of elected members, election of Presidents and lowering of qualification for votes ? Action taken by the Government of Bombay on the Government of In[illegible]lution on Local Self-Government.

(b) Is it true that as things stand at present, the lists of voters for the elections of the new Legislative Council will be based on qualifications lower than those for the Municipal and Local Board elections ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Marris replied :—

"(a) The question is one which might suitably be asked in the local Legislative Council. The Hon'ble Member is referred to the speech made by His Excellency the President of the Legislative Council of the Governor of Bombay on the 10th December 1919, to paragraph 22 of Resolution No. 8969, dated the 27th October 1919, of the Government of Bombay, and to paragraph 31 of Resolution No. 9449, dated the 11th November, 1919, of the same Government.

(b) The qualifications proposed in the case of the Bombay Legislative Council, for classes other than the wage-earners in the city of Bombay, are shown in the Appendices to the Report of the Franchise Committee. Those for rural areas are much lower than the qualifications now in force for elections to Local and District Boards. Those for urban areas also appear to be lower than the qualifications in force for elections to the Presidency Corporation and to the District Municipalities, but as the basis adopted is not identical in the two cases, the Government of India are unable to say what the precise difference is, and would suggest that the Hon'be Member should ask the Bombay Government for this information. As regards wage-earners in the city of Bombay the Hon'ble Member is referred to the answer given to his question on the 20th February."

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir William Vincent; Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Issue of Press Communique in connection with the Royal Proclamation.

21. "Do Government propose to consider the desirability of issuing a Press Communiqué, for the information and guidance of their officers, that in the new era they will follow strictly the letter and the spirit of the Royal Proclamation in dealing with the people of India ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The Government have no reason to apprehend that any of their officers will fail to follow the letter and the spirit of the Royal Proclamation in dealing with the people of India. Such a proclamation has an inherent authority and influence which no Government orders can supplement."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"I beg to put a supplementary question, my Lord. Does the Government consider the action of Mr. Hamilton, the District Magistrate of Jullundur, in refusing to renew licences under the Arms Act, on the ground that the applicants attended the Indian National Congress, consistent with the letter and spirit of the Royal Proclamation ?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"The Government of India have no official information on the point raised by the Hon'ble Member, and it is a matter for interrogation in the local Legislative Council."

FINANCIAL STATEMENT FOR 1920-21.

11-14 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"In your speech delivered on the opening day of this session, your Lordship referred to the great services which Lord Meston had rendered in the cause of Indian Reforms; I may be permitted here to-day to add an expression of regret that his guiding mind is no longer at the disposal of India at a time when her finances present so many complicated problems; that this Council will no longer have the benefit of that happy gift of lucid exposition, which could render interesting the most complicated questions of finance and seemed able to endow with a spirit of life the dry bones of our statistical tables. That happy gift I cannot pretend to emulate; but I will venture to pay my distinguished predecessor the compliment of attempting to imitate the method adopted by him last year in introducing the Financial Statement. I will not read out to Council the necessarily lengthy Statement which I shall shortly place on the table, but will give as briefly and as clearly as possible the salient features of interest in it.

"I shall deal first with the facts and figures of the financial year now drawing to a close. While for our partner nations in the great War it has been a year of demobilisation, a year in which they have been able to devote their efforts to making a beginning in the reorganisation of their social and industrial forces, we have had troubles of our own which, if small in comparison with what Europe has endured during the last four years, have nevertheless had a dominant influence on our finances. But for the Afghan war and Waziristan campaign, there was nothing in the history of the year which would have been likely to disturb our budget anticipations. Scarcity conditions, resulting from the monsoon failure of 1918, persisted through the earlier months of 1919, and before June famine had been formally declared in twelve British districts and certain Native States. But though the area affected by the scarcity was unusually wide, the maximum number of persons on famine relief was less than one-tenth of the number on relief in 1900. All apprehension of really severe famine conditions was relieved on the arrival of the monsoon. Somewhat late in coming and at first ill-distributed, it declared itself in strength towards the end of July and finally gave a rainfall such as India had not seen for many years past. It is true that, though the monsoon relieved the immediate actual scarcity, it did little to reduce the prevailing and widespread stringency due to high prices, which has caused and is still causing great distress to all classes on fixed wages and fixed incomes. We have witnessed the inevitable reaction in strikes and threatened strikes throughout the country; the temporary provision made in the shape of allowances to lower paid Government servants has already added seriously to our expenditure, and both the Imperial and Provincial Governments have had to include in the figures for the coming year large provision for the revision of their subordinate establishments. But if many of the poorer classes were suffering from the stress of prices, the general economic conditions were undoubtedly favourable to trade. With the gradual improvement in freightage and traffic facilities both imports and exports have increased. There has been a marked improvement in the balance of trade in favour of India. That balance in the first nine months of the year amounted to 64 crores as against 35 in the previous year, and an adverse balance of 5 crores in 1917. A further proof of the growing prosperity, and a clear evidence of the extent to which India has accumulated capital during the war, was afforded by the remarkable growth of company flotations during the year. We may take somewhat divergent views of some aspects of this extensive flotation of capital issues; for the present I only adduce it as encouraging evidence of India's increased interest in the economic use of money and her obvious ability to finance an era of industrial expansion.

"Up to this point, with the exception of the strain caused by the Afghan war and the internal pressure of high prices, the financial history of the year has presented no unusual features. There is, however, another side to the narrative of more peculiar interest to-day, and one with which I know the Council will wish that I should deal in some detail: I mean the history of currency and exchange during the year. We fortunately had no such violent currency crisis as that which Lord Meston described so graphically last year. Though we have used up the great bulk of the bullion secured to us by the Pittman Act, and which saved us from inconvertibility last year, we have now a reasonably strong holding of silver coin. In October it stood at 35 crores, the highest since 1915; it stands to-day at over 28 crores. Strong as our holdings are, we shall not be in calm water till we can be assured of laying our hands on fresh supplies to replenish the gradual process of absorption now taking place—a difficult matter in the present state of the world's markets. We have, therefore, reluctantly been obliged to retain the restrictions on the free encashment of notes at our district treasuries; and to maintain the check on the movement of silver by train. But if the silver position has not caused us any great anxiety, the movement of exchange has been of engrossing interest during the year. Lord Meston explained last year how the rise in exchange followed the breaking away of silver from its pre-war level. That process has continued, and the further changes which have been made in the rates for Council drafts have as before been dictated by the threat of a heavy loss on coinage and the danger to our silver currency caused by the premium on the export of rupees.

"The closing fortnight of the last financial year introduced a new factor into the problem, which has rapidly grown to dominate every other feature. In March last official support of the American exchange with England was withdrawn: the dollar exchange, weighted down by the indebtedness of Europe and the balance of trade against her, commenced to fall; and the American price of silver ceased to be the one dominating factor in determining the rupee sterling exchange. The rate at which India could acquire silver for coinage no longer depended solely on the price of silver in dollars, but was adversely affected by the smaller number of dollars that could be obtained for the pound sterling. Moreover, the rising price of silver itself received a new impetus early in the current year, through the removal in May of control in America. The lower exchange value in America of the pound sterling, and the rapid rise in the price of silver in American currency, necessarily entailed the raising of the exchange value of the rupee, if we were not to see our silver coins smuggled out of the country and our currency notes made inconvertible. In May the rate for Council drafts, which had remained stationary at 1s. 6d. for over a year, advanced to 1*s*. 8*d*. and this was followed by further rises till in December the rate stood at 2*s*. 4*d*.

"To counteract as far as possible inconvenience to trade from the instability of exchange, Council and sterling drafts have been offered for sale as freely as our resources in India or at home, as the case may be, have permitted. During the first nine months of the year the demand for Councils persisted with varying degrees of urgency, until January when a complete reversal of the position occurred. The Currency Committee had just completed their sittings and their conclusions were awaited. The export trade at the time was not urgently calling for finance, and the uncertainty as to the future led a number of remitters to take advantage of the 2*s*. 4*d*. rate then prevailing. A demand for sterling drafts arose and during January Reverse Councils to the extent of 5¼ million were sold. This recital of the changes which the year 1919 has witnessed in the exchange value of the rupee brings me to a consideration of the new orientation which has recently been given to our policy, with the acceptance by the Secretary of State of the recommendations of the Indian Currency Committee. We have accepted without qualification the Committee's conclusions, which are substantially on the lines which we ourselves recommended in October last. It is possible that the Secretary of State's decisions on certain of the Committee's recommendations may be the subject of discussion or legislation in this Council. For the present, I will merely indicate the two outstanding features of the Committee's recommendations; these are, firstly, the linking of the rupee to gold, and secondly, the adoption of a ratio therefor equivalent to one-tenth of the gold contents of the sovereign.

"On the first point, I think it may fairly be said that there is a strong body of opinion that the Committee's conclusion was inevitable Linked to sterling, the rupee would share with the latter all its fluctuations of fortune. Every rise of prices in sterling-using countries would inevitably, by the mechanical linking of the rupee to the pound, communicate to this country the same shrinkage in the purchasing power of money, and until sterling regained its parity with gold, India would be saddled with an unstable and fluctuating standard of value. We should continue to share with the United Kingdom all the evils of inflated prices. It would be impossible to give any definite gold value to the rupee, or to say what amount of silver a rupee could purchase in America; while restrictions on the movements of the precious metals would have to be continued indefinitely.

"As regards the second point, the actual rate to be adopted for the ratio between the rupee and gold, the matter is more controversial; and fears have been expressed in some quarters that the rate of R10 to the gold content of the sovereign is too high, and may inflict injury upon our export trade. I will only emphasise two considerations, bearing on the choice between a high and a low rate, which seem to me to outweigh all others. The first is that, if the high prices now prevailing in most foreign countries are to be brought into relation with Indian prices on an exchange basis for the rupee at anything approaching the old level of 1*s*. 4*d*., then the consequences to the people of this country would be little short of disastrous; the present level of internal prices would be stereotyped, or, as is more probable, would advance to heights even now unthought of. The interests of the many millions of consumers in India, whose margin of subsistence is at the best none too large, must come before those of any other class. Secondly, a return to a low exchange would very seriously imperil all chance of maintaining the convertibility of the note issue. If the rupee were linked on to gold at a rate of 15 rupees to the gold content of a sovereign, it would be impossible to maintain our silver currency unless the price of silver in America remained below 92 cents. At 10 rupees to the sovereign we can purchase silver and coin rupees therefrom up to an American price of 138 cents, which is well above the melting point of the currency of almost every other country.

"Unfortunately (and I come now to the fact which will be most prominent in the minds of Council and the public to-day in this connection because the result of the working of these theories is, perhaps, of more interest than the actual theories themselves), at about the time that the Report was published the dollar-sterling exchange, which had already fallen heavily, took a further downward plunge. In these circumstances, the linking of the rupee to gold necessarily caused its exchange value as expressed in sterling to rise by several pence. The demand for reverse Councils became unprecedentedly great and the exchange markets could have absorbed considerably more than the £11 million of reverse Councils which we sold during February. This fact resulted in a considerable divergence between the gold rate at which, following the Currency Committee's policy, we have been selling reverse Councils and the actual market rate. Speculators and profiteers have not been slow to take advantage of the situation. The effect of the heavy remittances made, accompanied by a sudden attempt to realise assets, was sensibly to tighten money. The present situation is one that requires caution in handling, and we have been in continuous communication with the Secretary of State in the matter. The general lines of the legislative measures which with the sanction of the Council we propose to take, have been explained in a public announcement made on February the 23rd. The object of these measures is to provide for the continued sale of reverse Councils with the minimum embarrassment to the market through the withdrawal of funds, and I do not think I need say any more on the subject on the present occasion. But I must add a warning that a prolonged continuance of the present conditions would inevitably react upon our whole ways and means programme for next year, which is now, by reason of its very magnitude, far more dependent than formerly upon Indian money conditions.

"This account of the course of exchange, and of the measures which have now been taken to adjust our policy to the changed conditions of the time, brings me to a matter which is of considerable importance in dealing with our revised estimates and our budget anticipations, and to which I must devote some explanation. Our accounts have throughout the year continued to be kept on a 1*s.* 4*d.* basis and the Secretary of State has decided that, for the purpose of this Financial Statement, the conversion of rupees into sterling and vice versâ should be effected at the old level. This results in a number of complications, particularly as regards our capital and remittance transactions, to which I shall refer in due course. In order that the Council may judge of the aspect of our budget on the 2*s.* basis, which the Secretary of State has decided to adopt for all our accounts and statistics with effect from the 1st April next, I have had a separate statement prepared showing the budget estimates of revenue and expenditure for the next year as recast on the new basis. The matter with which I am more immediately concerned is the method by which we propose in the revised and budget estimates to treat our gain by exchange. We estimate that during the current year the net gain, that is, the gain after deducting the loss on rupee coinage and on gold purchases, acquisitions and sales, will amount to R11¾ crores.

"Now it will be at once obvious to Hon'ble Members that in this "gain" there is a great element of artificiality, and that it would not be correct to assume that whenever our accounts show a gain on exchange, this represents a real accretion to our resources, for the so-called gain we obtain every time we transfer a million pounds to the Home Treasury is liable to be turned into a loss if the amount has to be retransferred to India. There are, however, certain of our operations, the exchange gain in respect of which we are entitled to regard as real and permanent. Most of our capital outlay on railways consists of the purchase of machinery and stores in Europe or America. We have decided therefore, in view of the large sums involved, that our capital accounts should properly get the benefit of the higher rate of exchange prevailing. Accordingly, out of our total gains by exchange of R11¾ crores in the current year, R7½ crores will be credited to the railway, irrigation and Delhi capital accounts.

"There remains, then, R4¼ crores to be dealt with, and when considering how this should be treated we are met by another fact of capital importance. The definite abandonment for accounts purposes of the 1*s.* 4*d.*

rate, and the adoption therefor of a rate of 2s. to the rupee, will result in our accounts showing, what after all is merely an accomplished fact, a serious capital loss on our sterling holdings, more particularly on those which form the sterling portion of the Paper Currency Reserve. Without entering here into the details on which the calculation is based, I may say that the deficiency in our Paper Currency Reserve, assuming a revaluation on a 2s. basis, may ultimately amount to nearly R40 crores.

"I wish to emphasize very strongly that the making up of this deficiency is not a matter which can be postponed indefinitely, or can be regarded as of theoretical rather than of practical importance. Quite apart from any question as to our legal responsibilities under the Paper Currency Act, the circulation of our currency notes rests ultimately upon public confidence, and we cannot contemplate with equanimity a position in which the amount of the securities held in the Reserve is patently insufficient to cover the circulation. The importance of adopting speedy measures to supply this deficiency is obvious; it is equally obvious that this object should have the first call upon the gain by exchange, seeing that they are both due to one and the same cause. After consultation with the Secretary of State, we have decided to earmark the residue of the current year's exchange gain, amounting to R4½ crores, for meeting this deficiency.

"I have now finished with the greater part of the technical matter and I can come to an account of our actual incomings and outgoings.

"I will first deal with the ordinary heads of revenue and expenditure. In framing his estimate of revenue for the current year, Lord Meston was faced with a very obscure situation; but he took an optimistic view; and events have justified his optimism. Both Railways and Customs show a response to the improved economic conditions of the year; and income-tax has also exceeded our budget expectations. The net result will be that our Imperial revenue will be R1,35½ crores against an estimated total of 1,29½ crores. Our ordinary heads of expenditure (excluding for the moment the Military Services) will show a nearly corresponding excess. Taking the whole ordinary expenditure (excluding Military) the total will amount to R69 crores against an anticipated total of R64 crores: and the position as between revenue and expenditure is a great tribute to the accuracy of the estimates prepared last year by Lord Meston and Mr. Howard. It is when we come to take count of the figures of Military expenditure that the result assumes an aspect entirely contrary to their anticipations. They expected a surplus of £600,000; I have to announce a deficit of £14⅓ million. The Budget provided for a total Military expenditure of £41¼ million, which included £8¾ million representing the current year's instalment of the additional war contribution. In respect of this last item we will actually pay only £1½ million; on the other hand, the Afghan war and the Frontier operations are estimated to have cost us £14¾ million, while the ordinary military expenditure shows an excess of £8¼ million, the net result being an excess of no less than £15¾ million. That is a result for which, I know, the Council will to some extent be prepared, but which nevertheless requires some justification.

"In presenting the Military estimates for the current year, it was assumed that the year 1919-20 would be one of demobilisation. Unfortunately, as the Council are well aware, this anticipation has not been realised. We were compelled not only to postpone the disbandment of considerable bodies of additional troops which were raised in India in 1918, but also to adopt every expedient which economises human life at the expense of mechanical contrivances and which makes life more comfortable on field service. High prices ruled everywhere and these affected not only the cost of material but the cost of our Indian recruits, including followers. But the expenditure was unavoidable; when it is a question of war, purely financial considerations must necessarily give way. So much for our direct expenditure on the Frontier operations; but apart from this the general military expenditure in the current year is as I have said estimated to exceed the specific provision in the budget by £8¼ million. The occurrence of this excess expenditure, in addition to the direct liabilities of the Frontier operations, has engaged our anxious attention for some time past, and in November last, a Sub-Committee of the Executive Council was appointed to investigate the causes contributing to the excess demand. In the result, while steps were taken to enforce every practicable economy, extra expenditure to the amount now stated has been found to be inevitable. The detailed figures will be found in the Financial Statement; the excess is explained partly by the cost of the war gratuities and by the increase in the pay of personnel; partly the execution of items, ahead of programme, which, though adjustable for accounting reasons against the ordinary estimates, are more or less directly attributable to the Afghan war. In short, regrettable as the excess of ordinary military expenditure may have been, it was obligatory, and much of it is of a kind which will be of permanent value.

"So much for the details of revenue and expenditure, leading up to our deficit of £14⅓ million. But the financial history of the current year is not yet quite complete, for I must refer briefly to the manner in which we have financed ourselves during the year, a question dealt with in that portion of our budget known as the Ways and Means section. I do not think I need enter into great detail here. One fact I may state by way of preface. We now no longer suffer from the difficulties which caused so much embarrassment to Sir William Meyer and Lord Meston, by the fact that so much of our cash balances were locked up in London. It has now become possible for the Secretary of State to retransfer his surplus balances to us by means of remittances of gold; and the difficulties of the future are likely to arise not from the locale of our resources but from their amount. Neglecting for the present the Secretary of State's transactions, we have had to provide finance in India for 130 crores. Allowing for receipts of gold and from reverse Council Bills, amounting together to 80 crores, we have had to find 50 crores by other means. It is the method by which this sum has been provided which will interest the Council. Our rupee loan realised 21¼ crores. We made no attempt on this occasion to repeat the special propaganda associated with the two war loans; we had in 1917 and 1918 dipped heavily into the pockets of the investing public; and in the present year we had, competing with us, a very large number of new Company issues. The result of our loan therefore is, as I think the Council will agree, of hopeful augury for the future.

"Leaving on one side, as of minor account, the figures of cash certificates and savings bank deposits, I come to a source of finance which has become of increasing importance—if occasionally also of some anxiety to us—our Treasury Bills. Lord Meston entertained the hope of being able, during the course of 1919-20, to reduce our treasury bill outstandings by about R22 crores. These hopes were defeated by the large outgoings due to the Afghan war and the frontier operations, which had to be financed mainly by fresh sales of bills; the extent to which this was necessary will be gathered from the fact that at one period in October our outstandings had grown from 49¼ crores on April 1st to no less than 68 crores. In September our treasury position was one of particular difficulty and, I know, was viewed with anxiety by Mr. Howard. There were heavy maturities of bills to meet, and very high military issues, while the Secretary of State was drawing on us for Councils at the rate of about a crore a week. The proceeds of the loan were speedily exhausted, and our balances remained so low that all possible sources of assistance had to be exploited. In the first place, as in the preceding year, the Presidency Banks were able to come to our help, and, all told, their advances to us amounted to 18½ crores. Secondly, we were obliged to obtain from the Council legal authority to increase our fiduciary issue of notes by 20 crores.

"In December (a month in which little revenue is collected and when our treasury balances are at the best of times always low) we had no less than 26½ crores of treasury bill maturities to meet. During December it seemed from day to day that we should have to fall back on our increased powers of note issue, but events happily took a more favourable turn; we were not driven to that final extremity, and we managed to turn the corner till, at the beginning of January, our revenue began to come in. Since then our position has been one of comparative ease; and we anticipate that we shall be able to reduce our treasury bill outstandings by the end of the year to the figure at which they stood at the beginning of April last, while the whole of the ways and means advances will have been repaid to the Presidency Banks.

"But we have been sailing very near the wind, and the moral is obvious. Anything approaching 50 crores of treasury bill outstandings, to say nothing of the 68 crores reached in October last, is a dangerous amount of floating debt for India to carry. We must do all in our power to reduce our floating debt to more manageable proportions. In so far as this is not effected by funding in our long term loans, we must aim at utilising any surplus, arising from our ordinary revenues, to strengthen our ways and means position and to make us less dependent on the particular form of finance with which I have been dealing.

"So much for the history of the year that is ending; I now turn to the budget for the coming year. I do not propose to trouble the Council with many details of our anticipations under the various heads of revenue and expenditure. Broadly speaking, these are based upon the belief that there will be no set-back in general prosperity and that our revenues will continue to show that same expansion which has been exhibited in the current year.

"As regard Customs we are budgeting for R25½ crores, representing an increase of over R3 crores on the expected revenue of the current year. Under Railways we have taken an increase of R4 crores over the R80 crores budgeted for the current year. As regards the gains from exchange, I will confess at once that it is difficult to frame a reliable estimate of what this figure is likely to be next year; on the best estimate we are able to frame, our total gain during the year will amount to about R30¾ crores. Of this amount R12¾ crores will be credited to our capital accounts; we propose to earmark R12 crores towards meeting the deficiency in the Paper Currency Reserve, leaving R6 crores to be credited to our revenue account.

"If these anticipations be realised, our total Imperial revenue will be £92¼ million (R1,38¾ crores). The estimate assumes the discontinuance of the Excess Profits Duty which was imposed as a temporary measure in March last.

"On the expenditure side, there is little to bring to the notice of Council. Altogether our expenditure under the ordinary heads is expected in the aggregate to exceed that of the current year by £3 millions. The most important item, however, if of course our military expenditure. We are entering a total figure of £40 million, as against £41½ million in the current year's budget and the £57 million which we are expecting will actually be incurred; but I would ask the Council to bear in mind that whereas out of our figure of £41½ million last year only £32½ million was meant to be available for the effective service of the army, our figure for next year gives £38½ million as so available. The question of military expenditure for the coming year has caused us no less anxious consideration than that of the excess expenditure during the year drawing to a close. The matter is being specially examined by the Sub-Committee of His Excellency the Viceroy's Council, to which reference has already been made, and the problem with which they have to deal is one of unusual difficulty. But I may say at once that, if India is to maintain in an efficient state an army of the strength required for the adequate defence of her frontiers, the cost of the military services will in future be much in excess of the sum which we have been accustomed to allot in our budget for this purpose. We obviously cannot revert to the pre-war standard of equipment, since it would be neither right nor humane to deny to our soldiers the advantage which an improved equipment ensures, and the new equipment is extremely expensive both in initial cost and cost of maintenance. I can give the Council a guarantee that the very full data collected by the Army authorities have been exhaustively scrutinised; every feasible economy has been effected, and the provision of £40 million is the least which can safely be inserted in the Budget.

"I have given the major details both of revenue and expenditure; and I now come to the net result; and it is the net result which will after all have most interest for the Council this morning. The net result is that we anticipate a total expenditure of £90½ million resulting in a surplus of £2 million. This is somewhat higher than that for which we usually budget, but if I have carried the Council with me in the remarks I made just now regarding the grave necessity for keeping down our floating debt, it will appreciate our reason for going somewhat beyond the usual figure. But what the Council will also desire to know most, is whether we hope to attain this surplus without increased taxation; and I will not keep them in suspense on the subject.

"In only one direction do we propose to modify our present scale of taxes. The present super-tax on the undivided profits of companies and firms has been the subject of considerable criticism in the past. In the speech which he made last year on the Excess Profits Duty Bill Lord Meston gave on behalf of Government an undertaking that the question of so readjusting our taxation on incomes as to meet these objections would be considered as soon as the excess profits duty ceased to be levied. That time has now arrived. On the best estimate we have been able to frame we conclude that, if we relieve the undivided profits of companies and firms of the super-tax at present imposed, which runs up to 3 annas in the rupee, we shall lose about R1,76 lakhs. We therefore propose to replace this by a new form of super-tax, which will be assessed at the flat rate of 1 anna in the rupee upon the total income of each company in excess of R50,000. The new super-tax on companies is estimated to bring us in about R44 lakhs more than we lose. We should have been glad of course to have utilised this surplus in regrading the lower stages of the ordinary income-tax in order to relieve the poorer taxpayer and to make the stages more symmetrical. But we have felt it unsafe to do so at present in view of the necessity, to which I have already referred, of making provision for meeting our temporary debt and short term liabilities

"I have one more explanation to give in connection with the estimates of revenue and expenditure, and it is an important one. Both in our revised estimates and our budget for the coming year provision has been made for the payment of certain portions of India's further contribution towards the cost of the war offered to His Majesty's Government in pursuance of the Resolution passed in this Council in September 1918. These entries have been made only provisionally, since the Resolution contained a reservation that the offer of this further contribution should be subject to the conditions and safeguards indicated in Sir William Meyer's speech. Those conditions were that the payment would be reconsidered in the event of two contingencies occurring,—firstly, our having to fight on our own frontiers and to incur large expenditure in that connection, and secondly, our being faced with serious financial burdens in other respects such as a famine or great currency crisis. The Council will probably agree with me that the second contingency has not arisen. But the expenditure of about £15 million involved by the Afghan war and frontier operations of 1919 clearly makes the first condition operative. Whether we should stand on that condition, or should agree to waive it, wholly or in part, is a matter which must be left to the verdict of the non-official Members of the Council. There are considerations of weight on both sides. I will not attempt to balance these here, but in order to provide Honourable Members with the material necessary for forming an opinion on the merits of the case, I have appended to the Financial Statement a special note on the subject, in which I have endeavoured to state impartially the financial aspects of the case.

"I will now deal with the demands which we anticipate will fall on our cash resources during the coming year. The most important item is our capital outlay on railways, irrigation and Delhi. We hope to continue the progressive railway policy initiated last year and are budgeting for a railway capital expenditure of £18 million in England and 4½ crores in India as compared with the £18 million in England and nil in India budgeted for the current year. For irrigation we are budgeting for £580,000, which is all that the Public Works Department can spend until some of the large new projects now begun or under contemplation reach a more developed stage. For Delhi we are entering £800,000, which is however reduced to £736,000, by a credit for gain on exchange. Another very important item is the entry of £13 million for discharge of debt. From 1920 onwards our various series of War Bonds, issued in 1917 and 1918, will mature, and for some years their repayment will make a severe call on our resources; on August 15th next we have to find over 19 crores for this purpose.

"Next, we hope to apply 9 crores in making up the deficiency in the Paper Currency Reserve; and finally, we have to meet heavy drawings by the provinces on their balances amounting to over 5½ crores, largely required to finance increases in the pay of subordinate establishments. Altogether, then, we have to meet liabilities amounting to £38¾ million. This is a heavy liability, and our power to incur the capital outlay proposed will depend to a large extent on the measure to which we can count on obtaining money through our rupee loan. We assume, for the present, that the Indian public will be prepared to take up our loan with something of the freedom shown in the current year and have felt justified in taking a figure of 15 crores. Should we be disappointed in this, we shall be obliged, however reluctantly, to curtail our capital programme. With the remainder of the details making up the total of £38¾ millions I need not now trouble Council.

"I have now summarised the revenue and expenditure and the ways and means forecasts for the coming year; and I can conclude a narrative which I am afraid must have already proved too long for the patience of many here. But before I do so, I must allude to one financial consideration of engrossing interest to most members of this Council. I promised a week ago a statement regarding the extent of the finances which will be at the disposal of the reformed governments under the new classification of accounts. The Joint Report of 1918 anticipated an Imperial deficit of 13½ crores, that deficit being made up by contributions from the provinces. This would have left the provinces in the aggregate with a net surplus of about 2 crores. After considering the effect of the present budget as arranged on a 2 shilling basis, we now feel justified in assuming for the present a reduction of the Imperial deficit to 6 crores, and we have provisionally indicated this figure to Lord Meston's Committee on Financial Relations as the basis of their inquiry into the apportionment of contributions We have further indicated that we propose to assume the liability for extinguishing these contributions within a measurable time. The result will be that, adopting the figures of the provincial budgets for next year, as at present known to us, the Local Governments will be 11 crores a year better off than under the present division of revenues between the Government of India and themselves.

"Let me now add a few words as to our general position, in the present and immediate future. It would indeed have been a grateful task had I been able, in presenting to the Council the revised estimates of the present year, to exhibit a result more in keeping with the anticipations expressed by Lord Meston on the 1st March last year. But if the Afghan war has involved us in a heavy deficit, the picture is not entirely devoid of brighter features. Our revenue has more than fulfilled the expectations formed last March; our silver reserves stand reasonably high; and we have managed to finance ourselves up to the present without utilising the power taken last September to increase the fiduciary note issue. For the coming year we take, and experience shows that we are justified in taking, an optimistic view of the growth of our major revenue heads. Our estimate of expenditure is of course dominated by the high figure which we have been obliged to insert on the Military account, but we hope to finance the increased demands on our resources, both civil and military, without any additional burden to the country other than that involved in the rearrangement of the super-tax to which I have already alluded. On the capital side we contemplate a liberal railway programme; and we look forward to meeting the repayment of the 19 crores of War Bonds which fall due in August next. Let me again emphasise the fact that this programme can only be realised if India gives a liberal response to our rupee loan in the coming year.

"As for the future, the revenues of India are steadily and surely expanding; and their expansion affords a guarantee, in my opinion, of their adequacy to meet such problems of development as immediately confront the administration of the country. Our pre-occupations lie rather in the provision of ways and means to meet our capital liabilities. Our outstanding liabilities are not light; we are still carrying nearly 50 crores of Treasury Bills; and between 1921 and 1928 we have to meet 72 crores of short term securities. Meanwhile, our railways will not cease to demand fresh provision of capital money and we have heavy irrigation projects in view. The solution of the problems of the future depends therefore on the growing accumulation of capital wealth in India, and the interest which the Indian money market evinces in our loan issues. We had evidence during the war of what India could invest under the inspiration of patriotic motives; the response to our last year's issue afforded a proof that business India accepted our loan as a sound and profitable security. With such proofs before us, and in the belief that the social and material development of the country will carry with it an increased sense of responsibility for the economic use of its expanding resources, we need not hesitate to look on the future with a full measure of confidence and trust."

Narrative of the Finance Member

INTRODUCING THE

FINANCIAL STATEMENT FOR 1920-21.

Introductory.

"The procedure for dealing in Council with the Financial Statement will be the same as in the past two years. A general debate upon it will take place on the 8th instant; the detailed discussion will follow, ending on the 13th and I hope that the Budget will be presented in its final form on the 22nd. In this narrative describing the financial events of the current year, and our proposals for the next year, I cannot do better than follow the general sequence and arrangement adopted by my distinguished predecessor. A full explanation of the details of revenue and expenditure under the various heads will be found in the Secretary's Memorandum which will as usual be laid before Hon'ble Members.

SECTION I.—THE YEAR 1919-20.

A.—General characteristics.

"2. In dealing with the financial year 1918-19 Lord Meston pointed out that the year fell into two sharply divided periods, and described the change which came over business and financial conditions generally on the sudden collapse of the German resistance in November 1918. The financial year with which we have now to deal has witnessed the conclusion of the major peace negotiations, the ratification of the peace treaties with Germany and Austria, and the inauguration of that great conception, the League of Nations, on the success or failure of which so much of the future of civilisation depends. But, while the other partner nations of our Empire have been able to demobilise their armies, and to make some beginning on the uphill task of repairing the industrial and economic havoc caused by four years of war, here in India, though happily spared from many of the consequences which the war has brought to the nations of Europe, we have nevertheless had to face troubles peculiarly our own. The peace, which for a generation has existed on our borders, has been broken; and the armies of India returned home from France, Mesopotamia and Palestine only to find laid upon them the further task of defending the soil of India from a threatened invasion from Afghanistan. That peril averted, they have had to face a prolonged campaign, and in the most arduous conditions, in reducing the Mahsud and Wazir tribes. Nor need I add that the effect of these operations is written large over the financial history of the year, and has roughly disturbed the anticipations which Lord Meston felt justified in making.

"3. But for this, my task to-day would have been limited to recording the history of a year, not indeed uneventful, but of fair harvests, of growing revenues, and, save for the continuance of high prices, of general prosperity. It fell to Lord Meston to record the failure of the 1918 monsoon, with the resulting scarcity which, although happily less intense than had been known on many previous occasions of drought, nevertheless affected an unusually wide area. This year we are fortunately able to look back on a monsoon such as India has not enjoyed for many years past. It was, it is true, late in declaring itself. The Arabian Sea current appeared in the Peninsula at about the normal date, while the Bay current arrived in Northern India about a week before the usual time. But up to the middle of July, both currents were fitful and were deflected to an unusual extent to the Central Provinces and the adjoining districts to the east; north-western India accordingly suffered, and in that part of the country, as those who followed the movements of our troops on the frontier know only too well, intense hot weather conditions prevailed. By the end of the second week in July, however, the monsoon began to penetrate into Northern India and before the end of the month had spread over practically the whole area. Throughout August, it was well above its average strength, and although it weakened considerably in September, it returned at the end of the month with a force which caused great destruction of life and property in Eastern Bengal. It was somewhat fitful in October, but gave good rain in November and December. Altogether the total monsoon rainfall of the year was 9 per cent. in excess of the normal.

"4. The failure of the 1918 monsoon, and the widespread epidemic of the autumn, had their effect on the spring harvest of 1919, and scarcity conditions continued till late in the summer. In 1918 famine had been recognized as prevailing in certain parts of the country; the early months of 1919 saw famine declared in four districts in the Bombay Presidency, three districts in Bihar and Orissa, three districts in the Central Provinces, one district in each of the Bengal and Madras Presidencies, three districts in Hyderabad, and in certain parts of Central India and Rajputana. The number of persons on relief of all kinds rose to a maximum in June of 589,535. This figure is less than one-tenth of the maximum number on relief in 1900, although the failure of the monsoon of 1918 was certainly no less widespread than that of 1899. Scarcity of fodder continued during the greater part of the year in the United Provinces, the Punjab, Bombay, Rajputana and Bengal, and the special concession rates for its carriage by rail remained in force in the affected tracts during this period. Apart from large grants for distribution in affected areas in the shape of agricultural loans and advances, a sum of R1,00,000 was given to the Punjab Branch of the Imperial Indian Relief Fund to assist the opening of cheap grain shops in that Province, and grants in relief of local distress aggregating R7,30,500 were made to various provinces by the Indian People's Famine Trust. As the monsoon declared itself conditions improved rapidly towards the end of the year, and at its conclusion all relief operations had practically ceased. Fortunately, the gradual cessation of famine conditions was not accompanied by any general recrudescence of the epidemic of influenza which ravaged India in the autumn of 1918. In certain cities sporadic outbreaks occurred, but they were confined to specific localities, and the epidemic had none of that devastating effect on the rural economy of the country which marked its course in 1918.

"5. I wish it were possible for me to record that the monsoon of 1919 had resulted in a marked reduction in the high prices which have brought so much distress upon the labouring classes and those with fixed incomes. The autumn harvest was good, yet the price of millets, which form the staple food of the people in many parts of India, remained abnormally high; while in spite of the prospect of a good wheat crop, and of the fact that exports are rigorously restricted, the price of wheat is still in the neighbourhood of 6 seers to the rupee. The Council is already aware of the remedial measures which we have taken in this respect, and which from time to time have been described by my Hon'ble Colleagues in the Revenue and Commerce Departments. I will only offer three brief reflections upon this subject, at once the most difficult and the most anxious of the problems which we have now to face. The first consideration is an obvious one—the effect upon the public expenditure. The burden of high prices has been felt in a special degree by the large number of low-paid Government servants, and both the Central and Provincial Governments, in common with other employers of labour, have been obliged to give large increases of pay, either in the form of allowances or of a general revision of emoluments. The process of revising the pay of our establishments still continues and will be responsible for a heavy increase of expenditure in the coming year. Secondly, it must be remembered, as was pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Mant in the interesting debate on prices which we had at the September session, that after a serious failure of the monsoon it generally takes several years of good harvests before prices approach their former level. Thirdly, and most important of all, there are factors in existence, external to this country, which have operated and are still operating to keep prices high, and it is questionable whether, even if there had been no failure of the monsoon in 1918, the prices of many commodities would not have risen almost to their present height. I refer to the enormous increase in world prices, which is the most striking economic effect of the great war, and has been caused, partly by the inflation of credit and consequent depreciation of money in the belligerent countries, and partly by the decrease in productive output resulting from the war. I need not weary the Council with what, after all, are only economic truisms. It is sufficient to say that, unless India were shut off from all commercial intercourse with foreign countries, prices here must have been affected by the enormous enhancement experienced in the rest of the world. Sooner or later, it was inevitable that the general decrease in the purchasing power of money elsewhere should react upon the purchasing power of the rupee. I shall return to this subject later when discussing the recently published recommendations of the Indian Exchange and Currency Committee, whose report bears witness to the high importance which they attached to the necessity for mitigating for the people of India the economic evils which have fallen upon most of the nations of Europe.

"6. General trade conditions have been somewhat unsettled. The upward tendency of exchange during the whole of the year induced caution among merchants engaged in foreign trade, while the shortage of tonnage during the first half was, generally speaking, adverse to business. The net result, however, has been a well-marked increase in the value of imports and exports of private merchandise, although it is of course necessary to remember that a steady rise in prices of commodities imported and exported frequently obscures an actual falling off in the volume of trade. The total value of imports during the first nine months of the year showed an increase of over R16 crores, or 13 per cent., as compared with the corresponding period of 1918, and the total exports, including re-exports, increased by R53 crores, or 28 per cent. The balance of trade, so far as is shown by the statistics of merchandise, treasure, Council Bills and similar remittances was R64,20 lakhs in favour of India as against R35,03 lakhs in 1918, while in the same period of 1917, the balance was against India to the extent of R5,00 lakhs. In imports, the principal increases in the first nine months of the financial year were in sugar, iron and steel, mineral oils, machinery and millworks, railway plant and rolling stock, all of which show a rise of over R2 crores in value. A heavy decrease occurred in the import from April to December of cotton manufactures, amounting to nearly R11 crores. This may be partly explained by difficulties in the export of goods from Lancashire and partly by reduction in demand arising from the height of prices. Conditions have however altered in the last few months, which have witnessed a very marked revival. In the export trade, there has been an increase in the shipment of all staple articles, with the exception of rice and wheat which have been rigidly controlled in view of the shortage of foodstuffs in India. The increase of exports has been particularly marked in the case of raw and manufactured cotton, hides and skins, both raw and tanned, raw jute, oilseeds and tea. The tonnage available for India's trade increased gradually throughout the year. The first indication that the available tonnage was sufficient to cope with the cargoes that offered occurred about October last. During the nine months April to December 1919, the net tonnage of vessels entering ports in British India with cargoes from foreign countries and British possessions amounted to 3,632,440 tons, as against 2,730,937 tons during the corresponding period in 1918, and the tonnage cleared during the same period amounted to 4,373,975 tons, as against 3,734,651. Freight rates, which had dropped as a result of the Armistice, steadied at the opening of the year and rose gradually until December, since when they have been somewhat easier. Trade and Commerce.

"7. During the year it has been found possible to free trade of a number of the restrictions imposed during the war; and in July and August last all special restrictions on trade with ex-enemy countries were removed. All restrictions on the export of hides and skins, raw jute, oils and oilseeds and a number of other articles have also been removed. On the other hand, it has been found necessary, owing to the general shortage of foodstuffs, to prohibit the export of a number of food-grains from India. Restrictions on trade.

Company promotion.

"8. An outstanding feature of the year has been the continuance and expansion of company-promotions. During the eight months April to November 1919, 535 new companies, with an aggregate authorised capital of nearly R166½ crores, were registered in British India and Mysore. The number of companies floated during the corresponding period of the previous year amounted only to 158, with an authorised capital of about R6¾ crores. Widely different views have been expressed regarding this remarkable increase in company flotations. Many people regard it as evidence of our financial strength and of hopeful augury for a great industrial expansion. Others of more cautious temperament are inclined to shake their heads at what they would describe as the prevalent investment mania and predict a severe reaction, accompanied by financial crises, crashes in the share markets and widespread loss. There is, I think, room for both optimism and caution. The war has indicated numerous directions in which India can profitably extend her industrial activity. Our industries generally have made large profits during the last four years and so long as war conditions continued, there was little outlet for their investment; while the difficulty of obtaining new machinery or expert labour made it practically impossible either to start new or to extend enterprises. It is only natural therefore that the conclusion of the war should have been followed by an extension of capital issues, and most people will agree that the readiness with which these have been subscribed affords encouraging evidence of India's ability to finance an era of industrial expansion. There is of course another side to the picture, although I would deprecate this side being given undue prominence. As in the case of all such booms, there is always the danger that, along with a large number of thoroughly sound and well managed concerns, others are brought into existence which are of doubtful soundness. That is inevitable; and sooner or later there will no doubt be what Americans call a "shake-out"; it would require a greater power of prophecy than I can pretend to command to estimate its direction or extent; but there is at present no evidence to show that it is likely to be such as to embarrass the banks or to shake credit generally. Another disturbing sign is the tendency to inflate the shares of perfectly sound and well managed companies to an extent which is not justified by their dividend-earning capacity. In part of course, this is justifiable by the increase in the actual capital value of the plant, which could not now be replaced at pre-war prices; for the rest, it is a speculative movement the adjustment of which need not necessarily involve any widespread crisis. It is not a sound or productive process; but its net result is a transfer of money rather than a destruction of capital.

B.—Currency and Exchange.

Absorption of rupees.

"9. I now turn to those particular problems with which it is my special function to deal. We fortunately have not to record a currency crisis such as that graphically described by Lord Meston last year. In 1918-19 the total absorption of silver coin by the public amounted to no less than R45 crores; in the current year the absorption up to the middle of February has been about R22 crores. September last was the first month for two years during which, taking the whole of India together, there was not an actual outgoing of rupees. The Madras and Rangoon currency circles alone have shown an aggregate net return up to date, but there has been a marked curtailment in the absorption in the Lahore and Bombay circles. I hesitate to draw the conclusion that this result indicates an approach to saturation, though we may regard with satisfaction this substantial slackening in India's demand for silver, coupled as it has been with a very decided diminution in the discount at which currency notes have circulated in the districts. As a result of the lower absorption, our stocks of rupees steadily increased, until at the end of October they reached their maximum of R35½ crores, the highest since 1915. Here, again, it would be premature to argue that this decreased absorption indicates that we have turned the corner and that our currency troubles are over. The increase in our stocks of rupees has been due to the fact that the output of the mints was at last able to overtake the issues. This has been effected, however, at the expense of using up a great deal of our stock of bullion. As the Council knows, in 1918 we were only saved from inconvertibility by the passing of the Pittman Act, which enabled us to procure 200 million ounces of silver from the United States. The last consignment of that silver arrived in India last summer, and until we can see before us the prospect of a regular replenishment of our stocks of silver whenever necessary, the position will not be safe. It is out of the question therefore to contemplate at present any return to the free and unrestricted issue of rupees at district treasuries throughout the country. That is a conclusion which no one will regret more than Government. Sir William Meyer had done much to extend the facilities for the encashment of our notes; the maintenance and increase of those facilities is a cardinal principle of our currency policy: and nothing but the practical impossibility of obtaining ready supplies of silver in the present condition of the world's markets would justify our maintaining the existing restrictions.

"10. While, however, there has been nothing sensational to record regarding the currency events of the year, exchange presents a different story. The history of Indian exchange and the establishment of the gold exchange standard, subsequent to the closing of the mints, has always had a fascination for economic writers and students. It seems likely that, when future text-books are written or present ones are brought up to date, the year 1919 will, like 1893, stand out as marking the close of one well-defined period and the commencement of another. At this time last year the rate for Council drafts stood at 1*s.* 6*d.* per rupee for immediate telegraphic transfers. The era of a stable exchange had, temporarily at least, passed away, but the rise of exchange in its earlier stages gave little indication of the rapidity with which exchange was to soar away from its old standards during the year. Lord Meston explained last year how the rise in exchange followed the breaking away of silver from its pre-war level. That process has continued, and the further changes which have been made in the rates for Council drafts have as before been dictated by the threat of a heavy loss on coinage and the danger to our silver currency caused by the premium on the export of rupees. Rise in exchange during 1919.

"11. The closing fortnight of the last financial year introduced a new factor into the problem, which few people, and certainly not we in India, had had reason to foresee, and which has rapidly grown to dominate every other feature. On March the 21st, 1919, official support of the American exchange with England, originally introduced as a war measure, was withdrawn, and the dollar exchange, weighted down by the indebtedness of Europe and the balance of trade against her, commenced to fall. England had ceased to be a free gold market and the pound sterling no longer fetched in exchange the 4 dollars and 86 cents which represent the equivalent of the gold sovereign. From 486 the dollar sterling exchange dropped to a level of about 450 at the end of June, and then steadily declined in succeeding months until now it stands in the neighbourhood of 340. The American price of silver ceased therefore to be the one dominating factor in determining the rupee sterling exchange. The rate at which India could acquire silver for coinage no longer depended solely on the price of silver in dollars, but was adversely affected by the smaller number of dollars that could be obtained for the pound sterling. Moreover, the rising price of silver itself received a new impetus early in the current year, through the removal in May of control in America. The price of silver, which then stood in the neighbourhood of 101 cents per fine ounce, at once rose by some 10 cents and, stimulated by the firm and long drawn demand of China, continued to rise until it passed the melting point of the dollar and stands now at about 130. The lower exchange value in America of the pound sterling, and the rapid rise in the price of silver in American currency, necessarily entailed the raising of the exchange value of the rupee, if we were not to see our silver coins smuggled out of the country and our currency notes made inconvertible. In May the rate for Council drafts, which had remained stationary at 1*s.* 6*d.* for over a year, advanced to 1*s.* 8*d.* and this was followed by further rises of 2*d.* each in August, September, November and December till the rate stood at 2*s.* 4*d.* Depreciation of sterling. Rise in price of silver.

"12. These briefly are the causes leading to the changes made in the rates for Council drafts up to the time of the issue of the Currency Committee's report. I will turn for a moment to the effects these changes have had upon trade. The rate for Council drafts necessarily has a considerable determining influence on the rates at which export and import transactions are financed. The purchase of Councils enable the Exchange Banks to transfer back to India the funds which otherwise would accumulate in England owing to the heavy excess in normal years of exports over imports. An alternative method of so transferring funds is afforded by the import of gold and silver. During the greater part of the current year the embargo Effect on Exchan markets.

on the import of silver has remained in force. The import of gold has, however, been permitted, subject to acquisition by Government at rates notified from time to time, which were ultimately based on the rates adopted for Council drafts; and since June last, when the embargo on the export of gold from America was removed, the banks have to some extent availed themselves of this method of putting themselves in funds in India. But, whether funds are transferred by the purchase of Council drafts or by the import of gold, the rate at which money can be laid down in India, and consequently the rate at which export bills can be bought and outward remittances sold, has been largely governed by the rate for Council drafts. The variations in these rates, and speculation as to further probable variations, have accordingly introduced an element of instability into exchange which has at times hampered the freedom of business operations. Banks were naturally shy both of remitting to London, by the purchase of export bills in excess of their sales of sterling, funds which they might have to re-transfer to India at a higher rate of exchange, and also, on the other hand, of drawing on their balances in London, by their sales of sterling in excess of their purchases, to an extent which might necessitate their remitting funds home at a loss, should exchange fall. Throughout the year therefore their policy has been largely that of the "even keel"; when indications seemed to point to a rise in the Council rate, they were bad buyers of export bills, and when the opposite condition held, bad sellers of sterling.

"13. To counteract as far as possible inconvenience to trade on this account, Council and sterling drafts have been offered for sale as freely as our resources in India or at home, as the case may be, have permitted. In April last the sale of Council drafts, which had for some months been suspended, was re-introduced to meet the demand arising from the fact that the export bills calling for finance were more than could be covered by the demand for outward remittance. During the first nine months of the year the demand for Councils persisted with varying degrees of urgency. In general, throughout the year a rise in exchange tempted out remittances and checked bills, thus reducing the demand for Councils, until the gradual decline of the dollar sterling exchange and the rise in the price of silver (suggesting that a further raising of the rate for Councils was due) had the reverse effect, and made the demand for Councils more insistent. This see-saw motion continued until January when a complete reversal of the position occurred. The Currency Committee had just completed their sittings and their conclusions were awaited. The export trade at the time was not urgently calling for finance, and the uncertainty as to the future led a number of remitters to take advantage of the 2*s.* 4*d.* rate then prevailing. A demand for sterling drafts arose and during January Reverse Councils to the extent of £5·4 million were sold.

The Currency Committee's Report.

"14. The above recital of the great changes which the year 1919 has witnessed in the exchange value of the rupee brings me to a consideration of the new orientation which has recently been given to our policy, with the acceptance by the Secretary of State of the recommendations of the Indian Currency Committee. The Committee's report, and the announcement of policy made by the Secretary of State thereon, have been in the hands of the public for the past month. I shall not attempt here any repetition or paraphrase of that portion of the Report which describes with admirable lucidity the issues involved in the problem before the Committee or the considerations which led them to formulate their recommendations. The Government of India have accepted without qualification the Committee's conclusions, which are substantially on the lines which we ourselves recommended in October last, after considering the events of the preceding few months. It is possible that the Secretary of State's decisions on certain of the Committee's recommendations may be the subject of discussion or legislation in this Council. For the present, I will merely indicate the two outstanding features of the Committee's recommendations and suggest to the Council a few brief reflections thereon. These are, firstly, the linking of the rupee to gold, and, secondly, the adoption of a ratio therefor equivalent to one-tenth of the gold contents of the sovereign.

Fixation of rupee in relation to gold.

"15. On the first point, I think it may fairly be said that there is a strong body of opinion that the Committee's conclusion was inevitable. The Indian currency system has hitherto been based on the axiom that the unit of British currency, namely, the pound sterling, could at all times purchase the amount of gold contained in the sovereign. But the unfortunate divergence between the pound sterling and the amount of gold contained in the sovereign, which became so marked during last summer and has subsequently still further increased, gave rise to a set of conditions which, in the opinion of most people, has rendered it imperative to give to the rupee some foundation less shifting than the sterling to which it had hitherto been linked. Otherwise, by inexorable natural laws, results of serious consequence to this country might ensue. Linked to sterling, the rupee would share with the latter all its fluctuations of fortune. Every rise of prices in sterling-using countries would inevitably, by the mechanical linking of the rupee to the pound, communicate to this country the same shrinkage in the purchasing power of money, and until sterling regained its parity with gold, India would be saddled with an unstable and fluctuating standard of value. We should continue to share with the United Kingdom all the evils of inflated prices. It would be impossible to give any definite gold value to the rupee, or to say what amount of silver a rupee could purchase in America; while restrictions on the movements of the precious metals would have to be continued indefinitely. There is no policy that is without its disadvantages, and it must of course be admitted that the result of linking the rupee to gold is that the rupee-sterling exchange must fluctuate in the same manner as does the dollar-sterling exchange; it cannot be denied that this introduces an uncertain element into that large portion of the trade of India which is with sterling-using countries. Nevertheless, we have to look to the interests of the country as a whole rather than to those of the smaller, though highly important, section which is engaged in foreign trade; and we think that there can be no doubt that the economic interests of India's huge population will be better served by giving the rupee an absolute stability in gold—the ultimate standard of value—than by assigning to it a stability relative to a standard which is itself markedly unstable.

"16. As regards the actual rate to be adopted for the ratio between the rupee and gold, fears have been expressed in some quarters that the rate of R10 to the gold content of the sovereign is too high, and may inflict injury upon our export trade. I will not repeat here the reasons, given in the Committee's Report, which decided them not to yield to the influence of such fears. I will only emphasise two considerations, bearing on the choice between a high and a low rate, which seem to me to outweigh all others. The first is that, if the high prices now prevailing in most foreign countries are to be brought into relation with Indian prices on an exchange basis for the rupee at anything approaching the old level of 1*s*. 4*d*. then the consequences to the people of this country would be little short of disastrous; the present level of internal prices would be stereotyped, or, as is more probable, would advance to heights even now unthought of. The interests of the many millions of consumers in India, whose margin of subsistence is at the best none too large, must come before those of any other class. Secondly, a return to a low exchange would very seriously imperil all chance of maintaining the convertibility of the note issue. If the rupee were linked on to gold at a rate of 15 rupees to the gold content of a sovereign, it would be impossible to maintain our silver currency unless the price of silver in America remained below 92 cents; if the rate were 12 rupees to the sovereign, the corresponding silver parity would be 115 cents. At 10 rupees to the sovereign we can purchase silver and coin rupees therefrom up to an American price of 138 cents, which is well above the melting point of the currency of almost every other country. I need not point the obvious moral of this important fact. Only one alternative has been suggested for staving off inconvertibility—the debasement of the rupee or the issue of a debased two rupee piece. In all the press comments on the Committee's report I have seen nowhere any support of a proposition fraught with such obvious political and economic dangers. Rate adopted.

"17. Unfortunately, at about the time that the Currency Committee's Report was published and the announcement made of the Secretary of State's acceptance of the main principles underlying the Committee's recommendations, the dollar-sterling exchange, which had already fallen heavily, took a further downward plunge. In these circumstances, the linking of the rupee to gold necessarily caused its exchange value as expressed in sterling to rise by several pence. The much greater amount of sterling that could be purchased by a given number of rupees naturally provided a great incentive to people, with accumulated funds in India, to remit these to England. The demand for reverse Councils became unprecedentedly great and the exchange markets could have absorbed considerably more than the £11 million of reverse Further depreciation of sterling and rush for remittance to London.

[Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

Councils which we sold during February. This fact resulted in a considerable divergence between the gold rate at which, following the Currency Committee's policy, we have been selling reverse Councils and the actual market rate. Speculators and profiteers have not been slow to take advantage of the situation. The effect of the heavy remittances made, accompanied by a sudden attempt to realise assets, was sensibly to tighten money. I ought to point out to the Council that such monetary stringency as has existed has not been due to any withdrawal by Government of funds from the market, since the proceeds of our sales of reverse Councils have up to date remained in the balances of the Presidency Banks. At the same time a word of caution is called for. The extent to which the Secretary of State's ordinary cash balances can be drawn on to meet reverse Council payments necessarily has a limit, and for the time being that limit has been reached. Further sales will be effected through the medium of the Paper Currency Reserve, but this process would, in the absence of special measures, ordinarily involve some locking up of funds withdrawn from the market. Inflation of currency and credit, as most belligerent countries are now finding to their cost, brings serious consequences in its train, but the evils of an unduly rapid deflation may quite easily be no less serious. The present situation is one that requires caution in handling, and we have been in continuous communication with the Secretary of State in the matter. The general lines of the legislative measures which with the sanction of this Council we propose to take, have been explained in a public announcement made on February the 23rd. The object of these measures is to provide for the continued sale of reverse Councils with the mininum embarrassment to the market through the withdrawal of funds, and I do not think I need say any more on the subject on the present occasion, except to give a warning that a prolonged continuance of the present conditions would inevitably react upon our whole ways and means programme for next year, which, as the Council will gather when I come to speak of our financial operations in the current year, is now, by reason of its very magnitude, far more dependent than formerly upon Indian money conditions.

C.—Gain by Exchange.

Retention of accounts on 1*s*. 4*d*. basis.

"18. The foregoing account of the course of exchange, and of the measures which have now been taken to adjust our policy to the changed conditions of the time, brings me to a matter which is of considerable importance in dealing with our revised estimates and our budget anticipations, and to which I must devote some explanation, if my subsequent remarks regarding the estimates are to be intelligible. Lord Meston mentioned last year the large credit from gain by exchange which arose from the fact that our accounts were still prepared on the basis of 1*s*. 4*d*. to the rupee. That was at a time when the actual exchange rate was no more than 1*s*. 6*d*. Our accounts have throughout the year continued to be kept on a 1*s*. 4*d*. basis and the Secretary of State has decided that, for the purpose of this Financial Statement, the conversion of rupees into sterling and vice versâ should be effected at the old level. This results in a number of complications, particularly as regards our capital and remittance transactions, to which I shall refer in due course. There is, however, this advantage in still retaining the 1*s*. 4*d*. basis for the purpose of our revised estimates, namely, that it is possible to compare the actual results with the anticipations made last year. In order that the Council may judge of the aspect of our budget on the 2*s*. basis, which the Secretary of State has decided to adopt for all our accounts and statistics with effect from the 1st April next, I have had a separate statement prepared (Appendix I) showing the budget estimates of revenue and expenditure for the next year as recast on the new basis.

Treatment of gains exchange.

"19. The matter with which I am more immediately concerned is the method by which we propose in the revised and budget estimates to treat our gain by exchange. We estimate that during the current year the gross gain, without taking account of certain deductions which I will explain presently, will amount to no less than R22½ crores, as compared with R13½ crores realised in 1918-19. Two months ago indeed it looked as if the figure would be very much higher, but the large sales of reverse Councils which have been and are being made have considerably reduced the total anticipated for the year.

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [Mr. W. M. Hailey.]

"From the gross gain of R22½ crores have to be deducted certain losses which arise from the same causes that have contributed to the higher exchange value of the rupee, viz., a loss of 4¼ crores on rupee coinage and another of 6½ crores on gold purchases, acquisition and sales, the latter arising from the premium over sterling parity at which the Secretary of State's purchases of gold have been made. After making these deductions, the exchange gain in the current year will stand at 11¾ crores.

"20. The first question that arises about these gains is how they actually accrue, what they actually consist of, and how far they represent a real windfall which we can devote to such objects as we think desirable. Putting the matter very broadly, the gain arises over our remittance transactions, and its unprecedented amount at the present time is due to the fact that we are still keeping our accounts on a basis which is now out of accordance with actual facts. This will be clear from a simple example. Every time that the Secretary of State draws on us, through his sales of Council Bills, to the extent of a million pounds, our accounts shew that we have paid out in India R150 lakhs, although, in point of fact, with the rupee-sterling exchange at, say, 2*s.* 8*d.*, we have actually paid out only R75 lakhs; the remaining R75 lakhs accordingly appears in our accounts as gain by exchange. Per contra, when we are selling reverse Councils, our accounts will show a credit of R150 lakhs for every million sterling we have sold, whereas the actual payments made to us by the purchasers of the reverse drafts only amount to R75 lakhs, the difference being debited as loss on exchange. In a similar way a gain or loss, as the case may be, accrues on every other transaction which effects a transfer of funds from or to India, such as the expenditure which we incur in India on behalf of His Majesty's Government and is repaid to us in London, on which there is a gain, or the issue of sterling money orders on London, on which our accounts will show a loss.

"21. It will be obvious therefore to Hon'ble Members that in these "gains" there is a great element of artificiality, and that it would not be correct to assume that whenever our accounts show a gain on exchange, this represents a real accretion to our resources, for the so-called gain we obtain every time we transfer a million pounds to the Home Treasury is liable to be turned into a loss if the amount has to be retransferred to India. In illustration of this statement, I need only point to our experience in the last two months. Up to the end of December, the Secretary of State sold £29 million of Council Bills on India, on which we realised a gain of 11¼ crores; during January and February, we expect to have sold £16½ million of reverse Councils on which we will incur a loss of 12 crores. There are, however, certain of our operations, the exchange gain in respect of which we are entitled to regard as real and permanent. Most of our capital outlay on railways consists of the purchase of machinery and stores in Europe or America. For every million pounds expended on such purchases the actual cost to the Indian taxpayer is now very considerably less than previously, and it would clearly not be right to charge the capital accounts of our railways with amounts which are fictitiously inflated, and have not actually been spent thereon. We have decided therefore, in view of the large sums involved, that our capital accounts should properly get the benefit of the higher rate of exchange prevailing. Accordingly, out of our total gains by exchange of R11¾ crores, in the current year R7¼ crores will be credited to the railway, irrigation and Delhi capital accounts. Gains from exchange on capital outlay.

"22. There remains, then, R4½ crores to be dealt with, and when considering how this should be treated we are met by another fact of capital importance. The definite abandonment for accounts purposes of the 1*s.* 4*d.* rate, and the adoption therefor of a rate of 2*s.* to the rupee, will result in our accounts showing, what after all is merely an accomplished fact, a serious capital loss on our sterling holdings, more particularly on those which form the sterling portion of the Paper Currency Reserve. We hold in our Paper Currency Reserve British securities, mostly consisting of British Treasury Bills, to the value of about £55 million. Up to the present, in the shifting exchange conditions and general uncertainty of the past year, and pending the completion of the Currency Committee's enquiry, our paper currency accounts have remained on a 1*s.* 4*d.* basis and have continued to show these sterling securities as representing 82½ crores of rupees, whereas, when valued on a 2*s.* basis, they are Deficiency in Paper Currency Reserve.

only worth R55 crores and the loss thereon will therefore be 27½ crores. We expect however that if the demand for reverse Councils continues, £13 million of securities will have been withdrawn by the Secretary of State before the close of this year for meeting reverse drafts, leaving still a holding of £42 million of sterling securities in the Reserve, the loss on revaluation of which will amount to 21 crores. There will also be in due course a substantial loss in respect of the gold held in the Reserve, seeing that this is at present held at the rate of R15 to the sovereign and will in future be held at the rate of R10. Altogether, the deficiency in our Paper Currency Reserve, assuming a revaluation on a 2*s.* basis, may ultimately amount to nearly R40 crores.

Importance of making up this deficiency.

"23. I wish to emphasize very strongly that the making up of this deficiency is not a matter which can be postponed indefinitely, or can be regarded as of theoretical rather than of practical importance. Quite apart from any question as to our legal responsibilities under the Paper Currency Act, the circulation of our currency notes rests ultimately upon public confidence, and we cannot contemplate with equanimity a position in which the amount of the securities held in the Reserve is patently insufficient to cover the circulation. Nor is this by any means entirely a matter of sentiment. These sterling securities consist, as I have said, mainly of British Treasury Bills, which are continually maturing and being renewed. It is on these that the Secretary of State, when he is once more able to resume purchases of silver, or has to meet from the Currency Reserve his purchases of gold or his payments of reverse Councils, will have to depend, and it is clear therefore that any serious deficiency in the amount of securities forming part of the Currency Reserve must be a matter of great concern when looked at from the point of view of the available backing to our currency notes. Ultimately the home portion of our Paper Currency Reserve must be brought back to India in the form of gold or silver, or utilised, through the medium of reverse Councils, to retire notes in India. Whenever that is done, the capital loss at once becomes apparent, since the sterling part of the Reserve turns into fewer rupees than the amount at which it is held in the accounts.

"24. The importance of adopting speedy measures to supply this deficiency is obvious; it is equally obvious that this object should have the first call upon the gain by exchange, seeing that they are both due to one and the same cause. After consultation with the Secretary of State, we have decided to appropriate the residue of the current year's exchange gain, amounting to R4½ crores, for meeting this deficiency, and we are accordingly opening a suspense head in our accounts to which this amount will be credited. For next year, as I shall mention later, we may reasonably expect a higher exchange gain seeing that the rupee sterling exchange will probably stand at a much higher average than in the current year; we estimate the residue of the gain, after credit to the capital account, at 18 crores, of which we allocate 6 crores to revenue and 12 crores to suspense for application in due course to meeting the deficiency referred to above. I need not remind the Council that as soon as this deficiency in our Currency Reserve has been made up, our revenues will obtain the full benefit of the very substantial savings in our annual home charges resulting from the higher level of exchange. Such savings may not improbably amount to R11 or 12 crores a year, and it is solely because of this prospective accrual to our revenues that, as I shall mention later, we have felt justified, not only in making a very large reduction in the amount of the contribution to be taken from the provinces under the Reforms Scheme, but in contemplating its entire extinction within a measurable time.

D.—Revised Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure, 1919-20.

"25. I have now cleared the way for the consideration of our actual incomings and outgoings. The Council will realise of course, from what I have said, that when I speak of a revenue or expenditure of so many millions, rupees have been converted into sterling at the old ratio of R15=£1, though whenever I can do so without inaccuracy, that is, whenever the figures relate to revenue or expenditure raised or incurred wholly in India, I shall speak only of rupees. I might further explain that I do not propose to discuss the details of the revenue and expenditure of the provinces which, as Lord Meston pointed out, are now-a-days more properly the subject of discussion and criticism in the provincial

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [Mr. W. M. Hailey.]

Councils, and I shall accordingly confine my remarks to the revenue and expenditure of the Central Government.

"26. I will first deal with the ordinary heads of revenue and expenditure. In framing his estimate of revenue for the current year Lord Meston was faced with a very obscure situation, since it was impossible to forecast the rate at which our main heads of revenue would recover from the traffic and other restrictions consequent on the war. He took, however, an optimistic view. Many must have felt that he had been somewhat sanguine in anticipating a Customs revenue of R20 crores in 1919-20 against a revised estimate of R18½ crores in 1918-19, and a gross traffic receipt from Railways of R80 crores, which was no less than R3½ crores in excess of that anticipated in the revised estimates for the previous year. But events have justified his optimism. At one time it looked as though the revenue from both Customs and Railways would fall materially short of anticipations; railway receipts in particular showed a distinct set-back, mainly on the North-Western Railway as a result of the Punjab disturbances. During the last few months, however, there has been a remarkable recovery, so much so that we now expect that the gross traffic receipts will fall short of the estimate of R80 crores by only R75 lakhs; and this small decrease in estimated receipts is more than counterbalanced by a reduction in working expenses, due to the fact that the home stores issued for expenditure on revenue account have been less than anticipated owing to slow arrivals and have also cost less in consequence of the rise in exchange. The result on the balance is that the net railway receipts will be about R45 lakhs over the estimate. We expect a much larger increase under Customs; the estimate of R20 crores will be actually exceeded by R2¼ crores. There is likely to be an increase in respect of all the more important tariff heads, particularly the import duties on piece-goods and petroleum, and the export duty on jute, the only head which shows any material falling off from the figure taken in the Budget being sugar. The new export duty on hides is anticipated to bring in just under R1 crore.

Railways.

Customs.

"In regard to direct taxation, we now expect that the ordinary income-tax will bring us in R1,59 lakhs more than the budget figure, and the Excess Profits Duty just over the budget estimate of R9 crores, of which however R62 lakhs will actually be collected in 1920-21.

Income Tax.

"The heads which at present we share with the provinces show smaller variation; we estimate that Stamps will bring Imperial revenues R85 lakhs and Excise about R42 lakhs more than we expected.

Stamps and Excise

"The budget estimate anticipated a receipt of R1½ crores under exchange, but as I have already stated, it is now proposed to credit under a suspense head the net gain in the current year estimated at R4½ crores.

Exchange.

"27. The net result will be that our Imperial revenue will be R1,35½ crores against an estimated total of R1,29¼ crores. Our ordinary heads of expenditure (excluding for the moment the Military Services) will show a nearly corresponding excess, the largest increases occurring under interest charges on debt and refunds and drawbacks. On the other hand, Famine Relief, for which a provision of R1,62 lakhs was made, has fortunately cost us 64 lakhs less. Taking the whole ordinary expenditure (excluding Military) the total will amount to R69 crores against an anticipated total of R64¾ crores: and the position as between revenue and expenditure is a great tribute to the accuracy of the estimates prepared last year by Lord Meston and Mr. Howard. It is when we come to take count of the figures of Military expenditure that the result assumes an aspect entirely contrary to their anticipations. They expected a surplus of about £600,000; I have to announce a deficit of £14⅓ million. I shall subsequently devote a special section of this narrative to the revised and budget estimates for Military expenditure, and I need only mention here the broad results as regards the current year. The budget provided for a total expenditure of £41¼ million, made up of £32½ million for ordinary expenditure and £8¾ million representing the current year's instalment of the additional war contribution. In respect of this last item we will actually pay only £1½ million, so that there is a saving on this account of £7¼ million. On the other hand, the Afghan war and the frontier operations are estimated to have cost us £14¾ million, while the ordinary military expenditure shows an excess of £8¼ million, the net result being an excess of no less than £15·8 million.

Military expenditure.

[Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

Provincial Revenues.

"28. All that I need say as regards the provincial estimates is that the provinces, taking them all together, had budgeted for a deficit of nearly R3 crores. In the result, the total provincial revenues are likely to coincide almost exactly with the provincial expenditure. The provinces have had to incur very large additional charges in the shape of allowances or increases of pay to their establishments to meet the present high scale of prices, but this has been more than counterbalanced by the continued growth in their revenues.

E.—Ways and Means, 1919-20.

Removal of previous difficulty due to locale of resources.

"29. The Financial Statements of the last few years brought out clearly the problems which we had then to face in order to find money for our disbursements in India, and both Sir William Meyer and Lord Meston explained the great difficulties caused, not so much by the shortness of our total cash resources, as by the fact that much of these were locked up in London. We had accordingly the result that, although at certain times the Secretary of State held very high resources at home, we in India were hard put to it to find the funds necessary to meet not only our own outgoings and the Secretary of State's Council drawings, but also the very heavy disbursements which we had to make during the war on behalf of His Majesty's Government, and for which we received payment in London. As Hon'ble Members know, we were forced, in order to keep our Indian treasuries in funds, to make successive increases in the fiduciary portion of the Currency Reserve and from time to time to finance ourselves by taking large advances from the Presidency Banks and by raising large sums by the issue of Indian treasury bills. With the cessation of military operations in Europe and the gradual removal of war restrictions, it has now become possible for the Secretary of State to re-transfer his surplus balances to us by means of remittances of gold, and that particular aspect of our difficulties which arose from the lock up of our resources in England is I think now at an end. The difficulties of the future are likely to arise, as I shall show when dealing with our ways and means outlook for next year, not from the locale of our balances, but from their total amount.

Liabilities and assets in England and India combined

"30. I will first explain briefly the liabilities we have had to meet and the resources from which we have met them, taking our sterling and rupee resources combined; and for this purpose of course our various remittance transactions, which represent a transference of our cash balances from India to England or from England to India (such as Councils and reverse Councils) will cancel each other. The following statement shows our liabilities and assets in a condensed form :—

Liabilities.		(£ million.)	Assets.	(£ million.
Capital outlay—			Reduction of cash balances	4·8
Railways	10·2		Rupee loan	14·2
Irrigation	·3		Net receipts from Treasury Bills	·2
Delhi	·3		Withdrawal from Special Reserve	6·9
	—	10·8	Silver paid for in last year brought to account in current year	11·2
Discharge of debt (including Railway debentures)		2·0	Net gain on exchange and gold operations held in suspense for meeting deficiency in Paper Currency Reserve	3·0
Imperial and Provincial loans		·9	Miscellaneous items	—·2
Payment of balance of war loan proceeds to Home Government in reduction of £100 million contribution		8·8
Imperial deficit		14·4
Refund to War Office of amount recovered in excess in previous year		3·0
		39·9		39·9

I will discuss the more important of the above items very shortly when I come to speak of our financial operations in India; I need here, in connection with our combined position, only point out that our total cash balances, in India and

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [Mr. W. M. Hailey.]

England together, were £26 million at the beginning of the year, and we expect to close the year with balances of £21½ million. The Council will observe that the special reserve of £20 million, which we had built up during the war when our balances were locked up in London, is expected by the end of this year to have been completely used up, £7 million having been used in the current year and £13 million in 1918-19.

"31. As regards the operations at the home treasury in London, it is sufficient for me to say that, excluding the Gold Standard Reserve, the Secretary of State started the year with an ordinary cash balance of £8·7 million, together with £6·9 million in the special reserve. We expect that at the end of the year his ordinary balance will have been reduced to £7½ million and that the special reserve will, as I have said, have been entirely used up. The outgoings which he has had to meet have amounted to about £113½ million, inclusive of £32 million paid for gold purchased for shipment to India and £24¾ million for payment of reverse Councils sold in India. These he has met by drawing Councils to the extent of £31¼ million, by his large recoveries from the War Office of £61 million in respect of payments made by us in rupees on their behalf, by using £8 million from his cash balances and the special reserve, and by disposing of investments in British Treasury Bills made on behalf of the Paper Currency Reserve during the war period to the extent of £13 million. His operations are shown very briefly as follows :—

Liabilities.		Assets.
Net expenditure chargeable to revenue	23·3	Reduction of cash balances	1·2
Capital outlay	12·9	Withdrawal from special reserve	6·9
Payments for silver	6·9	Transfer to Home treasury from investments on behalf of Paper Currency Reserve	13·1
" gold	32·1	Recoveries from War Office	61·0
Payment of war loan proceeds to Home Government	8·8	Council Bills	31·2
Sterling transfers on London	24·7
Miscellaneous items	4·7
	113·4		113·4

"32. For ourselves the main interest naturally lies in the position in India, i.e. the various calls on our rupee resources and the various financial operations in which we have been engaged in order to keep ourselves in funds. The nature of these transactions will be apparent from the following summary which shows the actual rupee transactions in India after eliminating adjustments for exchange as far as possible :—

(In crores of rupees.)

Liabilities.		Assets.
Recoverable war expenditure	67·3	Reduction of cash balances	5·0
Council Bills	34·5	Credits from silver purchased by the Secretary of State	22·7
Transfers to Currency against withdrawals by the Secretary of State of British Treasury bills held in Reserve	19·7	Credits from gold purchased by the Secretary of State	38·8
Net discharge of Cash Certificates	2·3	Sterling drafts on London	18·4
Capital outlay	3·1	Excess of revenue over expenditure	13·6
Discharge of debt	2·2	Proceeds of rupee loan	21·3
Imperial and Provincial loans	1·3	Net receipts from treasury bills	·3
		Savings Bank, etc., deposits	3·6
		Miscellaneous deposit and remittance transactions	6·7
	130·4		130·4

It will be seen that the amount of funds which we have had to find during the year has been R130 crores, of which 67 crores represent expenditure on behalf of the Home Government incurred in India and repaid at home, 34½ crores were for payment of the Secretary of State's Council drawings and 19¾ crores for transfers to the Currency Reserve in India against withdrawals of British treasury bills from the Reserve by the Secretary of State in order to enable him to meet our sales of reverse Councils. One way in which these liabilities have been financed has been by remittances of gold and silver, amounting to 61½ crores, which the Secretary of State has sent to India, while R18½ crores will have been received by us in payment for reverse Councils. To the extent of 80 crores, therefore, our needs in India have been met by drawings against our home balances. I now turn to the means adopted to provide the further 50 crores required.

F.—Government's Financial Operations.

"33. The financial operations undertaken by us in India illustrate at once the strength which the Indian money markets have attained, and the difficulty of the problems which we have had, and shall have, to face. Foremost among these operations was the rupee loan. In our estimates framed last year, we provided for the raising of a loan in India of R15 crores. During July and August we opened for subscription a 5 per cent. income-tax free loan, without limit of amount and repayable in 1945-55. The receipts amounted to R21½ crores, of which R61½ lakhs were received through the Post Office, while over R2 crores of the total amount was tendered in the form of War Bonds which we had agreed to accept in payment for the loan. We made no attempt on this occasion to repeat the special propaganda associated with the two war loans; we had in 1917 and 1918 dipped heavily into the pockets of the investing public; and in the present year we had, competing with us, a very large number of new Company issues. The result of our loan therefore, exceeding as it did the forecast which Lord Meston felt justified in framing this time last year, is of hopeful augury for the future.

Rupee loan.

"34. These figures do not include Cash Certificates. In the absence of any special loan propaganda this form of investment has not received a stimulus similar to that administered in 1918-19 by the Second Indian War Loan. Against the net payment of R69 lakhs last year, we estimate a net payment of about R225 lakhs in the current year. The monthly figure for new investments, which during the earlier months of the year stood at from 8 to 9 lakhs, may now be taken at about 6 lakhs, but that for withdrawals has shown a progressive fall during the year and we may now hope to count on these being on a smaller scale. The number of weak holders has been reduced, and investors have a greater inducement to hold their certificates, in order to reap the benefit of the gradually improving interest earned as a certificate approaches maturity.

Cash Certificates.

"In the last three months of the previous financial year there had been a very marked increase in the net deposits in the Post Office savings banks. This improvement continued until the end of November last, since when there has been some excess of withdrawals over deposits, possibly due to European depositors taking advantage of the high rate of exchange to remit their deposits home. We anticipate that on the balance the net deposits during the year will amount to R1,70 lakhs, the same as last year, against the R2½ crore budget estimate for this year.

Savings Banks deposits.

"35. Lord Meston entertained the hope of being able, during the course of 1919-20, to reduce our treasury bill outstandings by about R22 crores. These hopes were defeated by the large outgoings due to the Afghan war and the frontier operations, which had to be financed mainly by fresh sales of bills; the extent to which this was necessary will be gathered from the fact that at one period in October our outstandings had grown from 49½ crores on April 1st to no less than 68 crores. During April, May and June our sales had been slightly in excess of the discharges, and during July and August, while the 5 per cent. loan was open to subscription, they were of course discontinued, so that by the end of August our outstandings had been reduced to about 44 crores. In September, however, our treasury position was one of very considerable difficulty. There were heavy maturities of bills to meet, and very high military issues, while the Secretary of State was drawing on us for Councils at the rate of about a crore a week. In consequence, the receipts from the loan were used up soon after it had closed, and at the beginning of September we were obliged to re-introduce the sale of treasury bills and to give what, considering the time of the year, were very tempting rates. Even so, our balances remained so low that all possible sources of assistance had to be exploited. In the first place, as in the preceding year, the Presidency Banks were able to come to our help, and, all told, their advances amounted to 18½ crores. Secondly, we were obliged to obtain from the Council legal authority to increase our fiduciary issue of notes by 20 crores. This method of keeping ourselves in funds was admittedly undesirable, but there seemed every likelihood that we should have to resort to it.

Treasury Bills.

"36. Altogether, throughout the first nine months of the year, the treasury position was a difficult one, and from August onwards of continual anxiety. Our payments of Council Bills during those nine months amounted to 30 crores, and the net military expenditure to over 96 crores. The treasury bills sold in excess of those discharged came to about 5 crores only, and the result of our being forced to issue 3 months' Bills in September at favourable rates was that in December (a month in which little revenue is collected and when our treasury balances are at the best of times always low) we had no less than 26½ crores of treasury bill maturities to meet. During December it seemed from day to day that we should have to fall back on our increased powers of note issue, but events happily took a more favourable turn, and with the help of large shipments of gold made to us by the Secretary of State, we managed to turn the corner till, at the beginning of January, our revenue began to come in. Since then our position has been one of comparative ease, and we anticipate that we shall be able to reduce our treasury bill outstandings by the end of the year to the figure at which they stood at the beginning of April last, while the whole of the ways and means advances will have been repaid to the Presidency Banks.

Difficulty of keeping Treasuries in funds.

"37. But we have been sailing very near the wind, and the moral is obvious. Anything approaching 50 crores of treasury bill outstandings, to say nothing of the 68 crores reached in October last, is a dangerous amount of floating debt for India to carry. We have learnt much during the war; in particular we have learnt to finance ourselves in ways that previously would have been thought impossible. But the experience of the last two years has taught us that we must not count on being able throughout the year to keep "floating" an amount of treasury bills so large as has been outstanding during the current year. The slightest tightness in the money markets results in our maturities running off without being replaced by fresh sales, and we have lived continually under the apprehension that we may at any time have to inflate the currency by increasing the fiduciary issue of notes in order to repay our treasury bill maturities. It is imperative, therefore, that we should now do all in our power to reduce our floating debt to more manageable proportions. In so far as this is not effected by funding in our long term loans, we must aim at utilising any surplus, arising from our ordinary revenues, to strengthen our ways and means position and to make us less dependent on the particular form of finance with which I have been dealing. I desire to apply the same remarks to the large ways and means advances which we have from time to time been obliged to take from the Presidency Banks. The financing of public expenditure by means of bank advances is, when made use of to any large extent, no less to be deprecated than a large amount of floating debt, seeing that it is represented merely by an entry in the Banks' books and is therefore in effect a direct inflation of credit. And we have a particular responsibility as regards these ways and means advances, since, unless promptly repaid, they handicap the Presidency Banks' ability to meet demands for money from the business public at a time of busy trade; we have in consequence to be prepared to repay these rapidly whenever a strong demand for money arises, as has been the case during the last few weeks. Lord Meston on March 1st last warned Council of the necessity for regularising our position in respect of our floating debt and temporary advances; the events of the year have justified that warning; and if we are to be in a position to finance the more rapid development of the country, both moral and material, and to meet the many calls on our resources to which the quickening pulse of the nation will give rise, we must endeavour to safeguard ourselves against a recurrence of the embarrassments which I have described.

Necessity for reducing floating debt.

[Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

SECTION II.—THE YEAR 1920-21.

A.—Budget Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure.

"38. This is the last occasion on which the budget will be framed on the existing division of revenue and expenditure between the Central and the Provincial Governments. The inauguration of the Reforms Scheme involves the abolition of the present divided heads of revenue and expenditure; and under the new financial arrangements the revenue and expenditure pertaining to each particular subject of administration will follow the administrative division. I shall deal subsequently with the broad effect which the new arrangements will have on the respective resources of the Government of India and the provinces. Meanwhile, our budget anticipations are of some importance as affording the latest available information on the manner in which the new arrrangements will affect the finances of the Central and Provincial Governments. I do not propose to trouble the Council with many details of our anticipations under the various heads of revenue and expenditure. Broadly speaking, these are based upon the belief that there will be no set back in general prosperity and that our revenues will continue to show that same expansion which has been exhibited in the current year.

"39. Customs.—I have already mentioned that during the current year we expect to realise a total Customs revenue of about R22½ crores. We may reasonably expect that next year freight difficulties will have largely disappeared; on the other hand, we cannot expect that the producing power of European countries will reach anything like the pre-war level, and we can hardly count on that heavy inrush of commodities which might otherwise be expected with the full return of peace conditions. Nevertheless, there seems no reason to anticipate that the steady growth shown in our Customs returns of the current year will not continue, and we are consequently budgeting for R25½ crores, representing an increase of over R3 crores on the expected revenue of the current year. This figure assumes no change in our Customs tariff other than the recently announced abolition of the import duty on silver.

"Railways.—Under Railways we are budgeting for a continuance of that steady growth in traffic receipts which has been so marked for some years, and we have taken an increase of R4 crores over the R80 crores budgeted for the current year. On the other hand, we anticipate a considerable rise in working expenses in order to continue the renewals and replacements necessitated by the forced neglect during the war, and altogether we expect that the net receipts will be R31 crores or the same as in the current year.

"Exchange.—I have already explained the complications arising from the large credit which we get in our accounts from gains by exchange. I will confess at once that it is difficult to frame a reliable estimate of what this figure is likely to be next year. No one can predict the extent to which the pound sterling may depreciate or appreciate during the next twelve months, and it is impossible to say what variations may take place in the rupee sterling exchange which, under the policy recently inaugurated, must rise or fall according as the pound sterling falls or recovers in terms of gold. And apart from the question of the actual rate, it is equally impossible to forecast the actual volume of our remittance transactions in either direction. From the remarks I have already made on this matter earlier in this narrative, it will be clear that a few millions more or less of Councils or reverse Councils will make a very large difference in the total of the so-called gain. We have assumed that the average rate for the rupee sterling exchange will not be below 2s. 6d.; on the best estimate we are able to frame, our total gain during the year will amount to about R30¾ crores. Of this amount R12¾ crores will, for the reason which I have already given, be credited to our Railway, Irrigation and Delhi capital accounts. We propose to earmark R12 crores (as against R4½ crores in the current year) towards meeting the deficiency in the Paper Currency Reserve, leaving R6 crores to be credited to our revenue account.

"If these anticipations be realised, our total Imperial revenue will be £92¼ million (R1,38⅜ crores). The estimate assumes the discontinuance of the Excess Profits Duty which was imposed as a temporary measure in March last.

"40. On the expenditure side, the only marked variations which we anticipate under the ordinary heads are—(1) An increase of over £1½ million over the current year's expenditure on Posts and Telegraphs, due to the inclusion of large provisions for increases of pay to subordinates and for outlay on stores. (2) Payments of civil furlough and superannuation allowances are expected to rise by £¾ million. (3) Under the 'Miscellaneous' head there is an increase of about £¼ million representing the provision which we have entered for expenditure in connection with the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales; and (4) Under Public Works there is an increase of £318,000 due to the necessity for a somewhat heavier programme of works as the result of enforced economy during the war period. Set off against these are savings of—(1) £263,000 which we anticipate under Interest due to a reduction in our liability to the Home Government in respect of the £100 million contribution, and (2) of £275,000 under Political mainly in respect of special political expenditure incurred in Persia. Altogether, our expenditure under the ordinary heads is expected in the aggregate to exceed that of the current year by £3 million. The most important item, however, is of course our military expenditure. This I am dealing with separately, and merely mention here that we are entering a total figure of £40 million, as against £41¼ million in the current year's budget and the £57 million which we are expecting will actually be incurred. The net result is that we anticipate a total expenditure of £90⅛ million (R1,35¾ crores), resulting in a surplus of £2 million. This is somewhat higher than that for which we usually budget, but if I have carried the Council with me in the remarks I made just now regarding the grave necessity for keeping down our floating debt, it will appreciate our reason for going somewhat beyond the usual figure. And I hope that I shall make this still further apparent when I come to deal with the heavy ways and means liabilities which lie before us. Expenditure.

"41. During the war we were obliged to ask the provinces not to draw on their balances and to keep their expenditure strictly within the income of the year. This restriction was relaxed for the current year, and the provinces were allowed to budget for deficits aggregating nearly R3 crores, although as I have already mentioned, their revenues have on the whole actually been equal to their expenditure. For next year, although budgeting for revenues materially larger than those of the present year, they anticipate drawing on their balances to the extent of no less than R5¾ crores. A great part of these deficits is accounted for by large schemes of non-recurring expenditure which were necessarily held up during the war, but there is also a striking increase in the budgeted recurring expenditure, due to the very large revisions of the pay of subordinate establishments necessitated by the present scale of prices. Provincial Budgets.

"42. We hope to attain the results outlined in the preceding forecast without any substantial addition to our Imperial taxation. In only one direction do we propose to modify our present scale of taxes. The present super-tax on the undivided profits of companies and firms has been the subject of considerable criticism on grounds of principle. It is urged that the tax is an incentive to companies to distribute more in dividends than is justified by their real financial position, and penalises those concerns which desire to strengthen their reserves. We have been told that Government would have done better to have levied a tax at a moderate rate on the whole income of companies, instead of applying the ordinary super-tax to companies' undivided profits. In the speech which he made last year on the Excess Profits Duty Bill Lord Meston gave on behalf of Government an undertaking that the question of so readjusting our taxation on incomes as to meet these objections would be considered as soon as the excess profits duty ceased to be levied. That time has now arrived. On the best estimate we have been able to frame we conclude that, if we relieve the undivided profits of companies and firms of the super-tax at present imposed, which runs up to 3 annas in the rupee, we shall lose about R1,76 lakhs. We propose to replace this by a new form of super-tax, similar to the "corporation" or "companies" tax levied in certain other countries, which will be assessed at the flat rate of 1 anna in the rupee upon the total income of each company in excess of R50,000. This will, of course, like the present super-tax, be in addition to the ordinary income-tax, and there will be no refunds. The present super-tax on individuals will remain as at present. The new super-tax on companies is estimated to bring us in about R2,20 lakhs a year, i.e., R44 lakhs more than we lose. We should have been glad to have utilised this surplus in regrading the lower Alterations in super-tax.

stages of the ordinary income-tax in order to relieve the poorer taxpayer and to make the stages more symmetrical. But we have felt it unsafe to do so at present in view of the necessity, to which I have referred, of making provision for meeting our temporary debt and short term liabilities. We shall in any case have relieved industry of the present burden of the Excess Profits duty, and this is as far as we are justified in going at present.

India's further contribution to the war.

"43. I have one more explanation to give in connection with the estimates of revenue and expenditure, and it is an important one. The Council will notice, from the detailed information given in a later section that, in both our revised and budget estimates of military expenditure, provision has been made for the payment of certain portions of India's further contribution towards the cost of the war offered to His Majesty's Government in pursuance of the Resolution passed in this Council in September 1918. I would explain that these entries have been made provisionally; their retention will depend on the view which the Council takes as to India's liability in this matter. The Resolution contained a reservation that the offer of this further contribution should be subject to the conditions and safeguards indicated in Sir William Meyer's speech. Those conditions were that the payment would be reconsidered in the event of two contingencies occurring,—firstly, our having to fight on our own frontiers and to incur large expenditure in that connection, and secondly, our being faced with serious financial burdens in other respects, such as a famine or a great currency crisis. The Council will probably agree with me that the second contingency has not arisen. It cannot be said that there has been a grave currency crisis since the Resolution was passed. It is true that there was a serious failure of the monsoon in 1918, but the account which I have given of our revenue and expenditure during the current year will have shown that any loss which we have sustained on this account has been counterbalanced by our prosperity in other directions. But the expenditure of about £15 million involved by the Afghan war and frontier operations of 1919 clearly makes the first condition operative. Whether we should stand on that condition, or should agree to waive it, wholly or in part, is a matter which must be left to the verdict of the non-official Members of the Council. There are considerations of weight on both sides. I will not attempt to balance these here, but in order to provide Hon'ble Members with the facts regarding the amount of the additional contribution and with other material necessary for forming an opinion on the merits of the case, I have appended to this Financial Statement a note on the subject (Appendix II); in that note I have not attempted to draw any conclusions, but have merely endeavoured to set forth what appear to me to be the financial issues involved. Should the Council decide to withdraw, either wholly or partially, from the offer made to His Majesty's Government in September 1918, the necessary corrections will be made in the estimates before the Budget is finally presented.

B.—Ways and Means, 1920-21.

Capital outlay.

"44. I will now deal with the demands which we anticipate will fall on our cash resources during the coming year. The most important item is our capital outlay on railways, irrigation and Delhi. We hope to continue the progressive policy initiated last year in the matter of developing our great and profitable railway estate, and are budgeting for a railway capital expenditure of £18 million in England and 4½ crores in India as compared with the £18 million in England and nil in India budgeted for the current year. For irrigation we are budgeting for £580,000, which is all that the Public Works Department can spend until some of the large new projects now begun or under contemplation reach a more developed stage. For Delhi we are entering £800,000, which is however reduced to £736,000 by a credit for gain by exchange. I shall give a further explanation shortly of our capital programme under these three heads. Meanwhile, I must draw attention to the fact that we have here one of those awkward complications which arise from the conversion of rupees into sterling at 1*s.* 4*d.* In the statutory statements appended hereto the figure for railways totals £14·6 million only, in spite of the fact that we anticipate an outlay in England alone of nearly £18 million. This is one of those anomalies which are inevitable with the figures prepared on a basis which is now obsolete, the reason being, as I have already explained when dealing with the treatment of the gain by exchange, that the capital account has to receive a credit which in the case of Railways amounts to nearly 10 crores. When the rupee and sterling figures are then combined upon a 1*s.* 4*d.* basis, the result is £14·6 million. The best way of comparing the railway capital budgets for the current and next years is to say that, while the former was calculated to cost the Indian tax payer 24 crores, the latter will cost him about 19 crores at the rate of exchange of 2*s.* 6*d.* the rupee.

"45. Another very important item is the entry of £12·9 million for discharge of debt. From 1920 onwards our various series of War Bonds, issued in 1917 and 1918, will mature, and for some years their repayment will make a severe call on our resources; on August 15th next we have to find over 19 crores for this purpose. I may mention that we are doing what we can to work out such administrative measures as will enable the holders of these War Bonds, many of whom are quite small people living in remote towns and villages, to get repayment with the minimum of formality and inconvenience to themselves, and for this purpose the Securities Bill now before the Council will, when passed into law, be of great assistance in enabling us to waive many of the formalities necessitated under the existing law. Repayment of War Bonds.

"46. I have already mentioned that in the current and next year we are placing in suspense 4½ and 12 crores, respectively, towards meeting the deficiency in the Paper Currency Reserve. These amounts are, of course, for the time being held in our general balances, but we hope during the course of next year actually to apply 9 crores or £6 million in making up that deficiency. Making up of deficiency in Paper Currency Reserve.

"Finally, we have to meet heavy drawings by the provinces on their balances amounting to over 5½ crores. Altogether, then, we have to meet liabilities amounting to £38·6 million.

"47. These are heavy liabilities, and our ability to incur the capital outlay proposed will depend to a large extent on the measure to which we can count on obtaining money through our rupee loan. We assume, however, that the Indian money market and the investing public generally will be prepared to take up our loan with something of the freedom shown in the current year. Should this not prove to be the case, we shall be obliged, however reluctantly, to curtail our capital programme. I now turn to the steps by which we propose to meet the liability of £38·6 million. We have, to start with, an anticipated Imperial surplus of £2 million, while we propose to reduce our cash balances during the course of the year by £3·2 million. Next, we assume a loan of 15 crores or £10 million. We hope to receive credits, in respect of stores charged to the War Stores Suspense account, to the extent of £7 million, and to recover £2·7 million from the War Office in respect of cash balances in Mesopotamia which will be transferred to the new administration of that country. As already stated, we hope to obtain a credit of £8 million from exchange gain, and the balance of our requirements will be found from Savings Bank deposits and other miscellaneous transactions. These transactions are summarised in the statement below:— Assets.

"48. I have already tried to explain the difficulty of making a reliable estimate of our probable remittance transactions between England and India during the coming year, and I do not think, therefore, that it will serve any useful purpose for me to go into any details here as to the probable ways and means positions in England and India separately. All I will mention is that we expect that the Secretary of State's disbursements will amount to about £46 million, and that he will be able to meet these from the recoveries which he will make from the War Office in respect of payments made by us in India on their behalf and by selling Council Bills for £8½ million.

SECTION III.—NOTES ON CERTAIN SPECIAL HEADS.

A.—Military Services.

Financial results of the year.

"49. The net military expenditure (i.e., deducting receipts) was £44½ million in 1918-19. The budget estimate for 1919-20 was £41,195,000. This figure included a provision for the payment to His Majesty's Government of an additional war contribution of £8,695,000. In the Revised estimate a sum of £1,541,700 has been included provisionally on account of this additional war contribution, the amount being made up as follows :—£246,700 for the effective charges of the additional body of Indian troops, being the equivalent at £1=R15 of an instalment of £500,000 of the special contribution ; £995,000 for war pensionary charges of Indian troops and their British officers; £300,000 for war pensionary charges of British troops. The grounds for the reduction of the contribution for effective charges to a payment on account of £500,000 are explained in paragraph 6 of the Appendix dealing with this special contribution. Omitting these special payments, the net expenditure in 1919-20 is now expected to amount to £55,475,000 against a Budget estimate of £32,500,000. The increase over the Budget estimate thus amounts to £22,975,000. The Budget, however, also included a reserve of £871,000 under the Army head to meet unforeseen expenditure. The excess over the specific provision is therefore £23,846,000. Of this, £14,736,000 represents the cost of the operations against Afghanistan and the tribes on the North-West Frontier.

Nature of the war expenditure in the current year.

"50. In presenting the military estimates for the current year, it was assumed that the year 1919-20 would be one of demobilisation. Unfortunately, as the Council are well aware, this anticipation has not been realised. The details of the campaigns on our frontier are known to the Council and I need not dilate on them, other than to emphasise the fact that the crisis arose at a time when the resources of India, both in men and material, had been sorely taxed by the Great War. Owing partly to deficiencies due to this cause and partly to the insistence, by present day public opinion, on a higher standard of efficiency in the military organisation, and of comfort for the fighting personnel, expenditure on a scale hitherto unprecedented in India had to be undertaken immediately. We were compelled not only to postpone the disbandment of considerable bodies of additional troops which were raised in India in 1918, but also to adopt every expedient which economises human life at the expense of mechanical contrivances and which makes life more comfortable on field service. Our total bill of £14¾ million includes special rations and special clothing for the effective personnel of the army; special hospital equipment and diet; the provision of ice plants, electric fans and lights, mobile water filtration plants, and pure water-supply; the provision of huts for troops where in previous campaigns tents sufficed; the provision of mechanical transport and their workshops, motor ambulance convoys, additional animal transport required to carry the special war material entailed by modern requirements; the construction of roads, in localities where construction is specially expensive; the provision of ambulance trains and special rolling stock for troop movements; the survey and construction of special railways; the installation of ropeways; the provision of lethal munitions of modern character, heavy guns, machine guns approximating to the scale adopted in the Western theatres of war, armoured motor batteries, aeroplanes and their fighting equipment; improved equipment for defences involving heavy expenditure on barbed wire and defensive posts. The cost of all this has been higher than it might otherwise have been. We were at the end of 5 years of war; high prices ruled everywhere, and these affected not only the cost of material but the cost of our Indian recruits, including followers. But the expenditure was unavoidable; when it is a question of war, purely financial considerations must necessarily give way.

"51. Apart from special war contributions and the cost of the operations on the Frontier, the expenditure in the current year is estimated to exceed the specific provision in the budget by £9,110,000. The occurrence of this excess expenditure, in addition to the direct liabilities of the Frontier operations, has engaged our anxious attention for some time past, and in November last a Sub-Committee of the Executive Council was appointed to investigate the causes contributing to the excess demand. In the result, while steps were taken to enforce every practicable economy, extra expenditure to the amount now stated has been found to be inevitable. It is due in the main to two well-defined causes. Firstly, a very large proportion, amounting to over 7 crores of rupees, consists of items which can best be described as residuary obligations arising out of the great war. Secondly, the operations on the North-West Frontier reacted directly or indirectly on the ordinary heads of expenditure. The clearest example of the former category is an item of £2,800,000, which is required to pay the war gratuity admissible under the Royal Warrant to our permanent complement of regular British officers and soldiers for service in India during the period of the war. This represents an element in the contribution which we make to His Majesty's Government under the arrangement whereby we undertook to bear the cost of the normal garrison in India. It is a non-recurring charge, the liability for which was not known at the time of the preparation of the budget for 1919-20. The gratuity payable to our Indian soldiers for their service overseas in the great war has been provided for, but it does not appear in the present account, since the cost is chargeable to His Majesty's Government. Then, again, we had to face an all round increase in the pay of the personnel of the army. The process was initiated by His Majesty's Government at home with effect from 1st July 1919, and we, as a necessary consequence, have conceded a similar increase in the pay and furlough pay of British officers and soldiers serving in India. The cost of this will amount to about £2 million inclusive of medical services and miscellaneous British personnel. As a corollary to this, we have found it necessary to continue the grant to Indian troops of the increase of pay represented by the six-monthly bonus sanctioned in 1918. For the present, the increase is a temporary measure, which will require to be reconsidered in the light of the proposals which may be put forward by the Army in India Committee for the future organisation of our Indian Army. So long as the six-monthly bonus was paid for the specific purpose for which it was first granted, namely, the stimulation of recruitment for overseas forces, its cost was chargeable to His Majesty's Government, but its continuance in the circumstances which I have stated will now involve an expenditure of £270,000 from Indian revenues. We have also granted rewards consisting of cash grants and grants of land to Indian officers and men who have rendered distinguished service during the war, and have sanctioned increases of pay to various Indian establishments including followers. The cost of these measures will amount to £130,000. We have also had to meet obligations entailed by the higher standard of military equipment necessitated by the experience gained during the great war. We have added permanently to our establishment 6 Ford Van companies, together with workshops for repairing motor vehicles. It has been necessary to provide more animal transport units, and to make certain additions to the cadre of the Supply and Transport Corps, consequential on the grant of free rations to Indian troops and the development of transport services, and in the Army Veterinary Services and other administrative establishments. These various undertakings are estimated to cost about £460,000. Food charges account for an increase of £550,000 owing to continued high prices; the cost of the Aden Operations will exceed the budget estimates by £110,000; the expenditure on certain services, e.g., Port defences, Coastal patrol service, etc, by £150,000; the railway charges for military traffic and the hire of bullock transport by £280,000; and the expenditure on the purchase of stores in India for the Royal Air Force and for mechanical transport by £70,000. An additional sum of £600,000 will also have to be paid to the War Office in respect of the non-effective charges of British troops serving in India, partly owing to a rise in the rates of pensions and partly in connection with the settlement of certain claims which the War Office has against us on account of the ordinary charges of British troops with previous Indian service whose ordinary pensions did not mature owing to death or disability in the Great War.

"52. The expenditure on Military Works will exceed the budget estimates by £1,315,300. The excess consists very largely of items which, though adjustable for accounting reasons against the ordinary estimates, are more or less directly attributable to the Afghan war. Thus, the increase of Air Force establishment involved the provision of buildings for the accommodation of the extra personnel and for housing the valuable equipment which an Air Force requires. The works will, however, be of permanent utility and accordingly it would not be correct to charge their cost to the operations. The same is the case with the expenditure on Frontier roads (£180,000) and mechanical transport workshops (£133,000). Apart from this quasi-war expenditure, we have been compelled to provide accommodation on an enhanced scale for families of British units arriving from England at a cost of £140,000. This measure has been taken under the direct advice of His Majesty's Government. At the same time considerable expenditure has been incurred on reconstructing and improving the lines of Indian troops and on providing the buildings necessitated by the provision by Government of free rations for Indian troops.

Budget, 1920-21. "53. The budget provision for next year has been taken at £40 million. Out of this sum £1·45 million has been provisionally earmarked for payment of instalments of the additional contribution to His Majesty's Government, namely, £·25 million being the equivalent at R15=£1 of a second instalment of £·5 million for effective charges and £1·2 million for non-effective charges and the balance of £38·55 million will be available for the services of the army. The detailed grants working up to this figure have not yet been definitely settled, the reason for this being that the disturbed conditions which still prevail in India and the Middle East have rendered it equally impossible to obtain any clear assessment of our normal military liabilities in the future or to guarantee immediate reduction to any peace standard it may be decided to adopt. This matter also is being specially examined by the Sub-Committee of His Excellency the Viceroy's Council, to which reference has previously been made, and the problem with which they have to deal is one of unusual difficulty. But I may say at once that, if India is to maintain in an efficient state an army of the strength required for the adequate defence of her frontiers, the cost of the military services will in future be much in excess of the sum which we have been accustomed to allot in our budget for this purpose. In dealing with the revised estimates I have mentioned a number of the new permanent liabilities which have been brought upon us by the European war and the only point which I desire once more to emphasise is that we obviously cannot revert to the pre-war standard of equipment, since it would be neither right nor humane to deny to our soldiers the advantage which an improved equipment ensures: and the new equipment of which aeroplanes, improved artillery and mechanical transport may be taken as the most conspicuous examples, is extremely expensive both in initial cost and cost of maintenance. It is recognised, on the other hand, that the extended employment of up-to-date weapons and war material generally should render feasible certain reductions of personnel and every possible economy of this kind is being carefully studied. The object in view will be the possession of an army of the minimum strength compatible with safety, but fully mobile and equipped with all the requisites of war, well paid, well housed, and well clothed. But much still remains to be done to establish our army on this basis and in the ensuing year our expenditure will be specially high owing to the fact that we must incur a certain amount of initial outlay on the purchase of new equipment of various kinds, on the construction of hospitals and barracks and other important military requirements. Initial outlay of this character will so far as possible be spread over more than one year, but the extent of this process is limited by certain vital considerations, and it will be clear that until we can feel greater confidence in regard to possible dangers threatening us from the Middle East, our military expenditure will necessarily represent more than the cost of the army we hope to maintain in settled peace conditions. The very full data collected by the Army authorities have been exhaustively scrutinised; every feasible economy has been effected, and the provision of £40 million is the least which can safely be inserted in the budget. And I must warn the Council that if the operations on the frontier should continue into the ensuing year, even the provision now proposed will not suffice.

B.—Railways (Capital Outlay).

"54. The Railway Capital expenditure on State-owned lines included within the Railway Programme, including both open lines and lines under construction, amounted to £1,978,700 in 1916-17, £2,529,300 in 1917-18 and £4,154,500 in 1918-19. In the Budget for the current year provision was made for £17·7 millions which, owing to failure of English supplies, it has not been possible to utilise fully. The latest estimate of expenditure is placed at £14·5 millions, which will be reduced to £10,211,000 by gains on exchange.

"55. I have already mentioned that next year it is proposed to raise the provision to £18 millions for home and 4½ crores for Indian expenditure. The major portion of this sum will be devoted to works of improvement on existing lines and especially to provision of traffic facilities to enable railways to meet the increased demand on their resources which has followed the revival of trade. It is also hoped to make a beginning in replacement of the lines which it was necessary to dismantle during the war, and a sum of £212,000 has been allotted for this purpose. Progress in this respect is, however, directly dependent on the supply of materials, unfortunately still limited. In view of the pressing necessities of open lines it is not possible to provide at present for any considerable amount of new construction, but a sum of £630,000 has been allotted to enable a start to be made on some of the more urgent projects held in abeyance during the war

"56. Detailed figures showing the Capital outlay on all State lines up to the end of each year from 1916-17, and the net return obtained after deducting working expenses and interest charges will be found in the Secretary's memorandum. The return on railway capital (excluding interest charges) was estimated in the current year's Budget at 5·51 per cent. We now estimate it at 5·68 per cent. in consequence of the small increase in net railway earnings resulting from the gain by exchange creditable to the railway revenue account. For next year we put it at 5·51 per cent. The charges for interest in the current and ensuing years work out to 3·82 and 3·85 per cent. respectively on the capital outlay, so that the final net profit on railways is 1·86 and 1·66 per cent. respectively. These interest charges include certain annuity and sinking fund payments which really go towards the discharge of debt.

C.—Irrigation (Capital Outlay).

"57. Details regarding the financial position of our great irrigation undertakings will be given in the Secretary's memorandum, which will bring up to date the information given in connection with previous Financial Statements. The percentage of net profit on productive works was 6·08 in 1918-19, and is calculated at 7 in 1919-20. In the coming year we calculate it as 7·17.

"58. The total length of main and branch canals and distributaries of State irrigation works of all classes in operation during the year 1918-19 was 66,120 miles which was 644 miles greater than the mileage in operation in 1917-18. It is expected that an additional length of 425 miles will have come into operation before the close of the year 1919-20. The total culturable area commanded by these canals amounted to nearly 52 million acres of which nearly 25 million acres were irrigated in 1918-19, and it is anticipated that during the current year the canal irrigated area will aggregate 26¾ million acres. During 1918-19 no new works of any importance were opened for irrigation. Irrigation on the Punjab triple canal system, i.e., the Upper Jhelum, Upper Chenab and Lower Bari Doab canals has developed satisfactorily. The area irrigated during the current year is estimated at 1·7 million acres which is 363,000 acres in excess of that irrigated in 1918-19. The total irrigable area contemplated in the project estimate is 1¾ million acres, and it will thus be seen that this acreage has practically been attained. Besides the canals actually in operation, there are 35 schemes which are either under construction, awaiting sanction or being examined by the technical experts. It is estimated that if all schemes under consideration or projected are eventually carried out, they will extend the benefits of canal irrigation to an additional area of about 10 million acres; their estimated cost amounts approximately to £40 millions sterling, from which a return of about 7 per cent. is anticipated.

[Mr. W. M. Hailey.] [1ST MARCH, 1920.]

"59. Progress of work on canals under construction has been maintained satisfactorily, though it has been limited by shortage of officers, large numbers of whom were absent on military duty and have only recently returned. It is anticipated that the new permanent headworks of the Ganges Canal will be completed during the ensuing year. Of the more important schemes, that for the Sarda Kichha Feeder has received the sanction of the Secretary of State, and the local Government is now making arrangements for the execution of the work. A modified project for the Sarda canal for Oudh, of which the Sarda Kichha Feeder forms a part, is under preparation by the local Government. The Grand Trunk canal project in Bengal which is designed to connect Calcutta with Eastern Bengal and Assam has recently been submitted to the Secretary of State for sanction. It is proposed to finance this work, which is estimated to cost R3,09 lakhs, from capital funds. A detailed project for the irrigation of the Sind Sagar Doab is now under consideration; as now designed, the scheme will provide for an annual irrigation of about 2 million acres; the total cost of the project is estimated at 9,28 lakhs and the net revenue, after deducting working expenses, is estimated at R91½ lakhs a year. This scheme, if carried out, will bring prosperity to a desert tract with a very low rainfall, and it is believed that it will at the same time bring in a return of nearly 10 per cent. to the State. Of the other large schemes described last year as under investigation, those for the Sukkur barrage and the Bhakra dam are still under investigation and projects are being framed by the Governments of Bombay and the Punjab. The Sutlej Valley project referred to last year has moved a stage forward; the scheme was discussed by representatives of all parties concerned in December last, and a detailed project is now being prepared.

D.—New Delhi.

"60. The outlay for the year 1919-20 under this head, after allowing for a credit of R1 lakh for gain by exchange, is expected to amount to R50 lakhs as compared with a budget grant of R45 lakhs, an additional sum of 6 lakhs having been allotted in order to push on with the preparation for next year's work. It was pointed out last year that the recurring expenses of the present make-shifts were adding appreciably to the cost of the New Capital of India. Fortunately it is now possible to contemplate a programme which will enable the main buildings in the New City to be completed by the end of 1924, and in pursuance of this programme the grant for 1920-21 has been fixed at R1,10 lakhs, after allowing for a credit of R10 lakhs for gain by exchange. Sir E. Lutyens and Mr. H. Baker came out from England towards the end of 1919 and have been busy in connection with the scheme. Among the more prominent projects on which they have been employed are the chambers for the new Legislative Councils, the Medical Research Institute, the War Museum and the proposed memorial arch to the soldiers of the Indian Army who fell in the Great War.

Conclusion.

Reform finance; the Imperial deficit.

"61. As I have said before, this is the last occasion on which we shall present a budget based on the combined accounts of the Provincial and Central Governments; and next year will see the introduction to the new Legislative Assembly of a purely Imperial budget. We are now engaged in working out the many changes in rule which will be required in order to give the provinces the financial independence which the new order of things demands. If the supervision of finance and the control of expenditure by the Central Government have seemed at times to have been unduly rigid, too careful of the established rule and canon, I would ask our critics to cast their memory back to the days, not so long past, when our resources were inelastic, when a single season's scarcity could produce a financial crisis, when Indian capital came forth with reluctance to support our loans. We have succeeded to days of gradually swelling revenues, of somewhat easier ways and means; but I think that the Standing Committees of the new Councils and their new Finance Members will do well if they exercise their powers with something of the caution which has marked our expenditure control of the past. There is no truer canon of finance than the old axiom, sanctified by the experience of ages, magnum vectigal est parsimonia. The extent of the finances which will be at the disposal of the reformed governments is, I know, a subject of live interest to this Council. The Joint Report of 1918 anticipated an Imperial deficit of 13½ crores, that deficit being made up by contributions from the provinces. This would have left the provinces in the aggregate with a net surplus of about 2 crores. We have reconsidered the position in the light of the probable gains from exchange, and have done so in only one spirit, the genuine desire to reduce the contributions to the lowest possible figure consistent with safeguarding the requirements of the country as a whole. There is no question of Government of India finance against provincial finance; the provinces are no less interested than is the Central Government in the maintenance of our great Imperial services; the Central Government is equally concerned that provincial reform and provincial development should not be strangled by inadequate finance. After considering the effect of the present budget as arranged on a 2 shilling basis, we think that we are justified in assuming for the present a reduction of the Imperial deficit to 6 crores, and we have provisionally indicated this figure to Lord Meston's Committee on Financial Relations as the basis of their inquiry into the apportionment of contributions. We have further indicated that we propose to assume the liability for extinguishing these contributions within a measurable time. The result will be that, adopting the figures of the provincial budgets for next year, as at present known to us, the Local Governments will be 11 crores a year better off than under the present division of revenues between the Government of India and themselves.

Summary; The current year.

"62. It would indeed have been a grateful task had I been able, in presenting to the Council the revised estimates of the present year, to exhibit a result more in keeping with the anticipations expressed by Lord Meston on the 1st March last year. He looked forward to a moderate surplus, and to the extinction of some 22 crores of temporary debt. The Afghan war has involved us in a heavy deficit, and our Treasury Bill liability shows no reduction on the figure outstanding at the beginning of the year. But the picture is not entirely devoid of brighter features. Our revenue has more than fulfilled the expectations formed last March; our silver reserves stand reasonably high; and we have managed to finance ourselves up to the present without utilising the power taken last September to increase the fiduciary note issue. For the coming year we take, and experience shows that we are justified in taking, an optimistic view of the growth of our major revenue heads. Our expenditure will be swollen by the provision which we have had to make for the revision of establishments due to the continued prevalence of high prices; but the dominant feature on the expenditure side of our budget is the high figure which we have been obliged to insert on the Military account. I have already explained at length the circumstances under which we have made this provision. I do not desire to base it on any defined threat or menace from the Middle East; but no one cognisant of the facts can be free from apprehension of the consequences which may ensue to the peace of India from the sinister movements now on foot in that quarter; and it would be little short of criminal if, in the circumstances, we failed to provide during the coming year the finance essential to keep our Army up to the necessary standard of efficiency. The sum we have provided is, I am persuaded, the bare minimum required. But apart from the special requirements of the coming year, I would again remind the Council that modern armies, with their demands for latter day equipment, for mechanical contrivances and technical establishments, are bound to be more expensive than the armies of the pre-war era. It is unnecessary to quote European analogies; but the Council will be interested to know that Japan has made a provision for its military expenditure in 1920 which is more than three times that of 1918. We hope, however, to finance these increased demands on our resources, both civil and military, without any additional burden to the country other than that involved in the rearrangement of the super-tax to which I have already alluded. On the capital side we contemplate a railway programme which will, we hope, satisfy those who are interested in the development of this great asset that we are not failing in our duty to repair the deficiencies of the years of war; and we look forward to meeting the first of the heavy liabilities involved by our short-term loans, namely, the repayment of the 19 crores of War Bonds which fall due in August next. As I have already reminded the Council this programme can only be realised if India gives a liberal response to our rupee loan in the coming year.

The year 1920-21.

[1ST MARCH, 1920.] [Mr. W. M. Hailey.]

Future liabilities. "63. As for the future, the revenues of India are steadily and surely expanding; and their expansion affords a guarantee of their adequacy to meet such problems of development as immediately confront the administration of the country. Our pre-occupations lie rather in the provision of ways and means to meet our capital liabilities. The provinces will be drawing on their accumulated balances; and they will before long be asking for a share in the Imperial loans, or raising loans themselves Our outstanding liabilities are not light. We have to meet twenty-five crores of war bonds in 1921, eleven crores in 1922, over two in 1923, and our terminable loan of five crores also falls due in that year. We have a breathing space in 1924; but in 1925 we have further payments to make of four crores and in 1928 we have to face a heavy maturity of twenty-five crores. Meanwhile, our railways will not cease to demand fresh provision of capital money, and we have heavy irrigation projects in view. The solution of the problems of the future depends therefore on the growing accumulation of capital wealth in India, and the interest which the Indian money market evinces in our loan issues. We had evidence during the war of what India could invest under the inspiration of patriotic motives; the response to our last year's issue afforded a proof that business India accepted our loan as a sound and profitable security. With such proofs before us, and in the belief that the social and material development of the country will carry with it an increased sense of responsibility for the economic use of its expanding resources, we need not hesitate to look on the future with a full measure of confidence and trust."

INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL.

11-50 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—" I beg, my Lord, for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918.

" It is a matter, I think, on which I need detain the Council for a short time only. The Statement of Objects and Reasons very clearly explains the nature of the Bill; its nature really is that of amending the Act only. Two of the sections refer purely to matters of definition; and one section is a remedying section. It is designed to remedy the anomaly which occurs under the existing Act, when an assessee with an income just in excess of one of the stages in Schedule I and, therefore, liable to pay income-tax at a higher rate than if his income were just below that stage, finds himself, after the payment of the tax, worse off than he would have been had his total income been below that stage. The provision included in this clause is adapted from the English Law.

" We also propose to repeal certain sections; the most important of these is the existing provision to the effect that any salary not exceeding five hundred rupees per mensem received by any member of His Majesty's Forces or of His Majesty's Indian Forces, as the pay of an appointment which is ordinarily reserved exclusively for members of those Forces, should be relieved from taxation. The concession has always appeared anomalous, and now that the rates of pay have been generally enhanced, its retention seems undesirable.

" That, my Lord, is the purport of the Bill, and I seek only at this stage for leave to introduce it. I shall subsequently ask that it may be published and this will give Members of Council a full opportunity for studying it before I bring in a motion that it should be referred to a Select Committee."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—" My Lord, I introduce the Bill, and beg for leave to move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

SUPER-TAX BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"My Lord, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law relating to the Super-Tax Act, 1917. I have already in the course of my Financial Statement explained the reasons for the introduction of this Bill. The taxation it seeks to introduce is in the nature of a companies or corporation tax such as is in force in other parts of the world, and its object is to secure the imposition of a flat rate of one anna in the rupee on the income of companies over Rs. 50,000, in place of the existing super-tax on undivided profits. Here again, my Lord, I merely seek for leave to introduce the Bill, and subsequently I shall ask that it shall be published in the Gazette of India. 11-54 A.M.

"I shall not seek at this stage for any further action on the part of the Council, since it is right that it should have full opportunity to study the Bill before I move that it should be brought before a Select Committee."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"My Lord, I now beg to introduce the Bill, and to move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

PRESIDENCY-TOWNS INSOLVENCY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"My Lord, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909. This Bill is supplementary to the Provincial Insolvency Act, which was passed by the Council the other day. It merely seeks to add to the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act the disqualifying provision which we inserted in the Provincial Insolvency Act by one of the last sections." 11-58 A.M.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir George Lowndes :—"My Lord, I beg to introduce the Bill, and to move that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"My Lord, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to constitute an Imperial Bank of India and for other purposes. 12 P.M.

"This Bill provides for the amalgamation of the three Presidency Banks of Bengal, Madras and Bombay under the name of the Imperial Bank of India. On this motion, I do not propose to detain the Council at any length. There will be an opportunity for fuller discussion on the second reading next week, when I shall move that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee, and when I shall explain the details rather more fully. I do not ask that we should to-day proceed to the next stage of the Bill, since Hon'ble Members have so far had no opportunity of studying its provisions. The Council will not, however, I hope, think that this has been due to any wish to push this Bill through with insufficient consideration. The scheme for the amalgamation of the Presidency Banks was mentioned to the Council by Mr. Howard in the interesting debate which we had last September on the question of a State Bank. Subsequently, the actual scheme was embodied in circular letters from the Directors of the three Banks to their shareholders, and was published in all the newspapers. Finally, a lengthy despatch from the Government of India to the Secretary of State, setting forth very fully the main lines of the scheme, and the reasons which led Government to welcome it as promising to be of great importance to the interests of the country, was published in February, and copies were sent to each Hon'ble Member.

"The Bill itself merely gives effect to the scheme as so published. Its drafting, however, has been a somewhat difficult matter, in view of the large number of small, though very technical, details which have had to be provided for, and it has unfortunately not been possible to get the Bill ready for circulation earlier.

"I do not, therefore, ask the Council to-day to commit itself to any unqualified acceptance of the terms of the Bill. When the time comes for me to ask the Council to agree to its reference to a Select Committee, Hon'ble Members will have had time to study its provisions, and to form an opinion as to the way in which the Bill seeks to give effect to the main principles of the scheme already published. We have designedly appended a very full Statement of Objects and Reasons, in order to explain clearly to Hon'ble Members exactly what the Bill seeks to effect. All I will do on the present occasion is to emphasise one or two of the most important features of this scheme.

"The scheme does not merely represent an ordinary banking amalgamation. It has an important aspect in that connection ; but if it stopped there, it would be little more than what in England would be called a 'private' Bill. But it seeks to go further. It will increase the resources of the three Banks by handing over the whole of our balances to them ; and seeks in return to make use of the amalgamated institution as a means of furthering the banking development of which this country stands so much in need. The Bank will have a definite obligation to open 100 new branches in five years. It is on this account, and not merely because it is a bank amalgamation, that the Bill has aroused considerable public interest, and in some quarters criticism. I am far from regretting that the public has evinced so much interest in the scheme ; for I feel strongly that the more this matter in our Bill is ventilated, the more likely is it to meet with the acceptance of all those who are anxious to see a real beginning made to remedy what is admittedly one of the great defects from which India is now suffering. We set forth the position clearly in our Despatch of the 25th June, 1919. In that Despatch the Government of India described the urgent necessity for an increase in banking facilities, if the proper development and progress of this country is to be secured. It stated that, in their opinion, an indispensable preliminary to any widespread growth in banking was the establishment of a strong Central Bank, in intimate relation with Government, and with a large number of branches throughout the country. If the Council will allow me, I will read the following extract from the Government of India's Despatch to the Secretary of State dealing with this matter :—

'We doubt if, in the present conditions in which there are three separate Banks working independently, any further substantial increase in the number of branches is to be looked for, owing mainly to considerations of territorial limits and of profit and loss. The Presidency Banks have now undertaken, as part of the present amalgamation scheme, to establish 100 new branches within five years, and we have every reason to hope that the progressive policy thus initiated will be continued, until at least in every district, and eventually at every town of importance, a branch of the Imperial Bank is established. We do not claim that this widespread extension of branches will work a sudden miracle, or will immediately prove itself the long sought talisman to charm the wealth of India from its hoards. We do not look for rapid or dramatic results. But a beginning must be made, and we think that the mere appearance in a district of a bank which conducts Government's Treasury and Public Debt business, as to whose stability there can be no question, and from which local traders and dealers in produce can obtain advances on reasonable terms, must in due course inevitably have an appreciable effect upon the local mental attitude towards banking in general, and in course of time we shall expect to see the new branches of the Imperial Bank attract a large amount of deposits from the general public in such localities.'

"That is one important aspect of the case, to which I wish to invite the attention of Hon'ble Members; the opportunity for the extension of banking facilities which this amalgamation offers. I have now to turn to another one, which will, I think, be equally in the minds of Hon'ble Members. It need hardly be said that if a Bank of this sort is to be a success, if it is to play its full part in the development of the country, it must have its roots in the soil; an exotic will never bear the fruit which we look for. One of the principal reasons why banking on modern lines has not made greater progress in India is because, with a few notable exceptions, the only trained bankers available have been Europeans. I am glad to say that more recently Indians have been taking to banking in greater numbers, more particularly on the Bombay side. I could name more than one striking example of conspicuous success on that side of India; the name of Mr. Pochkhanawala has already been brought before this Council by Mr. Howard. Nevertheless, progress on the whole has so far been slow, and we ourselves look to the Imperial Bank as likely to stimulate very considerably the training and employment of Indians as bankers. Let me again read an extract from what the Government of India said on this matter in their Despatch to the Secretary of State:—

'For such development, moreover, and equal necessity is a sufficient supply of men trained in modern methods of banking. The mere staffing of a large number of new branches of the amalgamated bank will necessarily involve the training and employment of Indian agency to a very much greater extent than at present, and the demand for and training of such men by the Imperial Bank should have a valuable influence in stimulating their supply for other banking institutions, just as the requirements of our Public Works Department have undoubtedly stimulated the growth of the engineering profession in India.'

"Our hope, therefore, is that the new Bank will grow up to be a really national institution. I feel that I must here repudiate, in the strongest possible terms, suggestions that have been made in some quarters that the object of the scheme is to preserve a European monopoly. We look to the new Bank to have a wide and beneficent sphere of influence; and any scheme of constitution which gave it a definite racial colour, whether European or Indian, would inevitably doom it to failure. A purely European concern, however successful its operations might be in the seaports and larger cities, could never be successful in carrying banking facilities over the extended area which we contemplate as the field of operations for the new Bank. On the other hand, an institution under purely Indian management would not, I believe, command for many years to come a sufficient supply of expert banking knowledge to enable it to take that position in the economy of the country which we wish to see the new Bank occupy. This is pre-eminently one of those matters which urgently call for co-operation between Europeans and Indians, and if, as I hope and believe, that co-operation will be forthcoming, the Imperial Bank should prove a most useful factor in promoting the economic interests of the country.

"These remarks bring me to the third point; also a point which has attracted the attention of the public—the question of control. The controlling body of the Bank, that is the Governors, will consist of the presidents, vice-presidents and secretaries of the three Banks, with two managing Governors appointed by the governing body. These are the representatives of the shareholders. In addition, we propose to place on the governing body an official, the Controller of Currency, who will represent primarily Government interests and will have certain well defined powers in this respect. We have been told by certain critics that if the governing body is limited to the constitution I have described, this institution will have what the writers are pleased to call an entirely European character. I must delay the Council while I examine this objection. In one of the constituent Banks—the Bank of Bombay—Indian shareholders are already in a majority, and three out of the six Directors of that Bank are Indians, one of whom, besides being one of the leaders of industry in this country, is a prominent member of this Council. I am again glad to hear that the Bank of Madras has recently invited an Indian gentleman to join its directorate. The Council will, I think, agree that it is not for Government to dictate to the shareholders whom they should or should not elect as directors, and I can see no justification for any attempt to legislate in the direction of compelling the shareholders to exercise their choice in favour of members of one class of the community rather than another. But we desire to see the new Bank start under the most favourable auspices. We desire that there should remain no doubt or suspicion, justifiable or otherwise, that the interests of the general taxpayer, who will contribute a considerable portion of the Bank's resources in the shape of Government balances, are not sufficiently represented. While, therefore, we do not intend any dictation to the shareholders regarding their own representatives on the governing body, we have decided to take power in the Bill for the Governor General in Council to nominate two additional members to the governing body of the Bank. These members will be non-officials; they will be nominated for a year, but can be re-nominated; and the provision will, as I hope the Council will agree, amply meet the desire that the interests of the general taxpayer will be sufficiently represented.

"There remains a final point to bring before the Council. It is again a point in which the proposals have been criticised; and I think it right to bring any point of criticism before Council at the earliest opportunity. It has been urged that we should not seek, as we do seek, to exclude the Imperial Bank from taking part in ordinary exchange operations. It is a point of detail rather than principle; but I can dispose of it without delaying the Council. The Banks themselves, who are mainly concerned, have acquiesced in this proposal; they have done so for the reason that they now hold in many cases the balances of the Exchange Banks, and they could not expect those Banks to leave their balances with them if they were rivals in the matter of exchange operations.

"I have now, my Lord, explained the main lines of the Bill; and have, I hope, met in advance some of the criticisms which have been levied at the proposals and which will no doubt be in the minds of many members here to-day. It remains for me now only to put the motion, and I do so believing that the majority of members of this Council will agree that this measure, a long deferred measure, will not only meet a standing want in the country, is not only sound in principle, but is conceived on lines which will prove of real benefit to India."

The motion was put and agreed to

The Hon'ble Mr. W. M. Hailey :—"My Lord, I now beg to introduce the Bill and to move that the Bill, together with the statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned till Wednesday, the 3rd March, 1920 at 11 o'clock.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ASSEMBLED UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1915.
(5 & 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61.)

The Council met at the Council Chamber, Imperial Secretariat, Delhi, on Wednesday, the 3rd March, 1920.

PRESENT:

The Hon'ble SIR GEORGE LOWNDES, K.C., K.C.S.I., Vice-President, presiding, and 48 Members, of whom 42 were Additional Members.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked:— 11-3 A.M.

1. "What is the number of raids into the North-West Frontier Province from across the border, the number of thefts, the value of property stolen and the number of men carried off during the last one year? How many of them were Hindus and how many have been ransomed?" Raids, etc., in the North-West Frontier Province.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs replied:—

"The total number of raids and offences committed by trans-border offenders in British districts during the year 1919 was about 507. One hundred Hindus and 231 others were kidnapped, and animals valued at about 3 lakhs and other property worth about 3 lakhs were stolen. Of those kidnapped, ten Hindus and ten others were ransomed, and 37 Hindus were released without ransom.

The above figures are approximate. It is probable that many more persons kidnapped have returned to their homes than the number given, as cases of return of kidnapped persons are often not reported by the local officers."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma asked:—

2. "(a) Will Government state whether sufficient facilities exist at present for the speedy carriage of food-stuffs by the railway from one locality to another, or whether any inconvenience and delays are experienced owing to Priority to be given for the carriage of food-stuffs.

[Rao Bahadur B N. Sarma; Sir Arthur Anderson; Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto; Sir George Barnes; Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea; Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi.] [3RD MARCH, 1920.]

shortage of rolling stock? (b) If sufficient facilities do not exist, do Government propose to provide priority for the carriage of food-stuffs until the deficiency is made up?"

The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Anderson replied:—

"(a) Railways, with their depleted resources, are at present being called upon to handle an abnormal traffic, particularly coal, much of which should ordinarily go by sea, and a certain amount of inconvenience and delay to traffic is inevitable, until such time as the shipping position improves, and the new locomotives and rolling stock now on order have been placed in running.

(b) Every care is being taken to avoid delay to food-stuffs, and whenever it is found necessary to accelerate transport to any particular locality special arrangements are made for this to be done."

The Hon'ble Khan Sahib Shah Nawaz Bhutto asked:—

The Aerial Mail Service, between Karachi and Bombay.

3. "Do Government propose to consider the desirability of retaining the Aerial Mail Service which is now carried on between Bombay and Karachi, as a permanent measure?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"The Aerial Mail Service between Bombay and Karachi was only established as a temporary and experimental measure, with a view to ascertaining among other things the cost of running such a service. The Government of India have already decided that this experimental service should be discontinued in consequence of the small amount of support which the public have given to it."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea asked:—

Export duty on raw Cotton.

4. "Do Government propose to consider the advisability of levying an export duty on raw cotton as in the case of raw hides and skins as a part of the financial operations of the coming year?"

The Hon'ble Sir George Barnes replied:—

"As the Hon'ble Member will have observed from the speech of my Hon'ble colleague Mr. Hailey introducing the Financial Statement, it is not proposed to levy an export duty on raw cotton."

The Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi asked:—

Decision to treat Bengal as a surplus Province.

5. "(a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to starred Question No. XIV asked by the Hon'ble Babu Bhabendra Chandra Roy at a meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 19th November, 1919, in which reference was made to certain conflicting statements of the Government of India and the Government of Bengal in regard to the decision to treat Bengal as a surplus province in the matter of rice last year?

(b) Did the Government of Bengal repudiate the authority of Mr. Beadel to speak on their behalf in giving an estimate of the rice-stocks in Bengal, as indicated in their reply to clauses (d) and (g) of the question referred to?

(c) Will Government make a full statement explaining their point of view in the matter?

[3RD MARCH, 1920.] [Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi; Sir Claude Hill; Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. A. P. Muddiman.]

(d) How far was the estimate given by Mr. Beadel reliable, in view of the statements made by the Government of Bengal in reply to clauses (h) and (i) of the said question, and what steps were taken to test its accuracy before it was acted upon by the Government of India?"

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill replied:—

"(a) The attention of Government has been drawn to the question referred to.

(b) The Government of Bengal stated that Mr. Beadel was not requested or authorised to represent the views of that Government.

(c) The Government of India were only concerned to ascertain the amount of rice available for export from Bengal to deficit provinces and they accepted the estimate made by Mr. Beadel in his capacity as Director of Civil Supplies.

(d) The estimate was the best that could be obtained at the time from available sources. In the circumstances it was necessary to act promptly in order to relieve the food shortages in other provinces, and there was no time for detailed inquiries which were subsequently instituted into the position of stocks in each province."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked:—

6. "(a) Is it proposed to define 'residential qualification' required for candidates and voters in the new constitution in the Bombay Presidency? Residential qualification.

(b) Under the existing Regulations in Bombay does residential qualification mean merely that a candidate must have a place of residence in his constituency?

(c) Do the recommendations of the Franchise Committee accepted by Lord Selborne's Committee on this question empower the Bombay Government or the Government of India to so define 'residential qualification' as to mean that a candidate must be actually residing in his constituency?

(d) Did the Bombay Government, in submitting their view to the Franchise Committee on this question, merely recommend that a candidate must have a place of residence in his constituency?

(e) Is it a fact that in connection with the preparation of the electoral roll Mr. Seddon, the special officer appointed by the Government of Bombay, has already instructed his subordinates to interpret the words 'has a place of residence' to mean actual residence?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. P. Muddiman replied:—

"(a) The qualifications, including residential qualifications, for candidates and electors will be defined in rules to be made under section 7 of the Government of India Act, 1919; but the Government of India have not yet received the detailed proposals of the Government of Bombay.

(b) The rules relating to the election of members of the Bombay Legislative Council by Municipilities and District Boards provide that the candidate must have a place of residence in the group for which he seeks election. Those relating to election by the Muhammadan Community provide that a person can only be nominated as a candidate for the division in which he resides.

(c) The Government of India do not regard the recommendation of the Joint Committee as imposing any restriction regarding the definition to be adopted.

(d) No. They recommended that a candidate should have had a place of residence in the constituency for 12 months.

(e) The Government of India have no information on the subject."

[Mr. V. J. Patel; Mr. A. P. Muddiman; Sir William Vincent.] [3RD MARCH, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Seats on the Legislative Assembly to be allotted to Bengal.

7. "(a) Is it proposed to allot to representatives from Bengal the largest number of seats on the Legislative Assembly, as compared with other provinces?

(b) If so, will Government state their reasons for such a course?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. P. Muddiman replied :—

"(a) and (b) In determining the number of seats to be assigned to each province the Government of India have endeavoured to give due weight to all the relevant factors, including population, political development, and commercial importance. They consider that on this basis Madras, Bombay and the United Provinces should be allotted the same number of seats, and that Bengal is entitled to one seat over and above this number."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Elective seats on the Legislative Assembly to be allotted to Delhi.

8. "(a) How many elective seats on the Legislative Assembly were recommended for Delhi by the Franchise Committee?

(b) Did Lord Selborne's Committee make any change in the proposal?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of allotting at least two elective seats to Delhi on the Legislative Assembly?

(d) Do the recent proposals of the Government of India on this question make any provision for the representation of Delhi on the Legislative Assembly? If not, why not?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. P. Muddiman replied :—

(b) As the Hon'ble Member will see from their report on clause 19 of the Bill the Joint Committee did not deal with questions relating to the constituencies for the Legislative Assembly. They confined themselves to recommending that the members of the Assembly should be directly elected, and that the Government of India should be instructed to work out on this basis proposals, which, as embodied in the draft rules, would be subject to examination by the Committee.

(c) and (d) The Government of India adhere to the view, stated in paragraph 36 of their fifth despatch, that it would be disproportionate to reserve one elected seat for Delhi, the interests of which when necessary, like those of any other minor administrations, could be sufficiently met by nomination."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

Training of medical students in the vernacular.

9. "What action, if any, has each of the Local Governments and Administrations taken on the Resolution of this Council suggesting the advisability of establishing institutions for the purpose of giving medical students a special course of training in the vernacular so as to qualify them for ordinary medical practice in rural areas?"

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent replied :—

"The proposal to establish such institutions was abandoned as Local Governments were unanimously opposed to it. Moreover, the Government of India considered that the object aimed at by the Resolution would be more effectively secured by increasing the number of medical schools so as to provide for more students, by raising the pay of sub-assistant surgeons, and by granting scholarships in medical schools. These measures were suggested to Local Governments for adoption."

[3RD MARCH, 1920.] [Mr. V. J. Patel; Sir J. B. Wood; Sir Claude Hill; Sir William Vincent.]

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel asked :—

10. "Which of the Indian States have introduced free and compulsory primary education, and a system of separation of the Judicial from the Executive in their States?" Compulsory education in Indian State, etc.

The Hon'ble Sir J. B. Wood replied :—

"The Government of India understand that free and compulsory education has been introduced in the Baroda and Kolhapur States. A statement* giving the information on this subject available from the Administration Reports of other States is placed on the table. The Government of India are not aware that any Indian States have introduced a system of separation of the judicial from the executive."

The Hon'ble Mr. V. J. Patel :—"May I ask a supplementary question? Is Government aware that Baroda has already introduced the system of separation of the executive from the judicial?"

The Hon'ble Sir J. B. Wood :—"The Government of India have no information to this effect, so far as I am aware. It may be in some of the papers that we have received, but it is not in the Administration Reports which have been examined."

DOURINE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill :—"Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to amend the Dourine Act, 1910, be taken into consideration. As no criticisms, suggestions or amendments have been received, I do not think it is necessary for me to repeat the observations I made when moving for leave to introduce the Bill. I hope the Council will accept the motion." 11-13 A.M.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill :—"Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

GLANDERS AND FARCY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill :—"Sir, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the law relating to Glanders and Farcy be taken into consideration. The same remarks apply to this motion as to the last."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill :—"Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be passed."

The motion was put and agreed to.

WORKMAN'S BREACH OF CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent :—"Sir I beg, to move that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859, be taken into consideration. I do not 11-14 A.M.

think I need address the Council on the Bill now, because the only changes of importance which have been made by the Select Committee are the subject of specific amendments."

The motion was put and agreed to.

11-15 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to move as an amendment that to clause 1 the following be added:—

'The Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859, as amended by this Act, shall be in force till the 31st March, 1923 . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, I rise to a point of order which really involves a principle of some importance. I submit that this amendment does not arise out of the Bill. We have a Bill here amending a permanent Statute in certain minor particulars. An amendment limiting the duration of the whole Act does not in my judgment arise out of the Bill before the Council."

The Vice-President:—"I must rule that the amendment is out of order, as it does not arise upon the Bill before the Council."

11-16 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I move as an amendment that in clause 3 the words 'get performed' wherever they occur in new section 2(1) be omitted.

"If my amendment be carried the operation of this Act will be confined to cases where labourers, artificers or workmen receive advances for the purpose of doing work themselves. Under the law as it stands, or as it is proposed should stand, workmen who contract to procure labour in addition to their own and thereby assist in any trade and receive advances can be proceeded against under this Act. Now, the question is, has the time not yet arrived when we should not, prior to repealing the whole Act, greatly reduce and curtail the operation thereof by confining it for the time being to workmen or artificers who may fraudulently and dishonestly refuse to perform the work they have to do themselves? It is a matter for very great regret, Sir, that on account of opposition from certain quarters and the conservative habits of the people in general, who do not assert their rights, the Government have not seen their way to repeal the whole Act or radically modify it. Without disclosing any secrets of the Select Committee, I think it is my duty to state to the Council that I had no reason to complain of the attitude of the Government or of the Hon'ble the Home Member with regard to the many questions which arose in considering the provisions of this new Bill. The real point is as to whether public opinion in India is sufficiently strong to enable the Government to repeal the Act immediately or at the earliest possible moment, or so amend the Act as to reduce the harmfulness of its operations still further. I do not mean that the Government have arrived at any definite conclusion as to whether this Act should be repealed in the immediate future or not; but I think they cannot be averse to doing so if public opinion is strong, and I have ventured to bring forward this amendment to take the opinion of the Council, if the Government should permit such an attitude being adopted by the members of this Council.

"Sir, in these days, when labour is asserting its own, and legitimately so, and is even being enthroned in high places, it is rather awkard that we in India should still insist upon antediluvian restrictions on freedom of labour which might, perhaps, have been justified in the year 1859 when this Bill was passed into law. The point does pertinently arise as to whether it is necessary, in the interests of society, that the performance of certain kinds of contracts which workmen enter into should be safeguarded by penal provisions. My humble submission is, that the provisions of the Penal Code relating to cheating and fraudulent breaches of contract amply safeguard the interests of the public wherever such interests have to be safeguarded. Sections 490, 491 and

[3RD MARCH, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N Sarma.]

492 of the Penal Code make it criminal to break a contract of service during a voyage or journey, to attend and supply the wants of helpless persons and to serve at distant places to which a servant is conveyed at the master's expense. Inasmuch as this clause, as it stands, is defended on the ground that persons may make advances and take people to a distance may be otherwise cheated. I submit the object has been achieved already. I may be permitted to read the scope of section 492, which says:—

'Whoever, being bound by lawful contract in writing to work for another person as an artificer, workman or labourer, for a period not more than three years, at any place to which by virtue of the contract he has been or is to be conveyed at the expenses of such other, voluntarily deserts the service of that other during the continuance of his contract or without reasonable cause refuses to perform the service which he has contracted to perform, such service being reasonable and proper service, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding . . . etc.'

and if a person receives money by way of advance promising to perform a contract never intending to do so, he is clearly guilty of cheating and is punishable under section 415. My submission, therefore, is that the Penal Code amply safeguards the interests of the public where such interests have to be safeguarded. Act XIII of 1859 seems to have been primarily introduced into the Imperial Legislative Council at the instance of the Trades Association of Calcutta and to safeguard the interests of the tradesmen in the Presidency-towns. We find that both from the discussion in the Imperial Legislative Council as well as from the preamble to the Act. The wording of the preamble is—

'Whereas much loss and inconvenience are sustained by manufacturers, tradesmen and others in the several Presidency-towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, and in other places, from fraudulent breach of contract on the part of artificers, workmen and labourers who have received money in advance on account of work which they have contracted to perform; and whereas the remedy by suit in the Civil Courts for the recovery of damages is wholly insufficient and it is just and proper that persons guilty of fraudulent breach of contract should be subject to punishment . . .'

"It is only the last section of that Act which provides for the extension of the Act to other places.

'This Act may be extended by the Governor General of India in Council, or by the executive Government of any Presidency or place, to any place within the limits of their respective jurisdictions. In the event of this Act being so extended, the powers hereby vested in a Magistrate of Police shall be exercised by such officer or officers as shall be specially appointed by Government to exercise such powers.'

"Then in the course of the proceedings in the Imperial Legislative Council, we find that the Hon'ble Mr. Currie said:—

'This Bill was introduced at the instance of the Calcutta Trades Association, who had complained of the pecuniary loss to which they were subjected by the fraudulent conduct of their workmen in wilfully failing to perform work for which they had received advances.'

"Mr. Harington said:—

'The amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Member for Bombay, if carried, would greatly change the character of the Bill. If he rightly understood the Bill, the object chiefly aimed at in its introduction was the protection of the tradesmen at the Presidency-towns from pecuniary loss.'

"So I am safe in saying, I think, that the original object of the Bill was to provide for the safety of the tradesmen in the Presidency-towns. I believe, Sir, it might have fulfilled its purpose in the good old days, but I do not think any one from the cities of Calcutta, Madras or Bombay seriously asks for the retention of this clause. It is people elsewhere who, I think, are clamorous about the retention of the provisions of this Act on the Statute-book.

"Then what is it that I ask? I allow that every workman or artificer, who dishonestly refuses to perform the work he has to do himself, may be punished. I am not touching that section, but I am only saying that where a workman receives an advance, hoping or expecting that he will be able to induce his brother-workmen to work along with him and then fails to do so, he should not be penalised or exposed to the penalties of this Bill. There seems to be an impression in certain quarters that sub-contractors and others can be proceeded against. I believe that the rulings of the several High Courts, including that in 41, Madras, distinctly show that sub-contractors who may have entered into contracts will not come within the purview of this Act, unless they are themselves workmen. Therefore, the real question at issue is, I think, whether we should expose a workman who receives an advance thinking that he would be able to induce his brother-workman to work along with him but fails to do so, to the penalties of this clause. My submission is that we should not encourage that system at all. It is absolutely wrong that these imprudent workmen should receive advances and tie themselves down for considerable periods of time. It is economically unsound and it is economically wrong, I think, for the law to encourage such contracts. I submit that we cannot believe in this vicarious form of punishment. The man himself is willing to work. The man himself may say 'Yes, I have given the money to my brother-workman who has promised to work with me, but he fails to keep up his promise and wants to cheat me. I am willing to work'. Still in such cases he is exposed to the risk of being hauled up before a Magistrate and taken to long distances and punished. Of course, the partial answer may be 'Oh, you cannot expect the Magistrate to be so unreasonable as to convict a man if he can show satisfactorily to the Magistrate that his brother-workman refused to work along with him after receiving an advance'. My submission is, Sir, are we to convert the Criminal Court into a Tribunal for the purpose of settling civil disputes? Are we to ask these workmen, artificers or labourers, who are admittedly ignorant men, to undertake the burden of proving affirmatively that they advanced the money to 20 coolies of whom 12 are ready to come and 8 have refused and that therefore he is not able to fulfil the contract? In the first place, it entails enormous expenditure on a workman to prove that, and secondly, I think, we should not encourage the risk of exposing him to the certainty of a conviction because of his general incapacity to defend himself. The result would be that the Magistrate would have no option but to punish, at the instance of the employer, the workman, though it may be that there is a failure owing to the default of others. Then, again, I do not see why you should punish these workmen simply because they happen to belong to the lower classes and are ignorant men, when a sub-contractor, who occupies a higher social status and who is supposed to be intellectually and morally better fitted to keep his word than a workman, is allowed to escape except in so far as the civil law may prove sufficient.

"My submission is, Sir, that if a workman who undertakes to supply labour and to do work is to be punished, then there is no justification in allowing others who break their contracts fraudulently being left unpunished.

"The provisions of the Indian Penal Code extend to all classes alike, and I do not see any basis on which discrimination can be defended.

"My submission is, Sir, that in this advanced age it is impossible to justify distinctions between class and class. Nor do I think that it would serve any useful purpose because we are retaining for the time being the power to proceed against workmen which they have to do and that is sufficient law. If you think the time has not come yet for repealing the whole Act, the law may remain for some time on the Statute-book as modified now. But why extend it to artificers and workmen who are generally unable to prove before a Magistrate that they have really disbursed the advance but failed to perform or complete a contract through no fault of their own?

"I submit, Sir, that I know of several people speaking on behalf of the Public Works Department—I do not propose to make this question a racial one—who feel that this Bill enables the check to the present system to be removed. The time has come for that system to shape itself to more reasonable surroundings, and rather than that a workman should be tied down by this advance being made, it is better, I think, that we should not do so.

"May I submit, Sir, that we are not dealing with the question of planters in the various parts of Assam. They have got Acts of their own bearing on the question of planting, and I submit that these points should be borne in mind when we come to a decision in determining what our attitude ought to be as regards the Workman's Breach of Contract Act.

"I, therefore, hope the Council will agree with me that this part of the clause should be amended in the manner I propose."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, the Government have 11-34 A.M. decided to accord to all officials absolute freedom in the matter of voting and speaking on this amendment. I think I have already made that clear to various members of this Council. I now turn to the merits of the amendment. The Hon'ble Member began his speech by an attack on the whole Act, a very justifiable attack, I dare say, from his point of view, but, as it seemed to me, a little outside the scope of the particular amendment he was introducing. I believe indeed that two-thirds of his speech was directed against the general principle of the Act as a whole, and theoretically I dare say there is much to be said for this view and that the repeal of the Act would be an ideal proposition. I hope the Hon'ble Member will believe that I have a great deal of sympathy with him on this matter. But we must look at the facts from a practical point of view.'

"We are dealing here with very large interests and I feel my responsibility in regard to this Bill to-day to be greater, because two members who could have given us very great assistance from their knowledge and experience of the working of the Act, the Hon'ble Mr. Allen and the Hon'ble Mr. Crum, are unfortunately unable to attend this Council to-day owing to illness. I will, therefore, ask the Council to bear with me if I give some figures which have been supplied to me by Mr. Allen about the tea industry which is so much affected. He has pointed out to me that the population affected is considerably over a million altogether. The number of actual labourers in Assam is 552,000 as opposed to a quarter of a million in all the cotton mills. The area affected is about 406,000 acres.

"I do not know how far this particular amendment which the Hon'ble Member proposes would necessarily affect this industry. The point I want to make to the Council is this, that this amendment, which is of great importance, has never been ventilated or submitted to the public.

"I hope the Hon'ble Member will not think that I am betraying a confidence if I repeat what I said when he proposed the amendment in Select Committee, namely, that if he liked to bring forward a separate Bill on this point he might do so; but that it was unwise to delay the passing of a beneficial measure by introducing at the last moment new matter which would render it necessary for the Government to reconsider its position, in respect of the Bill and might further delay the passing of the Bill which we have before the Council and which, I believe, will be of great benefit to all workmen and labourers concerned. The Hon'ble Member suggested that planters in Assam have a separate Act of their own which protects planters against breach of contract by labourers. So far as I am aware, there is no law on this point in force in Assam, except Act XIII of 1859. I speak subject to correction. The question which the Hon'ble Member has raised, namely, the exemption from the provisions of the Act of all persons who contract to get work performed, is one of great difficulty. When he suggested, however, that what we are doing at present is to penalise civil breaches of contract by such persons, it is my duty again to point out to this Council that this is not so. The only person who is penalised in any way under the Act is the person who breaks a contract fraudulently. Otherwise the person who has taken an advance does not come within the mischief of the Act at all. He cannot be penalized for the default of others, but only if he acts fraudulently himself. It is not, therefore, a question merely of civil disputes as he alleges. He has suggested further that the Government have acted wrongly in not including sub-contractors within the scope of the Act. Now, Sir, the answer is very simple . . . .

[Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; Sir William Vincent; Mr. G. F. S. Christie.] [3RD MARCH, 1920.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"May I rise to a point of order? I am not complaining; I simply stated facts."

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"The suggestion was that the Government acted unfairly in including within the scope of the Act, persons who get work done because sub-contractors are not also so included. I believe that he is correct in his interpretation of the law, and that sub-contractors do not come within the mischief of the Act unless they are also labourers or workmen themselves, but the reason for not extending the scope of the law to other sub-contractors is very simple. The Government is anxious in every way not to extend the provision of this Act but to restrict it as far as possible.

"All the Members who sat on the Select Committee will bear me out when I say we have done so Again I should like to invite the attention of the Hon'ble Member to the different opinions that have been expressed on this particular amendment. Here is one very important opinion from Bombay in which it is said:—

'Large advances are given by the contractors for these works to their workmen, and I understand that in many, if not in most, cases Rs. 300 would be much below the advances demanded and granted. Without these advances workmen or groups of workmen (and it may be noted that the Act has been held to apply to contractors to supply the labourers when the contractor is a workman) will not come to the works, while if such are given of an amount exceeding Rs. 300, the remedy provided by the Act is lost.'

"There are some similar observations in the opinions from Madras. Therefore there are certain Local Governments who would have to be consulted on this particular amendment if it was accepted by the Council, before the Bill could be passed, and that would mean delay in the passing of the present Bill. I hope, therefore, that the Council, although I have given freedom to officials to vote as they like, will not delay a beneficial measure in order to introduce a new amendment of this kind. As a mere technical point also, I was a little surprised to find that the Hon'ble Member, who is a lawyer, proposed to omit these words from one section of the Act, but is oblivious of the fact that the same words appear in two other sections. He has studied the previous proceedings with great care, but has apparently omitted to examine the rest of the Act itself; if he had done so, he would have seen that the same words occur in section 1 and section 3. What the exact effect of omitting the words from the one particular section as he has proposed would be I do not know, but I could not accept responsibility for a Bill so drafted. The acceptance of this amendment would mean that I should be unable to proceed further with the Bill at present, not only for this reason however, but for the more important reason that the amendment which he proposes has never been adequately considered by the very large interests affected."

11-42 A.M. The Hon'ble Mr. G. F. S. Christie.—"Sir, it is with great hesitation that I venture to address this Honourable Council. Correspondence shows that each province has its own difficulties in connection with this Bill, and it is with the special object of discussing its bearing on my own particular province that I now venture into this arena. I may add that it has seemed in some quarters that the voice of Burma has recently been hardly sufficiently audible. The great trouble that we feel, and always have felt, in Burma is the want of an adequate supply of labour. Though we have been able to induce people to go over from India for a couple of years or more, and in some cases to settle down with their wives and families in the country, we have never yet been able to secure an adequate amount of labour The statistics show that the average number of persons who migrate from Calcutta to Rangoon in the year is about half a million, and the Committee which was appointed recently to inquire into the conditions of accommodation provided by the British India Steamship Navigation Company showed the very great hardships that coolies had to endure in their passage. If we could only induce men to settle down in the country in Burma, we could provide that factor which is so vital and necessary to the development of our province, we could abolish all this inconvenience, this hardship, and this expense consequent on the constant journeys backwards and forwards from Calcutta to Rangoon, and we could secure for the province the wages which at present are taken away and distributed elsewhere outside our province. The supply of labour is artificially restricted, labourers are bound down to the soil and to the place in which they were born and if we intend to liberate them from their fetters, we must provide them with adequate means for migration; not a temporary migration where a man can be taken from one province to a distant province under another master, to serve out his term and pay off the advance which he obtains, and then return to his own province, to his old master to continue a further term of servitude, but a permanent migration, a permanent migration, Sir, to a land which, if it does not flow with milk and honey, at all events provides a standard of comfort and an abundance of foodstuffs which are not dreamed of in his philosophy. It is this dependence on the maistries and this system of advances which prevent the free employment of labour and deprive it of its proper remuneration, and, if we could only do away with these, the price of labour would be determined in the ordinary way, as my Hon'ble friend Mr. Sarma said, by the laws of supply and demand, and we should enable men to stay in the place where they are really wanted instead of being taken away to dwell in a place to which custom, aided by legislation, has decreed that they are permanently to return. Certain industries, Sir, are artificially fostered, and we have land very much congested in India, while there are immense areas in Burma which are crying aloud for labour for their development. There are in one district in Bengal, (Dacca), 3,000 square miles with a population of about three million. Mergui District in my division has an area of 10,000 square miles with a population of barely 100,000 people. This Act, Sir, is one which Pericles would have condemned as one of expediency, which is economically unsound and one which fosters the idea that if people can work, there is no necessity for them to save; and we know that the human tendency is that a person when he is in good health imagines that he will be able to work for an indefinite term.

"For these reasons I hope that the Act will be repealed in the not very distant future, but I recognise that this course would be attended at present with the greatest danger and would imperil the economic structure. Labour cannot go forward where it is wanted at present without initial advances, and there are industries, and many of them, which owe their prosperity to an adequacy of labour, and these industries would be crippled and in many cases compelled to close down altogether if this supply was withdrawn. I would, therefore, suggest that we follow the very sage advice which was given by the Hon'ble Home Member the other day in discussing the Hindu Marriage Law, 'festina lente,' he said. One of the essential products of the Empire during the war and one of the key industries is wolfram, the largest supply of which in the Empire comes from the Tavoy District of the Tenasserim Division. In the year 1916 and part of 1917 we imported over 5,000 Chinese coolies and a large number of men from Hazaribagh and other places in India. In the year 1918, there were upwards of 92 cases under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, and in the year 1919, there were upwards of, so a telegram which I have just received says, 870 cases, besides those cases which were withdrawn before they came to a Magistrate, and though in only one case out of those 92 was an order passed against the respondent, yet Deputy Commissioners have been unanimous in their opinion that without this Act, the output of wolfram would have been very considerably diminished.

"We regard these words 'get performed' as unnecessary. The conditions under which labour is maintained on the plantations in Madras and other places are set out in the letter received from the Government of Madras, which has been received since the meeting of the Select Committee. With these conditions I have no personal acquaintance, but I would point out that if the words be retained, Burma will continue to suffer for want of labour, and it will be impossible for employers to engage their own servants in the place of contractors. So far as Burma is concerned, we do not need this. But it has been alleged that Burma will suffer very much if this Bill becomes law. The principal firms, who have been consulted, say that they are in the habit of making large advances of upwards of Rs. 2,000 (very much above the limit which was suggested by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Crum in a paper which I have received). Messrs. Mcgregor and Company say that even now the Act is of no use to them and that it needs strengthening and not weakening in the interests of employers. The Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation—these are two of the biggest timber firms in Burma—referred to the Act as one intended to secure them in their dealings with petty contractors, but the Act, as has already been pointed out, refers to artificers, workmen and labourers, and there is no mention of vicarious employment.

"As to the rulings quoted by the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma, I think I have them in my mind. One is the case of Caluram v. Chengappa and the other is the case of Devappa Ramappa Naik v. King Emperor and in these cases it has been laid down that the Act does not apply in the case of petty contractors unless there is a guarantee to render personal labour. There is no justification, therefore, for supposing that this Act will apply to petty contractors in the same way as to ordinary labourers.

"I, therefore, agree that this Bill proposed by the Hon'ble the Home Member should be passed, and it has my wholehearted support."

1-52 A.M. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I understand that the attitude of the Government will be that they are indifferent to the fate of this particular amendment but that they are not in a position to proceed with this Bill finally if the amendment should be carried by the free vote of this Council. . . . . .

The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"May I explain, Sir; I should rather put it in this way that I should have to consider my position further in regard to this Bill if the amendment is carried. I may have put it too strongly before."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Certainly. Of course the Hon'ble the Home Member must be very cautious in the employment of his language and I can readily appreciate it, but I know where it will lead to, and I do not want that any benefit which workmen may receive under this Act should be indefinitely postponed on account of any particular clause. The Hon'ble Member has promised to favourably consider the introduction of another Bill or rather to facilitate the progress of any Bill that may be introduced for the purpose of modifying or repealing this particular Act, and with that assurance I think we must rest satisfied.

"Sir, may I just point out one or two things before I sit down. The Hon'ble the Home Member referred to Coorg and Madras as places where opinion does not seem to be very favourable to me. Of course, with regard to Coorg, one can readily understand their anxiety to have this labour force even if considerable inconvenience be caused to labour. I do not think the same can be said of Madras. I hold the Madras opinion to be that the Planters' Act is agreed to be repealed in case the Workman's Breach of Contract Act is modified in a way suitable to the wishes of Madras planters. So that has really no bearing now upon the present controversy, and I do not think the view of Madras can be quoted against me at all.

"Then, there is another point. The Hon'ble the Home Member said that I was assuming in a way that if this Bill should include workmen contractors, it should also include others. I never suggested its expansion and I shall fight against it. What I said was that there is no reason by which we can defend its application to one class if we exempt another class. Inasmuch as a large class of sub-contractors who may dishonestly commit a breach of contract are exempted from the operation of this Act, and rightly, too, I hope that the Hon'ble the

[3RD MARCH, 1920.] [Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma; The Vice-President.]

Home Member may see his way to bring in another Bill himself to get the whole Act repealed or modified in a substantial manner.

"Sir, I shall not take any risks and I shall not, therefore, press my amendment."

The amendment was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The Vice-President:—"The next amendment in the list, No. 8,* stands in the name of the Hon'ble Mr. Crum. As I am informed that Mr. Crum is absent owing to illness, I propose to adjourn the final discussion of this Bill in order to give him a chance of moving his amendment. He returned from Calcutta for this purpose, and I imagine the Council would like to hear him. I will, therefore, go on with Mr. Sarma's amendment and finish the Bill as far as it is possible, leaving this one amendment over."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma:—"Sir, I beg to move that in clause 3 to the proviso to new section 2 (1) the following be added at the end:— 11-56 A.M.

'Or (c) if the artificer, workman or labourer tenders the amount advanced and an additional sum of fifty per cent. of the said amount for payment to the complainant.'

Clause 3 (2) would read thus:

The Magistrate may proceed and pass orders under clause 2 (1)

'Provided that no such order shall be made—

(a) unless the complaint was brought within three months of the neglect or refusal; or

(b) if it is proved that the complainant has, on any previous occasion, obtained an order under this sub-section against such artificer, workman or labourer; or

(c) if the artificer, workman or labourer tenders the amount advanced and an additional sum of fifty per cent. of the said amount for payment to the complainant.'

"I submit, Sir, that the modification I suggest is an extremely reasonable one and I hope the Hon'ble the Home Member will not be compelled to assume the same attitude towards this amendment as he was on general considerations obliged to assume towards the previous amendment. You accuse a man of taking an advance and not doing the work. You say he has committed fraud in promising to do a certain piece of work and then not doing it. You give the Magistrate the option of directing either the performance of the work or the payment of the money advanced. My position is that you may give him that option, but if the workman or the workman sub-contractor comes forward and says 'Look here, I am not able to do the work; I am willing to repay the advance and I am willing also to pay a penalty in order to escape the rigour of this Act; kindly let me go', you ought to permit him to go without any trial. I would ask what is the peculiar quality of work which a labourer can be compelled to perform against his wishes under this clause 2 (1) which the policy of the Act requires that he should be compelled to perform, although he is prepared to return the whole of the advance and also pay a certain amount by way of a penalty. Fraud consists in a man receiving the money and running away without repaying the advance, and, inasmuch as in some cases the men are poor, if you ask that the employer should go to a civil court, he may be without any remedy. I make a provision for that. I say there can be no question of fraud whatsoever if the labourer or sub-contractor himself comes forward and repays the advance with a heavy penalty. All that you can say is that the man is unwilling to work for some reasons which he may not be able satisfactorily to explain to the court. The master may have illtreated him or there may have arisen circumstances which he cannot disclose to the court or which he cannot prove to the court and which might aggravate his offence if he were to suggest them in court. Therefore he says 'I cannot work; let me off,' and what I submit is, why should you give the discretion to the Magistrate in such a case to compel the man to go to work

* The Hon'ble Mr. Crum to move as an amendment that in clause 3, proviso (b) to new section 2(1) be omitted.

"There is no use telling me that a Magistrate would not be so foolish in passing orders when he could understand that the workman is reasonably unwilling to work. As I have suggested, although it may be said to the credit of the magistracy that they are able in a good many cases to hold the scales even between the employers and the labourers, it is not surprising that in some instances, and not in a few, people have no confidence and they think that the employers on account of friendship or other causes will be able to secure their own in some courts. Now, why should you expose the Government and the magistracy to this unnecessary charge when the men themselves are willing to say 'We will repay the am unt'? In the case of a workman contractor, who undertakes to bring a arge number of coolies, but who is unable to bring in the whole—in 39 Mad. I think he undertook to bring 18 and brought only 8—he may be sent to jail. Well, the man says 'I will pay back the advance'. Why don't you allow him to do so? I know it has been suggested that 50 per cent. would be really no remedy because in some cases these employers will have spent per coolie much larger sums than the 50 per cent. additional may cover. My submission is that we are immediately introducing into the discussion the question of proprietory right for a period in the labourer, that is, that the employer has got a proprietory right to the extent of say Rs. 300 or 200 which he must have incurred by way of general expenses on the labourer, and consequently it should not be 50 per cent. but the amount per head which the employer may be considered to have expended upon the whole labour force as a class. That is one of the grounds that was urged against the acceptance of this amendment. My submission is that there is absolutely no force in that we cannot recognise any proprietary right, full, semi, or partial, or any semblance of a proprietary right in labour. It was suggested that this had nothing to do with labour in Assam. I find, subject to correction, that since 1901 the Act is in force in Assam subject to certain modifications, and the Madras Act I of 1903 is in force, as modified, in Madras. I am not sure whether that is so or not; but, if so, there would be no need for us to consider those questions dealing with this particular amendment; but even assuming for a moment that they have a bearing, remote or present, upon that question, my submission is that the workman should be allowed to go free without being harassed by a trial if he can bring the money into court and tender it before a Magistrate."

12-1 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir William Vincent:—"Sir, the Hon'ble Member began by asking me whether I would oppose this amendment on the same general considerations that weighed with me in the case of the previous amendment. I cannot say on this occasion that there are consequential amendments of the same nature as those to which I referred in the last case. Though, if I may be allowed to refer to those for a minute, I cannot remember that in his reply the Hon'ble Member gave us any explanation of his reason for omitting to consider the consequential amendments which I mentioned, but that is, perhaps, scarcely relevant to the present discussion, in which official members will as before speak and vote as they like.

"Turning to the particular point, which was raised by the Hon'ble Member, I must confess that when he proposed this amendment, as he will remember, in Select Committee, I was at first prepared to consider it favourably; and it was only when the real dangers of it were exposed by those unfortunately not present to-day, who have very much more knowledge than I have, at any rate, of the conditions of labour in Assam and of the working of the Act, that I saw where the mischief of the proposal lay; and I think that all Hon'ble Members of the Select Committee, except perhaps Mr. Sarma, whom it is always difficult to convince, were satisfied of the validity of the reasons which led the Government to refuse to accept this amendment. The real point is this, that if you allow the labourer the option of repaying the advance made plus 50 per cent., you encourage what is the most dangerous of all practices, this traffic in labour. If there has been one thing, as I understand, more injurious to the tea industry than another, it is this process of enticing labour from one garden to another. What the Hon'ble Member's amendment presupposes is that the amount of money which labour costs to get to a garden is limited to the advance which a labourer receives It is not so at all according to my information. The advance to the labourer, i.e., money that he gets in his pocket may be a very small sum, say Rs. 20 or 30; but to take a labourer to Assam costs his employer something like, I am told, Rs. 140 to Rs. 180; and I want Council to consider what the position of the planter would be, if the amendment was accepted. This is not a question of European or of Indian planters. Indeed Indian planters, I may say, are very much stronger in their opposition to this amendment of the Act than many Europeans. What is the position of the planter? He has imported a man up to Assam to work for a certain period, and the man is perfectly willing to fulfil the contract; the employer has spent Rs. 140 or Rs. 180, of which Rs. 20, or possibly Rs. 30, has been given to the labourer as an advance. The labourer is deliberately enticed away to another garden by a dishonest employer next door, and he can do so if this amendment is passed by paying Rs. 40 plus Rs. 50 per cent. or Rs. 20, a total of Rs. 60, thus securing for his garden a labourer who has cost the original employer Rs. 140 to Rs. 180. If this amendment is accepted, it would, I should think, involve the money spent in getting up a labourer now given free, being all put down to advance, because the planter will say 'I am not going to give you anything which you will not repay by working for me.' Indeed, it might be that the whole cost of importing a labourer would be treated as an advance. In such circumstances, the amendment would be to the injury of the labourer. It has, therefore, two definite disadvantages. It would definitely encourage enticement of labour from one employer to another, and if there has been one thing that is more fatal to the tea industry than another it is that. In the second place, it would tend to more money being debited against the labourer as an advance than is at present the custom. The Hon'ble Member has put before us a somewhat lurid picture of the way in which the Act is administered. But I am assured by Mr. Allen that in Assam at least the Act is worked very leniently; that nearly all the amendments which we have suggested in our Bill have been anticipated in practice by the magistracy there. The figures which the Hon'ble Mr. Christie produced before the Council now also, I think, support that view A contract can only be enforced under this Act if it is broken fraudulently, or to use the language of the Act, wilfully and without reasonable cause; and I cannot see why a labourer, who has entered into a deliberate contract of that kind and afterwards fraudulently breaks it, should not be made to perform that which he has undertaken to do. The Hon'ble Mr. Sarma suggests that it would be quite sufficient to make him repay merely the advance that he has taken plus 50 per cent., i.e., to give him this option for the Magistrate can now order a labourer to repay the advance and escape any penalty under the Act. That is really to deprive the Magistrate of all discretion to make this man perform the solemn contract into which he has entered. For these reasons I hope that the Council will not accept this amendment.

"There is only one point more which I would like to mention, and that is, the Hon'ble Member's reference to the Assam Immigration Act of 1901. That there are certain penal provisions in that Act I am well aware but, to the best of my recollection, the enforcement of those provisions was abrogated in that province many years ago, I believe."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.—"Sir, I am sorry the Hon'ble the Home Member has not seen his way to accept this amendment. I am fortified now more than ever that it would be rather difficult for the Government to weigh the advantages of the people as against the advantages of the planters. Let us look at the arguments adduced. The argument is, a man is brought into Assam or into the unhealthy climate of Wynad from a distance on various representations made to him and a sum of about R150 on 12-12 P.M.

the average is expended on him. If he is permitted not to do work paying R20 or R30 advance which he may have actually received, there is a danger of freedom of labour movement within Assam and Wynad. The labourers will not be tied down like the Panchamas in Madras to the estates to which they have been wedded. There is a danger of other planters enticing those who have been taken there perhaps on extremely cheap terms. Let us analyse the position further If the labourer on an estate is paid his rational wages, I mean the wages prevailing in that neighbourhood or which can be paid by the tea planters consistently with enormous profits to their business, how can his brother planters entice away the labourers without suffering loss. It is because this abnormal system of assisting these planters by artificial help is enforced that some planters perhaps are able to make more profits than is legitimately their own, and the labourers will not get their wages to which they are reasonably entitled. How can a brother planter entice this labourer unless the latter is paid more. The labourer will not be a fool to go to a neighbouring estate unless he is given a much larger wage than he was promised in the former case, or unless the treatment in the former case was absolutely unsufferable. Then I submit, Sir, in cases where labourers are ill-treated, there must be some chance of escape for them ; and where he can get a larger wage consistently with his returning the advance, he should be permitted to do so, and labour will come in its own in the province of Assam as elsewhere. We are asked as to whether there is not the danger of these Rs. 150 also being tacked on to the advance given to the labourers. We seem to have here the repetition of the Indenture system which the Government of India have tried to abolish in other places enforced here with a vengeance. Cannot the law ensure to the poor labourer that only such advance as he receives yearly would be credited to his account and not the average cost to the planter by reason of disbursing the whole expenditure on his establishment amongst the coolies. I submit, Sir, that is an absolutely meaningless argument. I submit there is no such real danger to the coolie if the law would take care of the coolie. Of course, if the law does not take care of the coolie so long as these Acts are in force, then certainly there may be a danger. But if the law does take care of the coolie so long as this semi-indenture system continues, I submit there is no harm

"I am glad to hear that the penal provisions under the Assam Labour Act have been abolished or rather they have been suspended by notification, and I can see, therefore, the anxiety on the part of the planters to tighten up this Act as much as possible. Of course the Government wish to meet them as much as possible. I can quite realise that, and that is a reasonable attitude also. But my submission is, do not make the whole of India suffer by these provisions which cannot be defended either by arguments on principle or by expediency; do not let the whole of India suffer simply because you must have special provisions with regard to some particular tract for some years to come. If you want to have the Workman's Breach of Contract Act applied to particular tracts, like the Nilgiris and Wynad, I have not the slightest objection to those provisions being limited to those particular localities. But I submit, Sir, that on general principles the labourer must be absolutely free to dispose of his labour in any way he chooses at the best possible market-rate and on returning the advance that he takes, and that he should not be tied down by any law to being compelled to serve for a particular period. On the essential question as to what type of labour it is which Government wish to guard and which cannot be procured otherwise than by tendering proper wages, the Hon'ble Member in charge has given no answer. If the labourer can be offered sufficient wages to attract him in the normal course of things, it is well and good, but if it is to be at the expense of sweated labour, I think it is time for the legislature to interfere, and I submit, Sir, the labourers in Assam and Assam must have absolute freedom to leave the estates so long as they do not cheat their masters of the advances which they receive."

The motion was put and negatived.

INDIAN RED CROSS SOCIETY BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"Sir I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to constitute an Indian Red Cross Society. 12.27 P.M.

"In laying this motion before the Council, I wish very specially to ask for the indulgence of the Council, because I am in a peculiarly unprotected position. Though I am a Member of the Executive Council, this is a private Bill, and I am, therefore, in the same position as any private member of this Council, and it is up to me to justify before the whole Council the merits of the motion which I have to submit.

"The position might perhaps be described as being that of the big boy who is accustomed to discipline others of a lesser size within the sanctum of his studio and who finds himself on the play-ground surrounded by a very large number of smaller boys and entirely at their mercy. I therefore hope to be able to appeal to this Council and to ask that they will support the motion to introduce this Bill entirely on its merits. In view of the novelty of the nature of the proposed legislation, as well as the novelty of the circumstances in which it is introduced, the Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to it has been drawn up at considerable length and much more fully than is usual. At the same time, I am afraid I must supplement what is stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons by giving to the Council, as briefly as I can, the history of the circumstances that led up to the preparation of this Bill.

"Now in August, 1914, when the great war broke out, India, of all the countries belligerent on that occasion, found herself destitute of any machinery of a humanitarian character with which to supplement the carrying out of measures, ameliorative measures, connected with the sickness and suffering arising out of the war. It was necessary to improvise everything that should be done, and the late Sir Pardey Lukis—and India has never had a better friend—devoted himself to the task of that improvisation. He took the only organisation which existed in India at the time, namely, the St. John's Ambulance Association, and on the model of what was being done in England he grafted upon that an organisation designed to resemble the organisation of the British Red Cross Society, and brought into being a branch of the Joint War Committee in England. With that organisation, which of necessity was largely official in character because, as I say, India had had no machinery before to deal with such a crisis as had then arisen, with that machinery Sir Pardey Lukis managed to organise arrangements by which he was able to discharge, or rather the Joint War Committee in India, was able to discharge, as agents of the English Joint War Committee the task of alleviating sickness and suffering arising out of the war. But, on the financial side, in spite of the generous response from time to time made by individuals in the cause of providing money for the relief of suffering, to a very large extent India had to rely upon the moneys transmitted from the British Joint War Committee, and administer them out here through the agency of the Joint War Committee. It was not till December the 12th, 1917, that India took her proper place in respect of administering this relief. As a result of an appeal made by His Excellency the Viceroy and with the 'Our Day' organisation administered by Mr. Buck, there was an enormous response, a great rally in India to the cause of the relief of sickness and suffering arising out of the war. The provinces co-operated in the most hearty manner and as a result of the appeal initiated by His Excellency a sum of over a crore of rupees was collected to the credit of the Joint War Committee for purposes analogous to those administered by the British Red Cross Society. From the 12th of December 1917, which can be taken as our day of emancipation in India, India was able not only to administer the Red Cross work in her own borders, but to take over the Red Cross Commission in Mesopotamia and to assist Red Cross operations in Egypt, Palestine and elsewhere, wherever Indian troops were employed. Now, one has never had an opportunity before publicly of recording the obligation which, I think, India owes, and which certainly the Government of India feel, to those who had so generously responded to His Excellency the Viceroy's appeal and to those who worked so hard to develop the organisations, Provincial as well as at Headquarters, for the proper administration of the funds so collected, and I am very glad to have this opportunity of expressing the appreciation which the Joint War Committee themselves feel for all that has been done, and the generous response which India made in that matter. It would be inappropriate here to mention the names of the living; they are in fact far too numerous to mention, but I do believe this Council would wish that I should on their account endeavour to place on record the appreciation which we must all feel for the efforts, the self-sacrificing efforts of our late friend Surgeon-General Sir Pardey Lukis, who unquestionably hastened his end by his self-sacrificing labours in the cause of humanitarianism in India.

"Now with an access of funds it became necessary for the Joint War Committee to re-organise itself, if possible, on a more popular basis, and also to visualise the future. This process was undertaken during the year 1918. The constitution of the Joint War Committee itself was liberalised and very largely Indianised, the methods of procedure and work were altered so as to give provinces a greater degree of autonomy, and as far as possible there was no interference with the procedure which provinces chose to adopt in administering the funds which they themselves had collected and which were at their credit; and, with reference to the future, after August the 8th, 1918, when it became apparent that we were going to win the war within a reasonable limit of time, the Joint War Committee began to consider what should be done with such balances of the funds collected on 'Our Day' which might remain to their credit at the cessation of hostilities. In connection with that question it became imperative (because it is to be remembered that we were still, and are still to-day, technically a branch of the English Joint War Committee) to refer the question home to London. In doing this the Joint War Committee suggested to Headquarters in London that the proper course would be to tie up the capital sum which might be at the credit of the Joint War Committee at the end of the war, ensuring that it should only be expended in the ways originally desired by the donors to that fund, namely, for the purpose of relief of sickness and suffering in time of war. But it was also felt that, particularly in order to keep in being the organisations which had been created during the war for the relief of suffering and for helping the humanitarian work generally, in order to keep that organisation in being, it would be well to have a perpetual activity, which should be financed by the interest accruing from the capital sum which might stand to our credit at the close of the war. This suggestion was put to London, and it was very gratifying to find not only that they approved of our suggestion, but that it tallied in all respects precisely with what was happening in England. The Joint War Committee in England simultaneously came to the same conclusion that we had come to, and determined so to re-organise the British Red Cross Society as to enable it, primarily an organisation for war, to undertake philanthropic work during peace times, and to expend upon that civil philanthropic work the moneys which had been collected for the relief of sickness and suffering during the war. With this end in view the British Red Cross Society took steps to have its charter altered and amplified, and I shall have occasion directly to refer to the revised terms of that charter.

"But the outstanding event of the year 1919, so far as my present purpose is concerned, is this that in that year, at the instance of the British Red Cross Society primarily, there was brought into being the International League of Red Cross Societies, which League, immediately on its formation, issued an invitation to India to join as an affiliated member in all respects on a par with, and with the same authority and autonomous independence as, the British Red Cross Society. That invitation was issued at a time when I happened to be in England and the Joint War Committee out here, with His Excellency's approval, telegraphed authorising me on their behalf to accept the invitation on behalf of India. Well, I think, this Council will agree that it was a very satisfactory position, from the point of view of India's pride, in which India found herself. India found herself recognised, in respect of this Red Cross work, as being in all respects on a par with other nations so far as Red Cross work went. But with that sense of pride must necessarily follow a sense of responsibility, and as soon as that invitation had been provisionally accepted at the instance of the Joint Committee out here, it became obvious that we must take steps to create an Indian Red Cross Society which did not till then exist. On the 29th of November last, with this end in view, I issued what I am afraid was a very long letter, with His Excellency the Viceroy's approval, to all provincial centres explaining, much as I have endeavoured to explain to this Council, the steps which had led up to the project for inaugurating a Red Cross Society, and inviting their opinions upon the organisation which was most proper for carrying it effectively into being.

[Sir Claude Hill.] [3RD MARCH, 1920.]

The replies received were most encouraging; there was not a dissentient voice from the whole of India or from any provincial branch. All were agreed that legislation was desirable to give effect to the project of linking India up on a level with the other nations in respect of this great work. With my letter of the 19th of November I was able to issue to Local Governments also a letter from Sir Arthur Stanley to County Associations at Home in the course of which he shows what the purposes are which the British Red Cross Society intends to further during peace time in the future, and they include the following:—

'The matters which we hope to bring under the immediate attention of he Joint Council are—

(1) the care of the sick and wounded men of His Majesty's Forces whether still on the active list or demobilised;
(2) such care as may still be necessary for prisoners of war;
(3) the care of those suffering from tuberculosis, having regard, in the first place, to soldiers and sailors whether they have contracted the disease on active service or not;
(4) child welfare;
(5) work parties to provide the necessary garments, etc., for hospitals and health institutions in need of them;' (I wish to lay particular stress on that);
'(6) assistance required in all branches of nursing, health and welfare work, ancillary to the Ministry of Health;
(7) Red Cross War and Peace Hospital Library;
(8) Home Service Ambulance work.'

Simultaneously, also I was able with that letter to circulate an agreement which had been come to in England between the British Red Cross Society and the Order of St. John of Jerusalem by which the Order of St. John of Jerusalem agreed to co-operate with the Red Cross Society in their enlarged sphere of activity. To any one who knows the rivalry which existed at the commencement of the war between those great societies, it is impossible to exaggerate the significance of the agreement arrived at between them, and those who were sufficiently interested to read my letter of November the 29th, which was published in the press, will have seen that the whole of the organisation suggested to provinces is based on the supposition that there will be the same co-operation out here in India between St. John's Ambulance Association and the future provincial branches of the Red Cross Society.

"Now, Sir, I would ask Members of Council to turn for a moment to section 7 of the draft Bill before the Council, which has been so drafted as to endeavour to give effect to the purposes I have described. It says:—

'Notwithstanding anything contained in any appeal for subscriptions or gifts, to or for the purposes of the Committee, the Managing Body of the Society may in its discretion apply—

(a) either the corpus or the income or any part of such corpus or income of any property vested in it under clause (b) of section 6 for the relief of sickness, suffering or distress caused by the operation of war in India or in any other country in which Expeditionary Forces from India may from time to time be employed and for purposes cognate to that object and in maintaining Red Cross Depôts for military purposes;

(b) in accordance with the provisions of section 8 the income only of any such property but not the corpus or any part thereof for the relief of sickness or suffering in India, whether due to the operation of war or not, or in pursuance of any of the objects set forth in the First Schedule.'

"If Hon'ble Members will turn to the First Schedule of the Bill they will see that there is a remarkable resemblance between the objects to which the funds of the Society may be applied, as specified there, and those which I have read out from Sir Arthur Stanley's letter to County Committees.

"I now, Sir, turn back for a moment to the title of the Bill which is 'A Bill to constitute an Indian Red Cross Society.' Now, I am aware that it has been suggested, and in some quarters apprehended, that that title possesses a sectarian character and possibly a sectarian significance, and, since that is not the case, I have thought that it would be well to explain precisely what the Red Cross in reference to the Red Cross Society really connotes. I have no doubt that many members of this Council are aware of the circumstances under which, after the Geneva Convention, which followed upon the Battle of Solferino, the Red Cross Societies first came into being, and are familiar with the fact that, in taking the Red Cross as their emblem, they were taking the emblem of the Republic of Switzerland, and that the Red Cross Societies were in fact christened Red Cross Societies because of the Red Cross which was the Swiss national emblem, and thereby recorded the fact that the convention had been arrived at at Geneva. That was the whole of the significance of the Red Cross title assumed by the Society. But, since that may not be held to be a complete reply to the suggestion, I have been furnished with an extract from the Encyclopædia Britannica, 11th edition, from which I would like to read a short extract :—

'From its simplicity of form the cross has been used both as a religious symbol and as an ornament, from the dawn of man's civilisation. Various objects, dating from periods long anterior to the Christian era, have been found, marked with crosses of different designs, in almost every part of the old world. India, Syria, Persia and Egypt have all yielded numberless examples, while numerous instances, dating from the later Stone Age to Christian times, have been found in nearly every part of Europe. The use of the cross as a religious symbol in pre-Christian times, and among non-Christian peoples, may probably be regarded as almost universal, and in very many cases it was connected with some form of nature worship.'

"But, after all, I prefer to rely upon the facts connected with the Red Cross Societies, as at present universally in being, rather than upon any encyclopædic description. And what are the facts? Every civilised country in the world has a branch, in nearly all cases utilising the name of Red Cross Society, and every civilised country has as members of that Red Cross Society, or whatever it is called, countless numbers of members of all races, creeds and religions throughout the world. There is nothing to cavil at either in regard to the title or to the operations of the Red Cross Society. And I would remind Council of what was said in a report, which many members may have seen, by a Committee which was despatched to Mesopotamia to investigate the operations of the Red Cross Commission. At the end of their report they observe :—

thereby implying that it was catholic in all respects. I think, therefore, that the Council will agree that the question of the title of the Bill is subsidiary to the main humanitarian purpose for which this Bill is framed, and in regard to that purpose I have no doubt whatever as to the sympathy of this Council and of India at large. Proceeding now to clause 2 of the Bill, it is provided that the first members of the Society 'shall be nominated by persons who immediately before the commencement of this Act were members of the Joint War Committee Indian Branch of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England and the British Red Cross Society at a meeting to be summoned and held for that purpose in accordance,' etc. Well the reason for that is very simple. It is that they are the body of persons who are responsible as a matter of fact to the original subscribers of the Our Day Fund, and it is on them, in the first instance, that the responsibility for initiating the indianisation of the Indian Red Cross Society must lie.

"Under clause 4 it will be seen that within six months rules and regulations have to be made by the managing committee dealing with certain obvious requirements.

"I do not think I need go in detail through all the other sections, but under clause 8 provision is made for the constitution in the various 'provinces, States and other parts of India' specified in the Second Schedule branch committees consisting of members of the Society and 'subject to the requirements of the managing body of the Society for the purpose of clause (a) of section 7 and any provision for expenses of management,' the income of the property which has been vested in the Society under clause (b) of section 6 shall be distributed annually among such branch committees in the proportion shown in the said Schedule, to be expended by them at their discretion upon all or any of the objects referred to in clause (b) of section 7. Those proportions, I wish to explain, as is clear from the Statement of Objects and Reasons, have been arrived at on a consideration of the precise sums contributed to the Central Fund by the different provinces in the first instance, and it is proposed to give back precisely in that proportion the annual income, as a matter of right, to the contributing provinces.

"I think it may be relevant and will interest the Council if I read an extract from the new Charter of the British Red Cross Society. After reciting the reasons for enlarging, adding to and varying the ordinances of the said charter, it proceeds :—

'We are graciously pleased to grant, ordain and declare as follows, namely :—' In addition to the primary object as defined in the said charter the objects and purposes of the said Society shall include the improvement of health, the prevention of disease and the mitigation of suffering throughout the world.' It also gives to the Society power 'to affiliate to the said Society any Society or organisation which is carrying on in any part of the world, work similar to any work for the time being carried on by the said Society or any local Branch of such Society or organisation, and to enrol members, etc.'

"I think it will be agreed that the breadth of the objects of the Charter of the new Red Cross Society in England are so extensive that our Bill cannot be said to go too far.

"I should like also, if I may, to say that in the preparation of this Bill I have been greatly assisted by an informal committee of Hon'ble Members of this Council who have been of the greatest possible help. They have represented the various provinces interested in the development of this scheme; they have all given their cordial support to it, and they concluded their second meeting by agreeing, unanimously that 'the Bill with the amendments proposed would be suitable for the purposes in view and should be passed into law.' Further, I am happy to be able to say that I had an opportunity when the Princes' Conference was held here last November of consulting some of the Princes as to the possibility of extending Red Cross activities in the States of India; and I had the most satisfactory response from them. I was invited to meet them and an informal meeting of the conference recorded its sympathy and intention to support the movement as soon as it was inaugurated.

"I may now summarise the main purposes which we have in view. They are threefold :—

firstly, the preservation of the capital sum subscribed in response to the 'Our Day' appeal for war work and its reservation for expenditure on the relief of sickness and suffering arising out of the war;

secondly, to give authority for the extension of the purposes to which the interest on that fund may be expended on general humanitarian work and improvement of civil hospitals throughout India, and thirdly, to bring into being, or rather to secure the continuance of those organisations which have come into being, during the war, and which we hope will not be allowed to relapse into non-existence during peace, but which we hope will divert their energies to an interest in hospital conditions, civil as well as military, throughout India.

"For the benefit of provincial representatives, I should like to say that the Bill has been drawn with a full appreciation of the desire of provinces to have autonomous control of their own funds, and the informal committee to which I have referred gave me the greatest possible assistance in altering the Bill in such a way as to secure that it should be free from the criticism or suggestion that the Central Indian Red Cross Society desire in any way to interfere with the discretion of provincial branches when this scheme comes into existence. I suggest, Sir, that this Bill should appeal to this Council as one bringing into being an organisation in all respects consonant with India's aspirations for self-realisation, that it will bring into existence a body, essentially Indian, controlled in India, and operating as an equal member with similar bodies representing the Dominions and Great Britain, and that as such it should appeal to the amour propre of India, and receive the cordial support of representatives of India.

"I shall not have another opportunity, Sir, and I hope therefore the Council will bear with me if I take this opportunity of expressing my personal thanks to all those members of the Joint War Committee, and the many helpers outside the Central body of the Joint War Committee, for the assistance they have rendered in the very difficult task of administering the work of the Joint War Committee during the past two and a half years Again, it is impossible to mention individuals by name; they are too numerous; but I cannot let this occasion pass without making the Council acquainted with how much India owes to the efforts of Colonel Ross and Major Coldstream who, for various periods have officiated as Secretaries of the Joint War Committee, and who during the great war and again during the Afghan War were instrumental in rendering help of the very greatest value, as has been testified to by General Officers Commanding, to Indian troops in the field.

"I have very nearly done, Sir, but there is one question that may be asked and to which I would suggest an answer. It may be asked 'Well, why should this Society enter upon the campaign of ameliorating civil hospital conditions and of alleviating sickness and distress not due to war?' Conditions are very different in India in this respect from conditions in England. In England the magnificent hospitals which are available for the treatment of sufferers are preponderatingly private institutions subscribed by private philanthropy. In India, on the other hand, medical relief is very largely and preponderatingly supplied by Government, and hitherto there has perhaps been less interest taken non-officially in the administration of medical relief from the philanthropic side than has been the case in most countries. But it is hoped that by this Bill an organization will come into being which will remedy this defect and will automatically bring about an interest on the part of the non-official public in the amelioration of hospital conditions throughout the country. That these conditions need amelioration hardly requires argument. I take it that I am not alone in this Council in being familiar with the conditions obtaining in the average up-country civil hospital. Now I do not for a moment suggest a reflection either on Local Governments or on medical officers. It is not. Obviously, Government have their limitations, financial and otherwise, in regard to the amount which they can spend upon medical relief and upon the strength of their establishments. Nevertheless, the facts are that, leaving aside the large civil hospitals at the district headquarters, the average civil hospitals in smaller centres, taluka headquarters and so forth, can only be described in many cases as repellent institutions. They have been described to me as consisting of 'four walls and a charpoy,' and not a single comfort of any sort, kind or description is to be found within those four walls. Now the aim of the Indian Red Cross Society, when established, should be, and I hope, through provincial branches, will be, to bring into being Presidency, Provincial, Divisional, District and Tahsil Committees of the society, whose interest it will be not only to visit and organize comforts for the inmates in the hospitals, but to familiarise their fellow-subjects with the need for uplift in this respect and for facilitating the collection of money in aid of developments of this character for the provision of greater comforts to sufferers. We want to get over the state of affairs in which it is possible for people, as it is possible at present in some places upcountry, to prefer to die quietly in their homes rather than go to the hospitals, and that is essentially the reason why the Joint War Committee are so anxious that this Bill should speedily become law in order that action in that direction may be taken with the least possible delay. Sir, this Bill is the direct outcome of the War, and may we not say with Tennyson and share his trust that 'somehow good may be the final goal of ill.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"Sir, I desire to assure the Hon'ble Member that this Bill which he has introduced does appeal, and very strongly appeals, to the sympathies of this Council and that for 1-5 P.M.

several distinct reasons. In the first place, it is a humanitarian measure. The object of this Bill, I take it, is to place upon a sound and legal footing an organization which had done admirable work during the crisis of the war. It seeks to do something more It seeks to prolong the beneficent activities of that organization by placing it upon a legal basis. That, in itself, would appeal to all Indians. For, Sir, we are all partial to institutions of charity, beneficence and philanthropy. That has been the immemorial characteristic of our people from the dawn of human history, and that instinct is not yet dead. Therefore, I do say that upon the ground of humanity the Bill does appeal very strongly, and it also appeals to us for another reason which is of modern origin I understand, as the Hon'ble Member has told us, that this institution is to be a part and parcel of the League of Red Crescent Societies all over the world. Sir, we have been admitted and India is a member of the League of Nations, and we desire also to have a place in this League of Red Crescent Societies, and this League will spread the blessings of humanity, charity and beneficence throughout the world g . .f

The Vice-President:—"The Hon'ble Mover said Red Cross Society."

The Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea:—"And this is to be a branch, a part of the Red Cross League.

"Then, Sir, lastly, my Hon'ble friend has assured us that the provincial organizations will all be autonomous in their character. That again is in conformity with one of those instincts which have been developed in us within the last few years. For these reasons, I am perfectly certain that this Bill will meet with the unstinted sympathy and support of this Council and I desire to commend it to the acceptance of my countrymen at large, subject to the consideration of the details of the Bill. And, Sir, the objects of the society will not be confined to operations which are organized during war time, but the society will continue its activities during times of peace for the improvement of health, for the relief of suffering and the mitigation of sickness. Therefore, on all these grounds, I desire to commend this Bill to our people.

" Sir, before I sit down I think it is my duty as a member of this Council and as representing my Indian friends that we should express the gratitude and the admiration that we feel for Sir Claude Hill whose retirement is now approaching. His great ability, his deep sympathy with Indian aspirations, of which a notable illustration is afforded in the evidence that he gave before the Joint Committee, his grasp of details, his rare capacity for solving difficulties had made him, I venture to say, not only one of the most useful members of the Executive Council of the Government but also of this Council. I am sure his retirement will not only be regretted in this Legislative Council, but also by his numerous friends and admirers, and in the course of time when the secrets of the Executive Council come to be known, by an admiring, and grateful posterity, and I feel it my duty to give expression to these sentiments not only on behalf of myself, but also on behalf of my Indian friends ."

1-10 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Wacha:—" Sir, I cordially welcome the Bill which Sir Claude Hill has introduced this morning with so much lucidity and fulness of detail and which, I think, will commend itself to all members of this Council.

" This Bill is really one of the beneficent outcomes of the war, and I suppose we must congratulate not only the original Red Cross Society in London, but also its Branch here for the good work they contemplate to accomplish. So far as the proposed legislation is concerned, we hope that the future administration of the Red Cross Society in India will prove a great success.

"Afterall the elaborate arguments and reasons which have been put before us I have nothing particular to say; but I also wish to heartily associate myself with my friend Mr. Banerjea on the views he has expressed about the admirable manner in which Sir Claude Hill has introduced this Bill. I am quite sure that even in times of peace, the Red Cross Society now instituted, or which is going to be instituted, will be a most beneficial instrument for good for the relief of suffering humanity in respect of which India, I regret to have to say, is at the present time very backward.

"Influenza and plague epidemics and other fatal diseases have distressed us for a very long time, and I fully believe that this Society will prove a beneficent harbinger of India's good health in the future.

"My friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea, has paid a deserving compliment to my Bombay friend, Sir Claude Hill, and I, as a Bombay-man, cordially join in the appreciation that has been expressed by him before this Council in reference to the arduous, useful and most honourable work which Sir Claude Hill has performed from time to time not only in Bombay, but in this Council for the last five years with credit to himself and to the Government to which he belongs.

"With these few words, Sir, I heartily commend this Bill to all the Members of this Council, and I hope that it will be passed without delay so that we may begin to reap those benefits which it intends to confer on the country."

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief:—"Sir, although this Bill has been introduced by my Hon'ble colleague, Sir Claude Hill, it is really a private Bill, and as the Member in Charge of that Department with which it is chiefly concerned, it falls to me to support the views of the Government in regard thereto. 1-13 P.M.

"As the Bill will be published in the Gazette of India with a view to eliciting public opinion, I am prepared to support its introduction on the understanding that in their eventual attitude towards the Bill, the Government must be guided by the opinions of those interested in the measure.

"I am also authorised to say that it is really a private Bill and the official Members of this Council will be free to speak and vote in regard to it as they please, and if, Sir, at this moment I may introduce a few personal words I desire to say how whole-heartedly I support this measure, as brought forward by my Hon'ble friend Sir Claude Hill. I wish it all success and I believe that in time to come we shall all wonder how it was that India was for so long unprovided with any organization of the kind and, consequently, lacking in the opportunity, which the proposed Indian Red Cross Society will give us, of showing sympathy for those less fortunate than ourselves, and of rendering personal and practical service in the alleviation of sickness and suffering by the systematic improvement of our hospitals."

The Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur:—"Sir, with your permission I beg to welcome this measure on behalf of the Muhammadan Members of this Council and of the community. I may also be allowed to join with my friends, Mr. Banerjea and Sir Dinshaw Wacha, in the expression of appreciation which they have accorded to the Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill in connection with this Bill. I do so, also on behalf of Madras." 1-15 P.M.

The Hon'ble Raja Sir Rampal Singh:—"Sir, in the absence of my brother colleagues, the representatives of the United Provinces the pleasant duty of according my cordial and most enthusiastic support to the Bill which has been introduced by my Hon'ble friend Sir Claude Hill falls upon me. 1-16 P.M.

"Sir, there can be no two opinions about the desirability of constituting a Red Cross Society; and putting it on a legal basis. It would not be out of place to say that we are under a deep debt of gratitude to the Joint War Committee whose activities in affording relief to the people in need have been most praiseworthy. It is a matter of great gratification that India responded to the appeal of this War Committee in a generous way, and it is a matter of great pride to me, Sir, that the United Provinces headed the list when the 'Our Day' Fund was opened. I have every hope that my Province will try its best to maintain its position in this philanthropic work. With these few words I most cordially support the Bill and the motion that has been put before the Council."

1-17 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis:—"Sir, I beg to support the principles of the Bill for which leave to introduce has been asked by Sir Claude Hill I am sure it will be the means of continuing in times of peace the good work done during the war by the Red Cross Society. I would also like to associate myself, on behalf of the Central Provinces, with the sentiments expressed by the Hon'ble Mr. Banerjea in his euology of the work performed by Sir Claude Hill in this Council and outside and our regret at his approaching departure."

1-18 P.M. The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Reddi:—"Sir, I wish to join in the support that has been given to this Bill, on behalf of the non-Brahmin community of Madras. By this Bill, Sir, the non-Brahmins of Madras are twice blessed, because they are members of the Army that is supplied from that part of the country, and also because among them are included the lower classes who mostly suffer from epidemics and diseases to which this country is subject. To them therefore it is a double blessing.

"I should also like to associate myself with the just meed of praise that has been offered to Sir Claude Hill We know the support that has been given to us non-Brahmins of Madras in the famous despatch to the Secretary of State in which the Government of India supported our demand for separate representation. We know that if it had not been for Sir Claude Hill and other members of the Government of India, we should never have had that concession given to us, so easily.

"In any case, as a Member of the Government of India, I hank Sir Claude Hill on behalf of the non-Brahmins of Madras, and I cordially join in the praise that has been given to him."

The motion was put and agreed to.

1-19 P.M. The Hon'ble Sir Claude Hill:—"Sir, I feel, in view of the kind words that have fallen from the lips of various members, that I need say but little on the Bill itself; and even from my friend, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the tepidity of the water which has been thrown officially on the Bill is more than made good by the warmth of his personal support. But I was totally unprepared to find that the present occasion would be made one for so much kind reference to myself and I feel, Sir, that I may perhaps be allowed to say how grateful I am to the very kind friends who have referred to me personally in connection with this Bill.

"I beg to move the motion which stands in my name that the Bill, together with the Statement of Objects and Reasons relating thereto, be published in the Gazette of India in English."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to Monday, the 8th March at 11 o'clock.

A. P. MUDDIMAN,
Secretary to the Government of India,

1. All communications relating to applications for patents and for registration of designs under the Indian Patents and Designs Act (II of 1911), or in continuation of applications under the Inventions and Designs Act (V of 1888) must be made in English and addressed to the Controller of Patents and Designs, 1, Council House Street, Calcutta. Documents sent by post should be carefully packed and a full address given in all communications.

2. Directions for the guidance of inventors and others are given in the Patent Office Handbook (price one rupee) which contains the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, the Indian Patents and Designs Rules, 1912, the Indian Patents and Designs (Temporary Rules) Act, 1915, the Indian Patents and Designs (Temporary) Rules, 1916, together with current regulations and instructions. These should be consulted before an application is made to the Controller.

3. Advice. The Patent Office cannot undertake (1) to give opinions on the interpretation of Patent Law, or on the advisability of protecting inventions and designs or on their infringement; (2) to make searches in respect of information available in the public room; (3) to recommend any particular agent; or (4) to assist in the disposal of inventions. Models are not required unless specially asked for. Drawings must be on tracing cloth and the Rules and Instructions for the preparation of drawings as given in the Handbook should be strictly followed. A provisional patent cannot be secured under the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911.

4. Applicants are warned that the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, is in force in British India only, and patents granted under it do not extend to the United Kingdom or any of the British possessions. The International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property does not include India. For information regarding patents in countries other than India application should be made to the patent offices in the countries concerned.

5. Fees are payable in cash and must be received in the Patent Office within the time allowed by the Acts. When cheques are offered in payment of fees, it must be clearly understood that the office cannot hold itself responsible for any delay that may occur in the collection of cash on the cheques; any cheque not payable in Calcutta is subject to commission for which due allowance should be made. In cases where it is not possible to have the fees handed in at the Patent Office, it is preferable to send them by money-order or postal order payable at Calcutta to the Controller of Patents and Designs, and to advise him that they have been so sent. Stamps will not be received in payment of fees.

6. Trade and property marks and names are not registered and medicines are not patented under the Indian Patents and Designs Act. There is no provision of Law in British India for their registration. Neither does this Act deal with pictures, photographs, etc., for which copyright is obtainable under the Indian Copyright Act, 1914.

7. Printed Specifications of applications, which have been accepted, are published within about three weeks after acceptance has been notified in the Gazette of India. COTTON PRESS RETURN.

No. 10 OF 1919-20.

PREFATORY NOTE.

THE COTTON SEASON, 1919-20.

The final estimate of the cotton crop of 1919-20 is 5,845,000 bales on an area of 23,063,000 acres, as compared with 3,978,000 bales on an area of 21,038,000 acres, the final estimates of last year. There is an increase of 47 per cent in the outturn. The estimate for British provinces (including Indian States situated within provincial boundaries) is 4,565,000 bales, an increase of 54 per cent over last year's figures. There were 1,299,000 bales of cotton pressed in the pressing factories, and 203,000 bales of unpressed cotton received in the spinning mills in British provinces, from 1st September, 1919, to 31st January, 1920, as against 848,000 bales and 205,000 bales, respectively, during the corresponding period of last year, showing an increase of 53 per cent in the case of presses, and a decrease of 1 per cent in the case of mills. Too much stress, however, should not be laid on the accuracy of these returns as a means of checking the forecast estimates of outturn, as there is at present no system in vogue of furnishing complete returns from all presses and mills in India.

FIELD OPERATIONS.

No. 486.—The following despatch by His Excellency General Sir Charles Carmichael Monro, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., A.-D.-C., Commander-in-Chief in India, on operations during the Third Afghan War, May to August 1919, is published for general information :—

Dated Simla, the 1st November 1919.

From—GENERAL SIR CHARLES CARMICHAEL MONRO, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.M G., A.-D.-C., Commander-in-Chief in India,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, ARMY DEPARTMENT.

I have the honour to submit herewith, for the information of the Government of India, an account of the recent operations against Afghanistan.

INTRODUCTORY.

2. For the proper consideration of these operations, it is necessary to refer briefly to the conditions prevailing in India at the time hostilities broke out. As the Government of India are aware, the standard of military preparation in this country was regulated by the instructions of the War Committee of the Cabinet received through the Secretary of State for India in 1916, viz., that operations on the Indian frontier were to be of a defensive nature, and that, should the offensive be forced upon us, it was to be strictly limited in scope. The Field Army maintained for this purpose, namely, four divisions, three frontier brigades and four cavalry brigades, had necessarily suffered from the demands made upon it to supply additional units and draft reinforcements for overseas theatres, and this had to a certain extent affected its efficiency; moreover, many of its best qualified officers were employed out of India, and there was considerable deficiency in medical and engineer personnel which could not be made good from home. Since the commencement of the war in 1914, India had been engaged in providing personnel, material and munitions of war to many overseas theatres. As a result of this drain upon her resources, stocks of electrical and railway plant and other stores, only procurable from the United Kingdom, had been reduced to the lowest ebb, and, owing to shortage of shipping, deficiencies could not be replaced. Thus the signing of the Armistice in November 1918 found India grappling with the problem of meeting urgent demands on her greatly reduced resources, and with the machinery for carrying on her internal administration weakened by the withdrawal from all her civil departments of large numbers of officers for military duty.

3. Following on the Armistice came the demand for demobilisation. Every effort was made to release such men as were urgently required either at home or in India, and this necessitated a considerable reduction in establishments and imposed a severe strain on all branches of the service, especially in those employing skilled artisans and mechanics.

4. Such was the military situation when the outbreak of internal disturbances supervened in April 1919. To quell these disturbances and to protect communications, it was found necessary to divert large bodies of troops from their normal peace stations, to detain others which were awaiting demobilisation or embarkation to the United Kingdom, and to recall a large number of Indian troops who had proceeded to their homes on leave. We were particularly fortunate in having at hand so valuable a reinforcement as the British troops ex-Mesopotamia awaiting demobilisation. It was only with great reluctance that I sanctioned their retention at a time when they had every reason and right to expect their early release from military service; but my confidence in the loyalty of the British soldier was not misplaced, and I take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of the fine military spirit he displayed in shouldering this additional burden. It was a keen and natural disappointment also to the Indian soldier to be deprived of the furlough which he had earned so well, but he too accepted this burden in a spirit of cheerful resignation for which we owe him a deep debt of gratitude; his conduct, throughout this period, has been worthy of the highest praise.

5. Before passing on to a narrative of the operations, I propose briefly to review the work of the various administrative services and departments, for the campaign was essentially one in which administrative organisation played the leading part. At one time the strength of the force employed trans-Indus amounted to 340,000 men and 158,000 animals, and it will readily be understood that the maintenance of these numbers, with depleted means of transportation, was a problem of considerable difficulty. Fortunately, much attention had been paid in recent years to the improvement of frontier communications; new mechanical transport roads at a cost of approximately one million sterling had been constructed in the North-West Frontier Province alone during the past four years. Considerable improvements had also been effected in existing roads, the most important being those between Jamrud and Landi-Kotal, Kohat and Parachinar, Bannu and Miranshah, Dera Ismail Khan and Tank, and the Bolan road from Sibi to Quetta, on each of which a large number of girder bridges had been provided, spanning the main waterways. With the exception of the Bolan these roads have all been subjected to heavy and continuous motor traffic throughout the operations, and have stood the test well.

6. As regards railways, the situation was somewhat abnormal when concentration was ordered. Civil traffic had been considerably curtailed and serious damage caused at certain outlying stations during the internal disturbances in the Punjab. Nevertheless, thanks to the efforts of the North-Western and other railways, military requirements were fully met, and though the protection of Peshawar necessitated some divergence from the schedule, concentration was completed in advance of the pre-arranged time-table. During the month of May, 637 military special trains were run over the North-Western Railway system. Early in the concentration period a number of specially fitted ambulance trains were located at convenient forward stations such as Peshawar and Rawalpindi, and special services were arranged for the conveyance of ice, fruit, and vegetables in insulated railway vans, both to hospitals and the troops in the field.

7. Major-General H. F. E. Freeland, C.B., D.S.O., M.V.O., R.E., who was at this time a member of the Railway Board, earned the gratitude of the army by his zealous and unremitting efforts in developing the capacity of the railways in respect of military requirements. His wide and varied experience in dealing with military traffic problems proved of inestimable value. I had also the advantage of obtaining the valuable services of Brigadier-General C. L. Magniac, C.M.G., C.B.E., R.E., who had recently returned from France and was appointed Director of Movements.

8. The position of the Supply and Transport Services had been influenced considerably by the calls made upon them from overseas during the course of the great war. The resources of India in animal transport had been exploited to the utmost and the reserve of animals left in the country was reduced to the lowest ebb; indeed, the supply of mules had been completely exhausted and recourse was had to ponies. These latter, though they proved themselves a fairly satisfactory substitute, were greatly inferior to the mule in general utility and endurance. The ravages of surra, combined with continued and heavy demands made by the operations in Persia, had seriously crippled the supply of camels; and the liability of the bullock transport to epidemic diseases limited the degree of reliability which could be placed upon it. In spite of these difficulties, the animal transport available on the outbreak of war was sufficient to equip and maintain the Field Army under the conditions referred to in paragraph 2 above.

9. The mechanical transport at my disposal was employed at the outset on convoy work through the Khaibar; but later, when reinforced by locally purchased vehicles and a number of Ford chassis received from America in March and equipped locally with van bodies, it was used to supplement the animal transport with units and field formations and for the transportation of such perishable commodities as ice, milk, fresh fruit and vegetables. The British ranks of the Heavy Mechanical Transport companies were considerably below establishment and the proper complement of drivers could not be provided for the vehicles available. In spite of the strain on their endurance, these men carried out their duties with a fortitude and efficiency which deserves unstinted praise, and proved themselves equal to the task of moving all the tonnage required for the maintenance of the forces in the field. It may here be mentioned that upwards of 500 tons of supplies and stores were transported daily from Peshawar and Jamrud through the Khaibar, a figure which was only reduced during the period of the Afghan threat on the Kurram, when a portion of the mechanical transport was diverted to that area from the Khaibar.

10. The reserves of supplies in position on the outbreak of war proved ample for the needs of the army; the standard laid down was sixty days' stocks, of which half had been placed in forward positions west of the Indus, and half in the base depôt at Lahore and at the ports of Bombay and Karachi. Within three days of mobilisation being ordered, the reserves at the ports had been despatched, according to a pre-arranged schedule, to Lahore and the forward areas. New field service scales of rations were introduced in this campaign and have proved highly satisfactory from a dietetic point of view; the items additional to the old scale include condensed milk, tinned or dried fruit, fresh fruit, cigarettes and sweets for British troops; and fresh meat, condensed milk, tobacco, cigarettes, sweets, and ground nuts for Indian soldiers.

11. In previous frontier campaigns, units had been left to make their own arrangements for canteen supplies; but the system of relying on bunniahs and the peace canteen contractors of British units was unsatisfactory. The War Office were unable, however, to accede to my request that the Expeditionary Force Canteen organisation should take the matter in hand, and a general contract was therefore made with a Calcutta firm of large experience and reputation, to whom special railway and transport facilities were given. This arrangement proved satisfactory on the whole and was certainly an improvement on the former arrangement; but I hope that in future a system may be devised which will enable us to ensure the provision on mobilisation of Field Force Canteens fully equipped with personnel and supplies.

12. In order to provide rest and refreshment for troops moving by rail and to mitigate the hardships inseparable from a journey across India during the summer months, rest camps were established at Peshawar, Nowshera, Rawalpindi, Lahore, Ambala, Quetta and Chaman, and the number of "Monro Soldiers' Canteens" (which had been established at all the principal railway stations) was increased to meet the additional demands made upon them. Tea rooms were also opened for the special use of Indian troops, not only at the chief railway stations, but also at all standing camps within the forward areas. Messes for British officers and for warrant and non-commissioned officers travelling in small parties or independently of their units, were organised and equipped at seventeen of the main halting places, in advance of railheads, on the various lines of communication.

13. The requirements of the Veterinary Service necessitated the formation of three Camel Veterinary Hospitals for 500 camels each, a Camel Convalescent Depôt and Horse Convalescent Depôt for 1,000 animals each, as well as additional Field and Mobile Veterinary Sections and Base Depôts of Veterinary Stores. The creation of these units imposed a severe tax on available sources of recruitment, and some difficulty was experienced in obtaining personnel of the right stamp. But, on the whole, the existing organisation stood the test well. The mortality among animals was never excessive, amounting to a weekly average of ·2 per cent. in the case of horses and ponies, ·04 in the case of mules, ·3 in the case of bullocks and ·3 in the case of camels, as compared with ·2, ·06, 1·6, and ·1 per cent respectively during the period May to September, 1918, in Mesopotamia. The evacuation of sick animals was on the whole well carried out, but there was a tendency to maintain too many ineffective animals with units; this fault was corrected in course of time. Considerable inefficiency was caused by the incidence of foot and mouth disease and rinderpest in bullocks. The organisation of the Remount Service stood the test well and calls for no comment.

14. I was fortunate in obtaining two Ordnance Mobile Workshops, complete with personnel, from Mesopotamia. These were pushed up to Peshawar to supplement the heavy workshops established in the Ordnance depôt there immediately on the outbreak of war. A number of R. A. O. C personnel were obtained from among the troops awaiting demobilisation, and these rendered invaluable service in the Ordnance depôts in the forward areas. In other respects the existing Ordnance organisation proved sufficient for the needs of the army. An ample reserve had been provided of special stores such as heavy tents, hand fans, mosquito nets, sun goggles, etc., which experience has shown to be necessary for the health and comfort of the troops during a summer campaign.

15. As regards the Medical Service, the number of regular R. A. M. C. and I.M.S. officers available in India was short of our requirements for complete mobilisation. The source of recruitment of these categories in India is small and it had been found impossible to make good the deficiency from home. I was fortunate, however, in obtaining the services of 107 officers and 1,280 other ranks of the R. A. M. C. who happened to be in India en route from Mesopotamia to the United Kingdom. The field medical units of the Field Army were already partially mobilised with personnel when the outbreak of war occurred and the equipment of other field medical units and of 21 General Hospitals was held ready for issue in medical mobilisation stores. The number of mobilised medical units employed during the campaign amounted to 29 Field Ambulances, 12 Casualty Clearing Stations, 53 Staging Sections, 15 Sanitary Sections, 8 Advanced Depôts of Medical Stores, 1¼ Base Depôt Medical Stores and 16,000 beds in General Hospitals, i.e., 5,000 for British and 11,000 for Indians. The General Hospitals were established at Landi Kotal, Peshawar, Nowshera, Rawalpindi, Gharial, Kuldana, Kohat, Bannu, Dardoni, (near Miranshah), Dera Ismail Khan, Tank, Manzai, and Quetta. In addition to these, convalescent camps provided accommodation in the Murree Hills for 1,200 British at Upper Topa and Lower Gharial, and for 3,000 Indians at Kohat and Rawalpindi. Medical transport included two British and eight Indian broad gauge ambulance trains, one combined British and Indian narrow gauge ambulance train and over a hundred specially fitted railway ambulance coaches for use with the ordinary passenger services.

16. The two outstanding features of the campaign from the medical point of view were, firstly, an outbreak of cholera of unusual severity, and, secondly, the abnormal climatic conditions under which the troops were called upon to operate. An epidemic of cholera seldom equalled in extent and severity during the past ten years was raging among the civil population of the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province during the period of the operations. It first made its appearance among the troops in the forward areas at Hangu on June 1st, and at Jamrud on June 4th, but though it spread rapidly in both the Kohat and Khaibar areas and for a time gave rise to grave anxiety, it was successfully stamped out by June 20th, an achievement for which the Medical Service deserves the greatest credit. A severe epidemic also occurred in Derajat and the Tochi Valley and cases continued intermittently from the middle of June till the close of the operations.

17. Shortly after the outbreak of hostilities, a heat wave of remarkable severity occurred over the whole of the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province, the daily shade temperatures registered at Peshawar in May, June and July being 5 to 7 degrees Fahrenheit above the daily average of the past 20 years. The Government of India will appreciate how great a strain was imposed on the troops when called upon to operate under these conditions in such areas as the Khaibar, the Kurram, the Derajat and Waziristan.

18. In spite of these conditions, the incidence of sickness was not excessive. The total admissions during the period 5th May to 9th August amounted to 10,882 British and 45,774 Indians, giving a daily admission ratio per thousand of 4·98 British and 2·97 Indians. This compares not unfavourably with admission ratios in Mesopotamia which, in 1917, were 5·04 and 2·11 and, in 1918, 3·48 and 2·27 respectively.

19. The foregoing brief review of the administrative problems presented by this campaign will, I hope, serve to illustrate some of the chief difficulties with which we had to contend. India, and especially the frontier region, is a country ill-provided with those amenities of civilization which, in Western Europe, go so far to mitigate the discomforts of a campaign; and, coming as it did at the hottest season of the year and at a time when the army was sorely in need of rest and recreation, this campaign inevitably imposed severe hardships on the troops employed. Nevertheless, from personal inspection, I am able to assure the Government of India that everything possible was done with the means at our disposal to alleviate the discomfort of the troops, and I desire to place on record my high appreciation of the work of the administrative services and departments which contributed so largely to that end.

20. I now turn to the conduct of the operations. The distribution of the Afghan army at the end of April is believed to have been as follows. On the northern line, including Kabul, were stationed 7½ regiments of cavalry (2,800 sabres), 29 battalions (16,500 rifles), and 110 guns, of which about 2,000 rifles and 4 guns were located between Kunar and Asmar on the Chitral border. On the central line, including Ghazni, were 3 cavalry regiments (1,100 sabres), 17 battalions (9,150 rifles) and 60 guns; and, on the southern line, 1 cavalry regiment (460 sabres), 10 battalions (5,250 rifles) and 24 guns. The Afghan garrisons in Herat, Farah, and Mazar-i-Sharif, and in the Maimana and Badakshan districts, are not included in the above, and amounted to about 2,700 sabres, 11,100 rifles and 70 guns. The force at the Amir's disposal thus comprised about 7,000 sabres, 42,000 rifles and 260 guns; but it should be noted that at least half of his guns were either immobile or obsolete.

21. But the Amir's real strength lay, not in his regular army (which, of itself, is of small account), but in the potential fighting value of the frontier tribes on either side of the border. Expert in all forms of guerilla warfare and amounting in the aggregate to some 120,000 men, armed with modern rifles many of which are provided from Kabul, these tribes are the outstanding factor in the Indian frontier problem, and it was on their co-operation that the Afghan plan of campaign was based. As far as can be judged, this plan contemplated operations on three fronts, viz.:—

(a) From Jalalabad on the Khaibar and Mohmand sector;

(b) From Gardez on the Kurram and Waziristan border, utilizing the Khost salient;

(c) From Kandahar on the Chaman border.

A secondary operation from Asmar on Chitral, supported by a demonstration made by the Badakshan garrison, was to be supplementary to (a) above, while, subsidiary to the action on the Kandahar front, troops were to be moved up from Girishk and Farad to threaten the Seistan border and our communications in East Persia. Each of the above fronts formed a separate command, and the general idea appears to have been to push forward in the first instance detachments of Afghan regular troops, whose function was to raise the tribes on both sides of the border with the cry of Jehad. Arms and ammunition were to be distributed amongst the tribesmen, and the detachments of Afghan regulars would serve as a stiffening to the tribal lashkars and as an earnest of the Amir's support. On the Khaibar sector, which was evidently looked upon as the main battle front, the intention appears to have been to hold back the bulk of the regular troops until the tribal offensive had developed. This tribal offensive was, in fact, the basis of the whole plan; and the line of action to be taken by the main Afghan army depended entirely on the extent to which the tribes consented to co-operate and on the subsequent success of their operations. It was probably realised that both as regards command and maintenance, the Afghan regular army was, of itself, incapable of undertaking sustained operations and that their best and only chance of success lay in securing the co-operation of the tribes and in co-ordinating their efforts. The looseness of our political control over a large portion of the border territory makes it a promising field for such an enterprise. The Amir appears to have anticipated that the presence of bodies of tribesmen on the flanks and rear of our main forces would compel us to dissipate our strength and create a favourable opportunity for striking a blow with his regular troops

22. Our plan of campaign was to undertake the offensive towards Jalalabad with our main striking force, our object being to divide the Mohmands and Afridis (two of the most influential tribes upon our border) and to cut them off from Afghan influence and support; to strike at any Afghan concentration within reach; and to induce the withdrawal of Afghan forces from our tribal borders elsewhere, for the purpose of covering Kabul. It was proposed to maintain an active defence on other portions of our front. In the Tochi and Derajat areas we were prepared, if necessary, to evacuate temporarily those portions of the country which lay between the administrative and political borders and which were held by militia garrisons; for their retention in the face of opposition would have involved us in a series of sieges, necessitating measures for their relief and consequent dissipation of transport.

23. To carry out this plan, the army was originally organised in two forces, viz., the North-West Frontier Force, commanded by General Sir A. A. Barrett, G.C.B., K.C.S.I., K.C.V.O., A.-D.-C., and the Baluchistan Force, commanded by Lieutenant-General R. Wapshare, C.B., C.S.I., the latter including the troops allotted to the defence of the Nushki extension railway and our line of communication through East Persia to Meshed. As the operations developed, however, it was decided to effect a further decentralisation, and on May 30th the troops allotted to the Bannu and Derajat areas were separated from the North-West Frontier Force, and placed under the command of Major-General S. H. Climo, C.B., D.S.O. This new command was designated the Waziristan Force. The force at Meshed under Major-General W. Malleson, C.B., C.I.E., must also be considered as part of the general organisation, for though charged with no offensive rôle in relation to the operations on the Indian frontier, the duty fell upon it of intervening, if necessary, in any attempt by the Turkistan Bolsheviks to send armed assistance into Afghanistan.

24. As constant references would be made to the Government of India and to Army Headquarters regarding the conduct and direction of the operations, and as in any case officers of sufficient status were not available to form a separate General Headquarters, it had been decided in advance that the functions of the latter were to be performed by Army Headquarters.

25. I need refer but briefly to the sequence of events which precipitated the outbreak of war. Towards the end of April, Saleh Muhammad Khan, the Afghan Commander-in-Chief, arrived at Dakka with an escort of two companies of infantry and two guns for the ostensible purpose of inspecting the Afghan frontier. On May 3rd, the usual militia escort to the caravan proceeding through the Khaibar was confronted by piquets of armed Afghans on the disputed zone between Tor Khan and Landi Khana, and that night five coolies employed at the water-works were killed by tribesmen. On May 4th large numbers of copies of a farman, signed by the Amir and concluding with an unmistakable exhortation to Jehad, were distributed in Peshawar city through the agency of the Afghan Post-office there; and on the same day the Afghan postmaster arrived from Jalalabad with a motor car load of leaflets printed at Kabul, announcing that the Germans had resumed war and that India and Egypt had risen. On May 5th, the Field Army received orders for mobilisation.

26. The operations which followed fall naturally under three heads, viz., those of the North-West Frontier Force, the Waziristan force, and the Baluchistan Force, respectively, and I propose to deal with them in three separate narratives. The chief features of the operations, viewed as a whole, can be summarised as follows. Our main effort was directed to the Khaibar front, with Dakka as the first objective. After defeating the Afghan covering troops in the vicinity of Landi Khana, our troops occupied Dakka on May 13th, i.e., within eight days of mobilisation being ordered; and, following a successful action on May 17th the Afghan main army dispersed and, for the time being, practically ceased to exist as an organised force. A pause was now necessary for the purpose of accumulating supplies preparatory to a further advance. All arrangements for the advance had been completed and the troops were ready to move when the Amir's request for negotiations rendered any further forward movement politically inexpedient. On the Waziristan front, we were prepared, as explained above, to evacuate certain positions with the object of reducing detachments, avoiding embarrassing commitments, and concentrating as large a force as possible at the decisive point. The evacuation became necessary and was carried out under arrangements concerted between General Sir A. A. Barrett and the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province. Suitable dispositions were made to meet the situation thus created. On the Baluchistan front, the only operation of importance was the attack and capture of Fort Spin Baldak. The close proximity of this fort to the Baluchistan border was a threat to our position at Chaman and it served as a screen behind which the enemy could concentrate preparatory to an attack on Chaman itself, or against the flank of our position at Bogra. It was accordingly carried by assault on May 27th.

27. During the course of the war our troops were engaged on a front extending along the whole length of the Afghan frontier from Chitral on the north-east to Seistan on the south-west, a total distance of about 1,000 miles; indeed, the fighting front may be said to have extended still further, for our line of communication defence troops on the 300 miles of road between Robat and Rui Khaf were kept constantly on their guard against raids from across the border, and were at one time directly threatened by a small Afghan force which was detached from Herat towards the Persian frontier. Never before have simultaneous operations been undertaken on the frontier of India which have covered so wide an extent of front.

28. There are other important points of difference between this and previous campaigns on the Indian frontier. In the first and second Afghan wars and in the Tirah campaign, the initiative lay with the Government of India; India was enjoying internal tranquillity, and the Government was able to mature its plans and move in its own time during the cool season of the year

On the present occasion, Afghanistan was the aggressor, certain districts of internal India were still under martial law, the time chosen was the hottest season of the year, and the invasion contemplated a rising in Peshawar. In 1878 and 1897, eight weeks elapsed between the issue of orders to concentrate and the advance of our forces up the Khaibar and into Tirah respectively; in 1919, two weeks only elapsed between the receipt of information of the impending Afghan attack and the disposal of the main Afghan army on the Jalalabad plain and within four weeks Amir Amanullah had sued for an armistice. The promptitude of this advance through the Khaibar and the consequent menace to Jalalabad, prevented an Afghan-tribal combination against us, and saved India the long and costly war which would have resulted from the loss of the Khaibar.

29. Two other features of the campaign may be mentioned as exercising an appreciable influence on the course of the operations. The first is the failure of the system of tribal militias. With certain notable exceptions (which are referred to in their place) the outbreak of war was followed almost immediately by wholesale desertions from militia units, necessitating the complete disbandment of one and the reduction of others to a small fraction of their proper establishment. The defection of these units at a time when the Field Army was concentrating in rear of them constituted a grave danger and this danger is one which, in my opinion, we cannot afford to accept in the future.

The other feature to which I refer is the great disadvantage from which the troops suffered as the result of the political situation. From the granting of the armistice at the beginning of June to the signing of peace on August the 8th, the Amir failed to exercise complete control over his own tribesmen and the agents whom he had deputed to raise the tribes within the British border. Consequently, throughout this period, the whole length of the frontier was threatened and constant raiding occurred.

30. The formations at my disposal at the outbreak of war (excluding units allotted to area defence) comprised two divisions and two cavalry brigades on the Khaibar line, one brigade in the Kohat-Kurram area, two brigades in Waziristan, and one division and one cavalry brigade on the Baluchistan front, with one division, one cavalry brigade and two mixed brigades in central reserve. During the course of the operations, seven additional brigades and one cavalry brigade were formed, increasing the total force employed at the signing of peace to the equivalent of about seven divisions and four cavalry brigades, with one cavalry and five infantry brigades in reserve.

OPERATIONS OF THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER FORCE.

31. News of the proclamation of Jehad by the Amir of Afghanistan, together with the move of Afghan troops towards the Khaibar and Kurram, reached Peshawar on the 3rd May. I immediately ordered General Sir A. A. Barrett, who was at that time on inspection duty in Delhi, to proceed at once to Peshawar to control the military measures necessary in the North-West Frontier Province. He was directed to assume command of the North-West Frontier Force, the troops at his disposal comprising the 1st and 10th Cavalry Brigades, the 1st and 2nd Divisions, the Internal Security Troops of the Peshawar area and the Kohat, Bannu and Derajat Brigades, together with Corps Troops and Frontier Militia. In view of the paramount importance of safeguarding the Peshawar district, which was already threatened by Afghan forces and which is surrounded by powerful independent tribes, General Sir A. A. Barrett directed the 2nd Division into the Peshawar area in support of the 1st Division.

32. Prior to his arrival in Peshawar, the situation on the Khaibar line had developed rapidly. On the morning of the 4th May, Afghan troops supported by large bodies of tribesmen, were reported to have taken possession of the Bagh and Tangi springs, near Landi Khana, and to be on the Spinatsuka and Tor Sappar ridges to the north of Landi Kotal. On the following day a small column, which had been ordered to hold itself in readiness at Peshawar, was despatched by the General Officer Commanding, 1st Division, in motor lorries to Landi Kotal to support the Khaibar Rifles. It was essential that the Afghans should be driven from the springs as quickly as possible, as on one of them depended the principal water supply of Landi Kotal, and until the springs were in our possession no large force could be concentrated at that place. Troops were therefore pushed up the Khaibar as rapidly as possible, and on the 8th the 1st Infantry Brigade with one battalion of the 2nd Infantry Brigade and 14 field and mountain guns, under the command of Brigadier-General G. D. Crocker, were concentrated at Landi Kotal, other troops of the 1st Division moving up the Khaibar in support. Troops of the 2nd Division were meanwhile arriving continuously in the Peshawar area.

33. On the morning of the 9th, General Crocker, reinforced by another battalion of the 2nd Infantry Brigade, attacked the enemy and secured the Tangi springs and water works; but he encountered stubborn opposition, and the force at his disposal was insufficient to drive the Afghans from their strong position, in difficult mountainous country, covering the Bagh springs. Next day the remainder of the 2nd Infantry Brigade, together with a mountain battery and a machine gun company, reinforced the troops at Landi Kotal, where Major-General C. A. Fowler, C.B., D.S.O., commanding the 1st Division, had assumed command.

34. On the 11th May, the headquarters and one and a half battalions of the 3rd Infantry Brigade reached Landi Kotal, and an entirely successful attack was made on the Afghans on the Khargali heights dominating the Bagh springs. Infantry, guns, machine guns, and aeroplanes worked in close co-operation, and the enemy, who again resisted stubbornly, fled in disorder, leaving behind him six guns which fell into our hands. Our casualties were happily slight. The Royal Air Force not only co-operated in the action, but also systematically bombed Dakka, where the Afghan transport had been collected. The material and moral effect of this bombing was very great. Major-General Fowler brings to notice the excellent work of the 2nd Battalion, North Staffordshire Regiment, the 1st Gurkha Rifles, and No. 8 Mountain Battery, R. G. A., on this occasion. On the following day a reconnaissance disclosed the Afghans still holding Spinatsuka and a hill near Tor Sappar, but these localities were found evacuated on May 13th.

35. On May 10th, I authorised General Sir A. A. Barrett to advance to the vicinity of Dakka in order the more effectively to deter the tribes from hostilities by threatening their rear and preventing their maintenance from Kabul with arms and ammunition. On the 13th May a cavalry force, consisting of the 1st Cavalry Brigade and one regiment of the 10th Cavalry Brigade, which had been concentrated in readiness at Jamrud, advanced through the Khaibar and occupied Dakka without opposition. This force was followed next day by the headquarters and two battalions of the 1st Infantry Brigade, and on the 16th, by the remaining two battalions of the 1st Infantry Brigade, a mountain battery and a company of sappers and miners. A reconnaissance on the morning of this date from Dakka towards Hazarnao disclosed the Afghans in large numbers and our troops were closely followed up during their withdrawal to camp. Fighting took place at close quarters, the British squadrons executing several charges before the enemy was successfully beaten off. The enemy now established himself on the hills above Robat Fort to the west of the camp, but was unable to advance into the plain. On the following morning, Brigadier-General Crocker attacked with the 1st Infantry Brigade, supported by aeroplanes and the fire of horse artillery, mountain, and machine guns. As in the previous actions, the enemy held stoutly to his position along the crest of precipitous hills. During the action, two battalions of the 3rd Infantry Brigade with field and mountain howitzers arrived from Landi Kotal under the command of Major-General A. Skeen, C.M.G., and finally forced the enemy to retreat with heavy loss. The manner in which the attack was carried out reflects great credit on the Commander and troops employed, and the results of the action were far-reaching; for the enemy retreated in great disorder, losing large numbers by desertion, and it was long before he was able to reorganise his units. The value of high explosive shell, and particularly of the 3·7 inch mountain howitzer, in dislodging an enemy from an inaccessible position in mountainous country, was well demonstrated in this action; indeed, these weapons have been of the greatest service throughout the operations.

36. While these operations had been taking place, the state of unrest prevailing in the Peshawar area had given cause for much concern. On the 8th May, Peshawar city was quickly and successfully surrounded by a cordon of troops, and several leaders of the anti-British party, including the Afghan Postmaster, were arrested. It was found necessary to institute martial law and to keep a large body of infantry permanently on duty in the city. Raiding into the Peshawar Cantonment and in the district was at this time very prevalent, and communications up the Khaibar, particularly in the neighbourhood of Ali Masjid, were subjected to constant sniping and attacks by tribesmen. The Khaibar Rifles, in whose hands the guarding of the road through the Pass had at first been left, became unreliable, and after frequent desertions had occurred they were replaced by regular troops, the corps being disbanded. Additional posts were also established in the lower Khaibar, and this, and other measures taken by Major-General Sir C. M. Dobell, K.C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Commanding the 2nd Division, quickly resulted in the security of the communications. On the 15th and 16th May, the 6th Infantry Brigade carried out operations near Ali Masjid to secure the heights south of the Khaibar stream and inflicted heavy casualties on the enemy. By the 19th May the 2nd Division was holding the line from Landi Kotal to Peshawar, with the 1st Division, less two field batteries, concentrated at Dakka and Landi Khana, two of the three Infantry Brigades being at the former place, where the force was temporarily under the command of Major-General Skeen. On May 12th I placed the 16th Division from the Central Reserve at General Sir A. A. Barrett's disposal, and on the 14th I directed him to make preparations for a forward move of four marches from Dakka.

37. In the north, successful operations had been carried out by the Chitral garrison in conjunction with the Chitral Scouts and His Highness the Mehtar's Bodyguard. On the 12th May, the Afghans occupied Arnawai in the Chitral Valley and advanced rapidly up the river. On the 14th the Chitral Scouts drove back the enemy's advanced parties near Kauti. On the 20th, Lieutenant-Colonel F. C. S. Samborne-Palmer, Commanding at Chitral, moved down the Chitral River with a small mobile column, and on the 23rd the column and scouts attacked and drove the enemy from Arnawai, destroying the force opposed to them and capturing four guns. The 11th Rajputs particularly distinguished themselves in this action. The mobile column returned to Drosh on 5th June. During the remainder of this month successful raids into Afghan territory were made by the Chitralis, resulting in the capture of a large quantity of live stock.

38. For some days prior to the 20th May, reports had been received of the presence of Afghan troops on the Mohmand-Afghan border, and on the evening of that day they were reported to have reached Ghalanai in Mohmand country to the west of Shabkadr. A brigade of the 16th Division, with some of the divisional troops of the 2nd Division, under the command of Brigadier-General W. M. Southey, C.M.G., was despatched from Peshawar to Shabkadr and Michni for the defence of that portion of the frontier. The Afghans did not advance, nor did the Mohmand gathering assume large proportions; and after being bombed on two days by aeroplanes the enemy withdrew.

39. The 31st Squadron, Royal Air Force, under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel F. F. Minchin, D.S.O., M.C., Commanding the 52nd Wing, carried out concentrated bombing raids on Jalalabad on the 17th, 20th and 24th May with marked effect; large portions of the military quarter of the town were burnt out, including the Afghan headquarters, and on one occasion a parade of 2,000 Afghan troops was bombed with good results. In the panic which followed these raids the neighbouring tribesmen entered the town and secured large quantities of loot in the shape of arms, ammunition and treasure. On the 24th, Captain Halley, R. A. F., in a Handley-Page machine, performed a notable feat by bombing Kabul; and there is little doubt that this raid was an important factor in producing a desire for peace at the headquarters of the Afghan Government.

40. Meanwhile, preparations for an advance from Dakka were nearing completion, but unofficial overtures, begun on May 15th, for a cessation of hostilities, culminated on May 31st in a formal request from the Amir for the conclusion of an armistice. The Government of India were desirous of avoiding any action which might serve to prejudice the negotiations, and I therefore issued orders that, though preparations for an advance on Jalalabad were to continue without interruption, no further advance was to be made without previous reference to me. The period of inaction which followed was one of great hardship to the troops, for the success of their efforts had led them to expect an early termination of the war, and they were looking forward eagerly to their long delayed leave or demobilisation. The situation was met, however, in that spirit of willing self-sacrifice which we have learnt to expect from the British and Indian Armies, and I desire to express here my appreciation of the high sense of duty they displayed during this period.

41. Turning now to the operations of the force in the Kohat-Kurram area (which, as explained above, formed part of General Sir A. A. Barrett's command), the situation had remained quiet during the first fortnight of May: there had been no unusual raiding from tribal territory and no information was received of any Afghan concentration in Khost. On May 5th, Major-General A. H. Eustace, C. B., D.S.O., Commanding the Kohat area, ordered a column of all arms to proceed from Thal to Parachinar in support of the Kurram Militia. On the 14th, information was received that two Afghan battalions had arrived at Peiwar Kotal, and that there were three battalions with guns at Ali Khel. A detachment of the Kurram Militia, with two guns, was accordingly moved to Peiwar, and four additional battalions and a mountain battery to Kohat. As units became available at Kohat, they were moved up to Thal and Parachinar, and on the 26th the force at the latter place consisted of two battalions, one squadron, and four mountain guns. Having regard to the requirements of the Khaibar line, it was impossible at this time to despatch aeroplanes to the Kohat and Waziristan areas; arrangements were, however, made to despatch a flight to Bannu from which the bombing of Matun in Khost could be undertaken.

42. On the evening of the 24th May information was received at Thal that General Nadir Khan, the Afghan Commander in Khost and ex-Commander-in-Chief of the Afghan army, intended to advance either into the Tochi or the Kurram and it was reported from Spinwam that Afghan troops were moving on that post. Major-General Eustace accordingly proceeded to Thal and ordered one more battalion and two more mountain guns to rail from Kohat to Thal. On the arrival of these units, the garrison of Thal comprised 4 battalions, 4 mountain guns, one squadron, and one company of sappers and miners. On the 27th a considerable force of Afghan troops with a large following of tribesmen advanced on Thal and occupied Thal city and the hills to the south-west of the posts. The enemy's guns and the majority of his regular troops were on the south bank of the Kurram river which, at this season, is liable to sudden floods. The fort and camp were subjected to considerable shelling, two of the guns used being German howitzers of 3·8″ calibre. On the morning of the 28th, General Sir A. A. Barrett ordered the immediate despatch to Kohat by rail from Peshawar of a field battery of the 2nd Division, and a battalion of the 45th Infantry Brigade, to be followed by the remaining units of that brigade under the command of Brigadier-General R. E. H. Dyer. C.B. The headquarters of the 16th Division were also ordered to proceed to Kohat from Lahore, instead of to Peshawar as previously ordered. These troops began to arrive at Kohat on the morning of the 29th, and were followed in quick succession by two additional battalions and the 46th Brigade from Ambala which I had also ordered to Kohat.

By the afternoon of the 30th May, Brigadier-General Dyer had concentrated his force by rail and road at Togh from which place he marched 18 miles towards Thal on the early morning of the 31st. On the 1st June he entered Thal with little opposition. The hills to the south-east were then cleared of the enemy. The following day the operations were continued to the west of Thal but the enemy retreated hurriedly, leaving behind him his camp equipment and a large quantity of cordite ammunition. During the advance of General Dyer's column on Thal, the extreme heat had made the long marches exceedingly arduous and exhausting; but the march discipline and spirit of the men were excellent and the commander and troops deserve great credit for the manner in which the operation was carried out. A flight of aeroplanes based on Thal co-operated throughout, and contributed largely to the enemy's hasty retreat.

43. General Nadir Khan's enterprise was a move which, had it met with a greater measure of success, might have compromised our plan of campaign. The salient of Afghan territory which reaches out between the Tochi and Kurram valleys enabled him to concentrate on the flank of two of our main communications through tribal country. An attack on the Kurram undoubtedly promised more important results, for had Nadir Khan succeeded in raising the Orakzai and Afridi tribes against us the effect would have been felt in our operations in the Khaibar.

44. On the 2nd June the regular troops and Kurram Militia from Parachinar, where Brigadier-General E A. Fagan, C M.G., D.S.O., was in command, attacked the Afghan force near Kharlachi, captured the Afghan post at that place and destroyed six villages The Kurram Militia also carried out several minor operations in which they were invariably successful. Throughout the whole period of the operations the behaviour of this corps has been deserving of the highest praise.

45. As already mentioned, cholera appeared at Hangu in the Kohat area on the 1st June and spread rapidly, appearing a few days later in the Khaibar also. As the transport drivers were chiefly affected, the movement of animal transport up the Khaibar was suspended; all camels from the stages up to Landi Kotal were withdrawn to Nowshera Thana, and did not return to the Khaibar until the end of June. Outbreaks of foot and mouth-disease and glanders also seriously affected the Bullock Corps on the Khaibar line, so that it became necessary for some time to rely almost exclusively on mechanical transport.

46. After the operations in the neighbourhood of Thal, the troops in the Kohat area were reorganized, the 46th, 60th and 65th Infantry Brigades being located at Kohat, Parachinar and Thal respectively. The 16th Divisional Headquarters and the 45th Infantry Brigade were withdrawn to Nowshera, and the 66th Infantry Brigade was formed at Mardan as the third Infantry Brigade of the 16th Division. On the 19th and 20th of June our cavalry at Dakka succeeded in ambushing parties of Mohmands and inflicting on them considerable losses. The Dakka camp was sniped nightly from the left bank of the Kabul river and telegraph lines were constantly cut. Considerable raiding continued in the Peshawar area, and on the night of the 6th to 7th June the village of Badhber was surrounded by a column and several arrests made. A similar operation against Utmanzai village was carried out later in the month, and drives by columns of all arms, including armoured cars, were carried out to clear the Kajuri plain of hostile gangs.

47. At the beginning of July the activities of the Afghan Commander at Asmar near the Chitral border, and the arrival of reinforcements, indicated the probability of renewed Afghan attempts to invade Chitral, notwithstanding the Amir's orders to the contrary. To meet this threat the Officer Commanding, Chitral, made suitable dispositions, and, while retaining his regular troops at Drosh and Chitral, placed a central striking force of Chitral Scouts at Ayun. In the middle of the month Afghan troops occupied certain passes on the border, and an attack down the Bumboret valley was made by a mixed force of Afghan regulars and tribesmen. This was driven back in disorder by the Chitral Scouts, whose behaviour throughout the operations has been excellent. On July the 24th an enemy gathering of about 1,200 was reported to have assembled about six miles south of Ziarat near the Lowari pass with the object of attacking the post at that place. A force of Chitral Scouts, Bodyguard, and Levies delivered a most successful attack which drove the enemy from a series of positions. Heavy rain and sleet during the night completed his discomfiture, and he dispersed with a loss of 60 men in killed alone, including a well-known leader. Towards the end of the month Afghan troops from Faizabad advanced towards the Dorah pass, but no attack was made from this direction.

48. On the 13th of July piqueting troops from Dakka experienced considerable opposition in taking up a position on the hills in the direction of Ghuzgai. The tribesmen were in strength and, offering favourable targets to our gun fire, suffered severely. In spite of the armistice conditions, Afghan officials were everywhere busy endeavouring to incite the tribesmen to rise. This culminated on the 16th July in a large gathering in the Bazar valley, estimated to be 10,000 strong. On the 18th, Ali Masjid was threatened and attacks were made on piquets in the Khaibar, one of which was rushed after stubborn resistance. The following night determined but unsuccessful attacks were made on the piquet line from Ali Masjid to Shagai, and as a result of the losses he had suffered in this fighting the enemy retired into the Bazar valley where he was bombed by aeroplanes and finally dispersed on the 19th. The General Officer Commanding, 2nd Division, brings to special notice the 1st Battalion, Royal Sussex Regiment, for their capture of a ridge to the south of Ali Masjid on the 16th May, and for their defence of the same ridge on this occasion, as well as for consistently good work. On the early morning of the 22nd July a drive was carried out by a force of all arms of the 2nd Division across the Kajuri plain, by which gangs of Afridis harbouring in the plain were driven into the hills. On the 23rd a small action against a tribal gathering west of Dakka resulted in considerable enemy casualties. During the month of July the strength of the Mohmand lashkars at Hazarnao and Busawal varied in strength, but rose at one time to as many as 6,000 men. After a flying bridge across the Kabul river to Lalpura had been established, the sniping of Dakka camp practically ceased.

49. Major-General Skeen had assumed command of the Kobat-Kurram force on the 22nd of June. During July there was continuous sniping on the Peiwar front and parties of enemy, both regular and tribesmen, were constantly infringing the frontier. Occasional raids occurred in the Kurram and Miranzai valleys which were easily dealt with. These included an attack on a convoy near Sadda on the 9th, an attack on Shinawari post on the night of the 21st-22nd, and another on Badama on the 30th. In the Kurram area punitive operations were undertaken during the period 16th to 20th July by a column under Brigadier-General C. O. O. Tanner against the Kabul Khel villages near Shewa and Biland Khel. With a view to undertaking offensive operations against Khost, should the negotiations break down two additional battalions and a pioneer battalion were despatched into the Kohat-Kurram area during July, bringing the number of infantry units to 16. To meet the same eventuality, the field batteries of the 1st Division, which had hitherto not proceeded up the Khaibar, were sent to Dakka, where all the transport necessary for an advance was also concentrated. On the 24th July the Afghan peace delegates arrived at Dakka and left the same day for Rawalpindi. No operations of any importance occurred on the Khaibar line between that date and the 8th of August, when peace was signed.

OPERATIONS OF THE WAZIRISTAN FORCE.

50. In the Waziristan area no movement of troops from their normal stations had taken place before 21st May, though information had been received prior to that date of movements of Afghan troops towards the Upper Tochi and in the direction of Wana, and of a concentration in Khost. Major-General N. G. Woodyatt, C.B., Commanding in Waziristan, had been directed not to despatch troops up the Gomal to Wana or to operate beyond Miranshah in the Upper Tochi valley, as the troops available in the area were considered insufficient for any widely extended operations.

51. Owing to the threatened approach of Afghan regular troops to the Upper Tochi and Wana, the probability of their presence resulting in a general rising of the Mahsuds and Wazirs, and the impossibility of despatching troops to support the militia posts in the Gomal, General Sir A. A. Barrett decided (in view of the uncertain behaviour of the Khaibar Rifles even when closely supported by regular troops) that it would not be possible to trust the Waziristan Militias when left unsupported. He therefore issued orders to Major-General Woodyatt on 21st May that, should Afghan regulars advance nto the vicinity of Wana and be joined by the tribes, Wana and the Gomal posts were to be evacuated, the British officers withdrawing with such men as remained loyal. Similar orders applied to the garrisons in the Upper Tochi.

52. On May 24th, the General Officer Commanding the Bannu Brigade, desiring to reassure the tribes of the Upper Tochi, ordered the movable column which is held permanently in readiness at Dardoni (the new cantonment of Miranshah) to move to Muhammad Khel; but, in consequence of information received that General Nadir Khan in Khost was preparing to move either against Thal or Miranshah, General Sir A. A. Barrett ordered its return to Dardoni, where he considered it would be more suitably placed to meet the threatened attack. On receipt of this order, the General Officer Commanding the Bannu Brigade decided to evacuate the Upper Tochi posts, as in his opinion the withdrawal of the movable column would inevitably be followed by the defection of the militia. On learning of the evacuation of these posts, the Political Agent at Wana decided to evacuate the Southern Waziristan Militia posts as well, as he considered that a general rising of the Mahsuds would be the immediate outcome of events in the Tochi.

53. The withdrawal of these garrisons was an operation of extreme difficulty and danger. The loyal elements of the militia, led by a small but gallant band of British officers who carried their lives in their hands and paid dearly for their devotion, made their way by forced marches to Murtaza and into Zhob. The route was infested by tribesmen who clung to the rear of the party and made it impossible to give the men a rest on the way. Desertions to the enemy were numerous. It was not till the arrival of the party at Moghalkot, forty miles from Wana, that it was possible to call a halt, and by this time the men were utterly exhausted by heat, thirst, and their continued exertions. Up to this point casualties had been comparatively few but when issuing from Moghalkot in an attempt to reach Mir Ali Khel, the party was heavily attacked and lost four British officers killed and two wounded out of a total of eight. Marching continuously for a further twenty-four hours, the survivors reached Fort Sandeman in the early morning of the 31st. Regarded merely as a feat of endurance, the withdrawal of this party was, of itself, a fine achievement; but taking into consideration the almost insurmountable difficulties which beset them on the road and the dangers through which they emerged, the exploit stands out as one of the finest recorded in the history of the Indian frontier. The success of the operation was due in large measure to the personality of Major G. H. Russell, 126th Baluchistan Infantry, who conducted the withdrawal with remarkable skill, courage and endurance, and set a fine example to those under him. The steadfast fortitude of these men in circumstances before which most would have quailed, is a stirring example of the height to which the devotion of the British officer can rise.

54. On May 26th, I issued orders for the move of headquarters and two battalions of the 43rd Infantry Brigade and a mountain battery to Bannu. The troops of the Derajat Brigade were ordered to concentrate at Murtaza, where a squadron of cavalry successfully engaged a body of Mahsuds on the 30th. On May 27th, Major-General S. H. Climo, C.B., D.S.O., assumed command of the Waziristan Force (Major-General Woodyatt having been transferred to the command of the 4th Division), and on June 1st, the force was separated from General Sir A. A. Barrett's command and came directly under my orders. The situation on this date was briefly as follows:—

55. (a) Bannu Area.—Communication by road between Bannu and Dardoni, which had been interrupted since 26th May, was not yet restored. A column under Brigadier-General J. G. Clarke, C.M.G., Commanding the 43rd Infantry Brigade, was assembled at Bannu to move up the Tochi. There were persistent reports of the presence of Afghan troops in the Upper Tochi and near Pai Makhmad, 8 miles north-west of Miranshah, and strong lashkars of Wazirs and Mahsuds, assisted by Daurs from the Upper Tochi, were reported to be in the neighbourhood of Miranshah and to be threatening Idak. Spinwam had been occupied by Afghan detachments after its evacuation by the militia, and the Bannu Movable Column had been moved out to Kurram Garhi to watch the approaches to Bannu from the north and north-west. On the 1st June, reliable information was received that the Afghan detachments had withdrawn and the Bannu Movable Column was accordingly recalled to Bannu.

(b) Derajat.—Consequent on the evacuation of the Gomal militia posts and the considerable quantity of booty which had fallen into the hands of the Wazirs, the Mahsuds had become very restless, and thinking probably that it was our intention to evacuate Jandola, had assembled in large numbers around that place. A force under Brigadier-General P. J. Miles, C.B., had begun to assemble at Khirgi on the 29th May when it became known that communication with Jandola was interrupted. Other posts had also been threatened by Mahsud and Sheranni lashkars, notably Murtaza, Gomal, Manjhi and Zarkani, and many urgent demands for military assistance for posts held by frontier constabulary were received from the civil authorities.

56. There were therefore two problems which demanded immediate solution :—

(a) The opening up of the Tochi from Saidgi to Miranshah and the re-establishment of our posts evacuated by the North Waziristan Milita.

(b) The reinforcing of Jandola.

Major-General Climo decided to deal with the Tochi first, as with the troops at his disposal, he did not consider that both operations could be carried out simultaneously in view of a possible repetition of an Afghan concentration at Spinwam or in the Lower Tochi, of a Mahsud incursion into British territory from the Khaisora and Shaktu direction, and of the possibility of encountering strong opposition in the Shinki and Hinnis Tangi defiles. The troops available in Bannu for the first operation were three squadrons of cavalry, one section of Indian mountain artillery, one section of sappers and miners, two battalions of Indian infantry, and details of two other battalions which were at Dardoni. Major-General Climo therefore decided to await the arrival of the two battalions of the 43rd Infantry Brigade which were already en route for Bannu. Meanwhile, he strengthened the garrison at Saidgi (which was held by the North Waziristan Militia) with a detachment of Indian infantry.

57. On the 1st June, as considerable lashkars were found in occupation of the hills to the south and west of Miranshah, the Dardoni Movable Column moved out and fought a successful action. The enemy was put to flight with a loss of about 90; and certain towers, from which he had been sniping Miranshah post, were destroyed. On the 2nd June, the Tochi Column, under Brigadier-General J. G. Clarke, moved from Bannu to Saidgi without incident. On the 3rd it got through to Idak, accompanied by a large convoy, without any serious opposition, and on the 4th it opened up communication with Dardoni.

58. Punitive measures against the lower Daurs were then undertaken by columns operating from Dardoni under the orders of Brigadier-General F. G. Lucas, C.B., D.S.O. These operations were to some extent limited by the necessity of keeping the troops ready to concentrate rapidly for co-operation with the Kohat Kurram Force, but the villages of Spalga, Anghar, and Tughri were burnt, and fines were inflicted on others which had not been so deeply implicated in the looting of the Tochi posts. It is probable that, had there been any immediate military object in doing so, it would have been possible at this stage to have re-occupied the Upper Tochi posts with little opposition, as the tribes were thoroughly frightened.

59. Meanwhile the situation in the Derajat had not improved. A number of posts, including Manjhi, Gomal, Luni, and Zarkani, held by Frontier Constabulary, were seriously threatened and communication with Jandola was cut. Kulachi and Draband also reported lashkars of Sherannis and Wazirs in their vicinity. A force despatched to the relief of Gomal post succeeded, however, in evacuating the garrison, and Draband and Kulachi were occupied by mixed detachments on the night of 1st-2nd June. On the 3rd June a lashkar of about 400 was driven into the hills with a loss of 30 men, and on the same day

Manjhi post was reinforced by a column from Tank after some fighting. On the 4th, a lashkar of 500 Mahsuds which was threatening Girni post was successfully dealt with and the garrison of the post reinforced. Jandola, though the water supply had been cut and the post was surrounded by the enemy, had not been seriously assaulted. The garrison had supplies up to the 24th June and water storage for 15 days. Wholesale desertions had occurred from the Frontier Constabulary at Domandi, Moghalkot, Drazinda and Luni. Chaudhwan was attacked on the night 4th-5th June and partially looted by about 200 Sherannis, and Bigwam Shumala near Paharpur was raided by a gang of Mahsuds.

60. With the arrival of three Indian infantry battalions from the Tochi, Major-General Climo ordered a column to march to Jandola on the 9th June to clear up the situation. No opposition was met with on the march, though the tribesmen attempted to prevent the restoration of the water supply after the column had reached its destination. After re-victualling the post and changing the garrison, the column returned to Khirgi on the 11th June.

61. About the 9th June reports were received and were subsequently confirmed that, in spite of the terms of the armistice, an Afghan force of about 300 men with 2 guns had reached Wana. This detachment appears to have been given a purely passive rôle and to have confined its activities mainly to anti-British propaganda amongst the tribes.

62. On the 11th June, on receipt of reliable information that the village of Drazinda was serving the purpose of a supply depôt for the various raiding gangs in the vicinity, an air raid was carried out against it and a number of bombs dropped. The effect of this raid was considerable and, for a time the activities of the tribesmen showed a marked decrease. On the 13th June, Raghza village was destroyed for complicity in attacks on Gomal and Manjhi posts, and a large amount of fodder removed to Murtaza. The following day Parwara, in the Sheranni country, was bombed. On the 18th June, arrangements were made for the re-establishment of the Luni and Zarkani posts with militia garrisons. These two posts had been partially destroyed by the tribesmen, but were repaired and occupied on the 28th June with the object of checking the recrudescence of cattle stealing in the neighbourhood and of enabling work to be resumed on the Gomal river head-works at Kotazam and Diwan Shah. On the 25th June, four squadrons of cavalry and a section of mountain artillery, with 2 aeroplanes co-operating, undertook punitive operations against Drazinda, on supplies from which the Sheranni and Wazir gangs of raiders were dependent. The village was destroyed and over 500 head of cattle captured.

63. Early in July, Major-General Climo concentrated a small force of all arms at Dardoni with the object of co-operating with the Kohat-Kurram force in an advance into Khost, should the peace negotiations fall through. The concentration of this force appears to have been interpreted by the tribes as preparatory to an advance into the Upper Tôchi, and on the 7th July a lashkar, reported at over 1,200 Mahsuds and Wazirs, was seen entrenching and sangaring a position at Boya. Next day a half hearted attack was made on the North Waziristan Militia piquets as they moved out from Isha, and on the 14th a cleverly organised attack on the aerodrome at Bannu was carried out by a band of 60 or 70 Shabi Khel Mahsuds. The aerodrome, which is situated about five miles out of Bannu on the Tochi road, was guarded by a platoon of Indian infantry. The enemy made a determined attempt to break into the hangar but were counter-attacked and driven off with loss. No damage was done to the machines.

64. On the 24th July, consequent upon the capture o one of our convoys at Kapip in Zhob, Major-General Climo concentrated at Murtaza a force of one squadron of cavalry, one section of mountain artillery, and one and a half battalions of Indian infantry, his intention being to give the impression that preparations were on foot for an advance up the Gomal, and thereby to draw the Wazir lashkars back to oppose him. The ruse was completely successful.

65. During the latter half of July, Vihowa was attacked several times by Wazirs; on the 18th July they succeeded in getting away with some loot, but otherwise did no important damage.

66. Several minor enterprises were carried out by the tribesmen against our piquets in the Tochi between 28th July and the 8th August. On the 29th July a North Waziristan Militia piquet at Khajuri was ambushed by about 70 Mahsuds; on the 3rd August piquets south of the road between Isha and Miranshah were engaged all day with tribal lashkars and suffered some casualties; on the 8th August our troops moving out to piquet the road between Saidgi and Shinki were ambushed by 200 Abdulai Mahsuds and suffered somewhat heavily. These incidents can be attributed to lack of experience in frontier warfare, and a failure to recognise the necessity for constant vigilance when dealing with expert enemies like the Mahsuds and Wazirs.

67. Although no major operations were carried out by the Waziristan Force during the period under review, there were few days on which troops on some part of this wide front were not engaged. The elusiveness of the enemy with whom they had to deal necessitated constant readiness and in many cases long and rapid marches. Escort duties were heavy; piqueting was continuous; and the troops were subjected to frequent sniping by night. The heat during June and July was abnormal even for that part of the frontier. I cannot speak too highly of the cheerful manner in which all hardships were borne. Whenever the tribesmen were met, all ranks shewed that desire to get to close quarters and use their bayonets which is the true spirit of the offensive; and this is especially gratifying in troops who for the most part were young and without previous war experience. Major-General Climo brings to notice the following units as especially deserving of mention :—

27th Light Cavalry.

31st Duke of Connaught's Own Lancers.

41st Dogras.

55th Coke's Rifles (Frontier Force).

2-2nd King Edward's Own Gurkha Rifles (The Sirmoor Rifles).

OPERATIONS OF THE BALUCHISTAN FORCE.

68. When mobilization was ordered, the troops at the disposal of the General Officer Commanding the Baluchistan Force consisted of :—

(a) the 4th Division (of which the two field batteries were located in their peace station at Hyderabad, Sind; one British battalion was temporarily employed at Lahore in connection with disturbances in the Punjab; and two Indian battalions were on detached duty at Chaman and Peshin respectively);

(b) the 12th Mounted Brigade;

(c) two Indian battalions and one regiment of Indian cavalry, and the Zhob Militia, in Zhob and Loralai;

(d) a force of two squadrons, two companies of sappers and miners and three battalions, together with about 1,500 levies, allotted as line of communication defence troops on the Nushki extension railway, and the 650 miles of road between railhead and Meshed.

Only two aeroplanes were immediately available on mobilization, as the bulk of No. 114 Squadron was employed in connection with internal disturbances.

69. At the outbreak of war the enemy forces in southern and western Afghanistan were estimated at 16 battalions (of which one formed the garrison of Fort Spin Baldak), 11 batteries of artillery and 5 regiments of cavalry. The number of tribesmen which it was estimated could co-operate with these regular troops amounted to about 40,000 men.

70. On May 8th Lieutenant-General R. Wapshare, C.B., C.S.I., assumed command of the Baluchistan Force in addition to the command of 4th Division; on the 28th he handed over command of the latter to Major-General N. G. Woodyatt, C.B., transferred from Waziristan. Lieutenant-General Wapshare was informed that the policy of the Government of India in regard to the Baluchistan area was to show a bold front and, to carry out this policy, I authorised him to make any reconnaissances which might be necessary. There was no indication at this time of any hostile force moving on Chaman, and the nearest enemy troops were these garrisoning Fort Spin Baldak. Reports were soon received, however, of large gatherings of Afghan troops at Wazikhwa on the Zhob border. These troops had arrived from Ghazni and Kabul, and their probable intention was to overawe the Ghilzais and force them and other tribes to join in the Jehad with the object of attacking the Fort Sandeman area, or of invading the upper Zhob valley. The Achakzais, who live half in Afghan and half in British territory, were also becoming restless.

71. Lieutenant-General Wapshare considered that it would be strategically unsound to detach a force to reinforce the Zhob at this juncture, and that his best plan of action would be to take the offensive and attack Fort Baldak. The capture of Fort Baldak would have the immediate effect of diverting the attention of the troops threatening the Zhob, and a successful offensive from Chaman would have a great moral effect on the tribesmen, more especially on the Achakzais. On May 5th I authorised Lieutenant-General Wapshare to attack and destroy at his discretion any Afghan force which might advance to Spin Baldak, and directed that the fort should, if captured, be razed to the ground. Owing to shortage of rolling-stock, which delayed the arrival of the divisional howitzer battery from Hyderabad, the attack on the fort was postponed till the 27th. The troops employed consisted of the 4th Division (less 10th Infantry Brigade), assisted by some units of the 12th Mounted Brigade. To ensure secrecy, no preliminary reconnaissance was made by the cavalry, but the necessity of this was obviated to a great extent by the simplicity of the terrain; reconnaissances of the fort had also been carried out daily from the air. The attack involved considerable preliminary preparation. A large number of light scaling ladders were issued to the assaulting columns, as also were rafts for use in the event of the ditch being found to have been filled in. A train of water-kegs on camels was also organized, as the water supply of Fort Baldak was derived from outside sources 12 miles distant and under the control of the enemy.

72. In the early morning of May 27th, the cavalry moved forward in two columns with the object of skirting both sides of the fort, forming a cordon in rear astride the two roads leading to Kandahar, and thus making the escape of the garrison impossible. A white flag was then sent from Chaman to demand the surrender of the fort, and, failing acceptance, to inform the Commander that if there were any women in the fort they could be sent out with an escort of twelve men under safe conduct. The white flag was fired on, and Lieutenant-General Wapshare therefore ordered the attack to proceed.

73. After a bombardment lasting two and a half hours, the artillery had reduced the towers of the fort to a crumbling condition, and the parapet had been breached in several places. While this bombardment was in progress, about two hundred of the enemy broke out of the fort and made for the hills to the north. They were caught under heavy rifle and machine gun fire, and also attacked by the cavalry; it is improbable that more than thirty of the party reached the hills. The fort was assaulted by the 1-22nd Punjabis, whose leading company entered the main gate, and by good use of their Lewis guns quickly secured the first foothold. The 4th Gurkha Rifles simultaneously stormed the south-east face by means of scaling ladders, and in a few minutes the fort was in our hands. The Duke of Wellington's Regiment captured the ridge and towers in a most gallant style, gaining their objectives a few minutes before the main defences had been scaled. The only organized resistance now remaining was from a sangar which held up the advance of the Royal West Kent Regiment. The Duke of Wellington's Regiment worked round in rear of the sangar with bombs, and not a single man escaped from it.

74. The enemy had shown the greatest bravery throughout the operation, and when the assaulting columns reached their objectives the survivors continued a hand to hand fight. The mopping up parties had to clear the numerous cellars with bombs and bayonets. Out of the garrison of about 600 men, 169 were taken prisoners, about 30 escaped, and the remainder were either killed or buried in the ruins. Daud Shah, the Commander, was among those who escaped, but he was severely wounded.

75. The fall of Fort Baldak had the desired effect of relieving the situation in Zhob, but the evacuation of the Tochi and the retirement of the remnants of the Wana garrison through Zhob produced an atmosphere of unrest among the tribesmen in the Fort Sandeman area. The Zhob Militia were employed to help the Wana garrison into Mir Ali Khel by piqueting a portion of the route between that place and Moghalkot, but the loss of a British officer killed was the signal for wholesale desertions, and only about one-sixth of the corps could be counted on during the remainder of the operations. A mobile column was accordingly formed in Zhob, under the command of Brigadier-General de C. O'Grady, C.I E., Commanding the 10th Infantry Brigade. While this column was concentrating, a detachment of 200 Gurkhas, proceeding as a reinforcement to Fort Sandeman and accompanied by a small detachment of Zhob Militia Cavalry, was attacked in the vicinity of Fort Sandeman and suffered heavy losses before reaching its destination. Communication with Fort Sandeman was interrupted and for a time attacks on the various posts on the Loralai-Fort Sandeman road were of frequent occurrence. Brigadier-General O'Grady reached Kapip, near Fort Sandeman, on the 20th June and remained in the area for some time carrying out punitive measures.

76. In the meantime the situation on the Chaman front had developed rapidly. Enemy forces amounting to about eight battalions, four regiments of cavalry, twenty-six guns, and twenty machine guns under the command of General Abdul Qudus, had concentrated in the Takht and Murgha-Chaman areas, with advanced detachments at Tsagai springs and Sheroba. On our side, a strong line of defence, covering a length of twelve miles and consisting of a series of lunettes at intervals of 600 yards, had been completed between New Chaman and Bogra water-works; and, in addition to this, New Chaman and the mobilization camp there were protected by a separate encirclement of strong points and wire fencing.

77. In dealing with the situation thus created, Lieutenant-General Wapshare was faced with a problem of considerable difficulty. Within striking distance of his main force at Chaman, and concentrated within a comparatively small area, lay the bulk of the Afghan southern army. Each group of Afghan regulars had its following of armed tribesmen, who, though lacking cohesion and organization, were fired by the spirit of Jehad and threatened to become formidable adversaries under the elation of success. In ordinary circumstances, Lieutenant-General Wapshare's course of action would have been clear, viz., to attack and destroy the force opposed to him; but the political situation precluded him from adopting this obvious solution. Moreover, the difficulty of his position was aggravated by anxiety in regard to the Zhob, for Afghan agents, whether by accident or design, had succeeded in arousing the hostility of the tribes all along the Baluchistan border and in creating a situation in Zhob, which at one time threatened to develop into general insurrection. Great political importance attached to the maintenance of the line stretching from Peshin, through Hindu Bagh, Kila Saifulla, Gwal Haiderzai and Murgha Kibzai, to Musa Khel; for on this depended our ability to prevent the Afghan and British border tribes from penetrating the rich districts of Loralai and Sibi and from gaining contact with the Marris, a tribe which, had they risen, would have added seriously to our embarrassments by harassing our communications with India. He was thus faced with two conflicting considerations, viz., to maintain his striking force at Chaman at sufficient strength to attack and disperse the Afghan army opposed to him, should the peace negotiations break down; or, alternatively, to accept the risk of reducing his striking force, with the object of restoring and maintaning order in Zhob. It appeared to me clear that the strong inducement to dissipate our strength should be resisted as the governing factor in the situation was our ability to strike hard and quickly at such Afghan forces as lay within reach. I was of opinion that a heavy blow dealt at Abdul Qudus's force on the Chaman front would react quickly along the Baluchistan border, and produce the desired solution to the problem in Zhob. I, therefore, directed Lieutenant-General Wapshare to maintain his striking force at Chaman at full strength and with the highest possible degree of mobility.

78. Lieutenant-General Wapshare accordingly recalled Brigadier-General O'Grady from Zhob, together with as many troops as could be spared from that area. I had been able to despatch a reinforcement of three battalions and one mountain battery to the Baluchistan area, and with these Lieutenant-General Wapshare was able to complete the concentration of the 4th Division at Chaman and secure the Loralai-Fort Sandeman road for the time being. In spite of the terms of the armistice, the enemy continued to encroach near the British border, and sniping was of daily occurrence. To complete his preparations to meet a possible breakdown of the negotiations, Lieutenant-General Wapshare moved the 10th Infantry Brigade, less two battalions but strengthened by the addition of a mountain battery and a detachment of cavalry, to the top of the Bogra pass, in order to deny the Toba plateau to the enemy as well as to secure the Bogra water-supply and his own railway communications.

79. Numerous reliable reports were received about this time of hostile activity on the border north of Hindu Bagh, which appeared to indicate that the enemy intended to make a determined advance into the upper Zhob. The situation at Fort Sandeman was also disquieting. The withdrawal of Brigadier-General O'Grady's force had been followed by a concentration of Wazirs and Mahsuds who were joined by disaffected parties of Mando Khel and Sheranni tribesmen. A wireless party and a section of mountain guns marching from Babar to Fort Sandeman under escort of two companies of Gurkha Rifles and a small detachment of Zhob Milita were attacked at Kapip on July the 6th by about 300 Wazirs and local tribesmen who held sangared positions across the road. The enemy resisted the advance of our column with great determination, but were eventually driven off, leaving 37 dead including their leader. On July the 14th an unsuccessful attack on Lakaband was followed immediately by an attack on a convoy moving to Fort Sandeman. An escort, consisting of a section of mountain guns, 225 men of the 1st Gurkha Rifles and 75 Zhob Militia, was sent from Fort Sandeman to Babar in relief of the escort which had accompanied the convoy from Lakaband, but was itself attacked on the return journey near Kapip by a force of Wazirs and Sherannis estimated at between 1,200 and 2,000 men, who had collected from a great distance and with great secrecy. A gallant attempt was made to clear the tribes on either side of the road, but this was only partially successful, and several commanding points remained in the hands of the enemy. From these points he poured a heavy fire into the column, inflicting numerous casualties on men and animals; and, while holding up the advance of the column, repeatedly attacked the flanks and rear guard. The troops resisted with great bravery, but they were altogether outnumbered, and at nightfall the tribesmen rushed the convoy in overwhelming strength. Fierce hand to hand fighting ensued in which the escort was gradually overpowered and swept away, with the loss of the two mountain guns and practically the whole of the transport. The remnants made their way to Fort Sandeman in small parties.

80. This incident had the inevitable result of raising the tribesmen's morale, and the local situation was seriously aggravated. It became imperative to organize another mobile column in the Zhob, but, in order to do so, Lieutenant-General Wapshare was faced with great difficulties in regard to transport, for his railhead at Harnai was 170 miles from Fort Sandeman and the road traversed a difficult and mountainous country. Hired transport refused to move beyond Loralai under any circumstances. He was, therefore, compelled to transfer one of his camel transport corps from Chaman to the Zhob, and this reduced his radius of action against the Afghan forces concentrated against him on the Chaman front. The concentration of the column was also much delayed by heavy rains which breached the road and railway, and it was not ready to move from its base at Murgha till August 12th, by which date reports indicated that the Wazir and Mahsud lashkars were dispersing to their homes. The main objective of the column, therefore, became the re-rationing of Fort Sandeman and the re-establishing of the road posts.

81. In the meantime news had been received that a lashkar of 500 men, mainly Zhob Militia deserters and, therefore, well-armed, had occupied Murgha Fakirzai and the hills immediately north of Hindu Bagh. In attempting to deal with these, the Hindu Bagh garrison had suffered appreciable loss. Reinforcements, including an armoured motor battery, were accordingly sent to Hindu Bagh. The enemy attempted to intercept the battery which was acting as escort to a convoy, but were quickly driven off after heavy losses had been inflicted on them.

82. No important operations occurred on the Nushki extension railway or the line of communication in East Persia. The line was well organized and the troops soundly disposed. Armoured trains were also improvised and proved a great deterrent to raiders. A small column was concentrated in Seistan, consisting of 4 mountain guns, an infantry battalion, and 300 mounted levies, but no serious raid took place.

CONCLUSION.

83. It now only remains for me to express my appreciation of the manner in which commanders, staffs, troops and administrative services faced and overcame the difficulties of this campaign. The enemy rarely gave the troops an opportunity of meeting him in open fight, but when he did so, our superior discipline, training and leadership enabled us to overcome opposition with much ease. I have already referred to the fine military spirit in which the troops accepted the burden of this campaign; this spirit was fully maintained in the field, and all ranks, British and Indian, showed themselves to be animated by that determination to close with the enemy which is the surest guarantee of success. No greater testimony of this spirit could be adduced than the cheerfulness with which all ranks endured the trying climatic conditions prevailing and the discomforts inevitable in the opening stages of a campaign. The lot of the troops and administrative personnel detailed to posts on the lines of communication was a particularly hard one, for communications with the frontier pass through a belt of country possessing a climate of exceptional severity and scanty facilities for providing comfort or recreation. Nevertheless, this spirit of cheerfulness was nowhere more in evidence than among these posts.

84. The work of the Royal Air Force under the direction of Brigadier-General N. D. K. McEwen, C.M.G., D.S.O., was carried out under peculiarly difficult and dangerous conditions. The machines could only be used during the heat of the day at considerable risk, but pilots and observers unhesitatingly answered every call made upon them and rendered invaluable service throughout. The same may be said of the workshop personnel who laboured untiringly under most trying climatic conditions.

85. The units of the Machine Gun Corps were used for the first time in frontier operations during this campaign, and have amply proved their value. The work of the Armoured Motor Batteries has emphasized the great utility of this weapon in frontier fighting.

86. The Signal Service has performed its duties to my entire satisfaction. In spite of many difficulties of ground and constant interruption by the enemy, communications have been quickly established and efficiently maintained. The service has been handicapped by the lack of British reinforcements to replace evacuations, and it is greatly to the credit of the officers and men who remained at duty that so high a standard of efficiency was maintained. I am also much indebted to the Indian Postal and Telegraph Departments for their assistance and for the readiness which they have met demands on their already strained resources.

87. The duties of the Engineer and Works Services have been particularly onerous. The construction, upkeep or repair of roads, railways, bridges, and defences; the provision of barracks, camps and hospitals, water supplies, ice factories, and electric installations; the erection of a ropeway through the Khaibar; these and various other projects have necessitated the employment of a large number of sapper and miner units, field and railway companies, pioneer battalions and labour units. I desire to express my high appreciation of the devotion which have characterised the work of these units and which has contributed so largely to the comfort and welfare of the troops.

88. As already stated, I have had every reason to be satisfied with the work of the Veterinary, Remounts, Ordnance, Supply and Transport Services, the latter of whom were the chief sufferers during the cholera outbreak. The energy and promptness displayed in dealing with this outbreak reflects the greatest credit on the Medical Service, whose work throughout has been deserving of the highest praise. I desire also to express the gratitude of the army to the Nursing Sisters whose devotion under most trying conditions has done much to mitigate the suffering of patients in hospitals. The spiritual welfare of the troops has been in capable hands.

89. My special thanks are due to the Red Cross Association, under the direction of their Commissioner the Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey, C.S.I., C.I.E., for their immediate and continued ministrations to the comfort not only of those in hospital, but wherever help was needed; to the Comforts for the Troops Fund, who brought the whole of their admirable organisation into play to ameliorate the conditions under which the troops were serving; and to the number of devoted ladies and gentlemen who contributed with unremitting zeal to the welfare of the troops. The work of the Y. M. C. A. was also of great value.

I take this opportunity also of tendering my thanks for the services rendered by the Railway Administration throughout India, and especially to the North-Western Railway for the admirable manner in which they have met the heavy calls made upon them and for the unremitting energy which made it possible to concentrate and maintain so large a force. The success of the arrangements for concentration was due in large measure to the cordial co-operation of the Railway Board.

90. The advice and assistance of the Hon'ble Sir A. H. Grant, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., and the Hon'ble Mr. Denys Bray, C.I.E., who successively held the appointment of Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department during the period of the operations, of the Hon'ble Sir George Roos-Keppel, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., late Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province, and of the Hon'ble Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs, C.S.I., C.I.E., late Agent to the Governor-General in Baluchistan, have been of the greatest value throughout. I am also much indebted to the political officers attached to the headquarters of the forces in the field.

91. I desire also to express my gratitude and appreciation of the assistance which the Ruling Princes and Chiefs have generally rendered in this emergency. It will be remembered that before the close of the Great War, the Alwar and Bharatpur Darbars offered their Imperial Service Troops for incorporation in the Indian Army, and that five other Darbars, namely, Bikanir, Dholpur, Jodhpur, Kolhapur and Patiala, agreed to the formation in their States of new battalions of the Indian Army. The units thus incorporated in the Indian Army were retransferred to the Darbars on the conclusion of the Great War and the newly raised regiments were disbanded; but on the outbreak of war on the frontier, every Darbar possessing Imperial Service Troops once more placed them at the disposal of the Government of India, notwithstanding that many of these units had only just returned from active service overseas. Contingents of cavalry, infantry, artillery, sappers and miners and transport from nineteen States were employed either with the Field Army or on garrison duty. Many offers of personal services were also received, and appointments on the staff in the field were held by the Rulers of Patiala, Dholpur, Rutlam, and Baria, the two brothers of His Highness the Maharaja of Patiala and the two sons of the Nawab of Loharu. Many offers of motor cars, camels and money were also received and accepted.

92. I further wish to express my grateful thanks to the Nepal Government for their generous assistance and co-operation. In spite of serious climatic difficulties His Excellency the Prime Minister of Nepal again sent to our aid a contingent of Nepalese troops accompanied by two generals of. the Nepalese army. The two battalions forming the contingent were a welcome addition to our resources.

93. Finally, I desire to express my high appreciation of the services rendered by the three Force Commanders.

General Sir A. A. Barrett commanded the North-West Frontier Force with the military skill and instinct associated with his name. His profound experience of frontier warfare and his sagacious advice were at all times of the greatest value to Army Headquarters.

Lieutenant-General R. Wapshare, Commanding the Baluchistan Force, gave evidence of his military qualities by the manner in which the attack on Spin Baldak was executed. The small number of casualties sustained is a testimony to the thoroughness of his preliminary arrangements. His high powers of organisation were displayed in the measures taken to ensure the health and well-being of those under his command.

Major-General S. H. Climo, Commanding the Waziristan Force, dealt with the many difficult situations which arose within his area with marked ability, and has shown himself as skilful in the handling of troops as in ordering the administrative arrangements necessary for their comfort.

94. I attach a list of those whose services have been of particular value and whose assistance and work I desire to bring specially to notice.

NOTE.—The list of mentions referred to in para. 94 of the despatch is not yet ready for publication.

ARMY DEPARTMENT.

Delhi, the 18th March 1920.

SPECIAL AND MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 487.—The Governor-General in Council desires to place on record the names of British and Indian Officers of the Indian Army and Royal Indian Marine and members of the civil and other Government services in India, who have served as officers in His Majesty's Forces and who have died in the Great War.

They went forth from India to fight in divers lands the battles of the King-Emperor and of his rightful cause. They gladly laid down their lives for this noble purpose. But their names shall endure. For in Victory they died that others might live and that justice might prevail in the world, sacrificing themselves for the loyalty that was in them and for their love toward suffering mankind. Through such heroes the world had peace; and on them too be peace.

A. H. BINGLEY, Major-General,
Secretary to the Government of India.
